German V-2 Rocket Soars to New Record of 111 Miles into Heavens

White Sands, N.M., Dec. 18 — (AP)— A German V-2 rocket, trailing a long string of white fire, soared comet-like to a record 111 miles into the heavens last night, but its man-made meteorites were so puny they eluded most eyes.

A scientific evaluation of the meteorites experiment awaits development of film from cameras, some 33 of which were trained on the heavens over this southern New Mexico ordnance proving ground.

The rocket shoot itself was termed the best so far by Lt.-Col. Harold R. Turner, White Sands commandant.

Not only did the 14-ton missile crack the July 30 altitude record of 104 miles, but also it established a speed record of 5,350 feet a second — more than a mile a second and about five times the speed of sound.

The rocket engines' white hot blast lasted for 68 seconds. For 44 more seconds, the cargon rudder fins heated by the exhaust blast, glowed in the sky. The rocket landed 27 miles north of the launching platform.

Six artificial meteorites, ejected at 10-second intervals, were shot into space during the rocket's flight. They were fired two at a time, 70, 80 and 90 seconds after the missle was launched.

Dr. Fritz Zwicky of the California Institute of Technology, who conceived the idea of creating artificial meteorites, said the "key to the inter-planetary travel" may be found in the tests.

Standard army rifle grenades were used to fire the meteorites—small pieces of molten metal—from the rocket. The grenades were ejected by a bazook-like device. Four and one-half seconds after they left the rocket an explosive in the warhead of the grenade will be set off by time fuse, hurling the metal meteorites into space.

Dr. L. J. Paddison, a pioneer in the development of the proximity fuse, said the explosive used in the grenade warhead propelled the meteorites at a velocity "in the lower range of the speed of real meteorites." He would not estimate the actual speed but said meteorites travel at 30,000 to 100,000 feet per second.

FIVE ARE HANGED ON TWIN GALLOWS AT LETHBRIDGE

Three German Prisoners Attempted to Beat Hangman's Noose In Suicide Bid

Lethbridge, Alta., Dec. 18—(CP)—Four German prisoners of war and a Canadian Army veteran were hanged early today on twin gallows in Lethbridge jail a few hours after three of the Germans attempted to beat the hangman's noose in an unsuccessful suicide bid. None of the five would make any final statement or request before the traps were sprung.

The German prisoners were hanged for the murder of a fellow-prisoner in a Canadian internment camp while the Canadian, Donald Sherman Staley, 29, paid with his life for the sex slaying of six-year-old Donnie Goss in Calgary last July 24.

Staff Sgt.-Maj. Bruno Percenowski, 34, and Sgt.-Maj. Heinrich Busch, 29, were first to face the executioner. The traps were sprung on them at ten minutes after midnight, M.S.T. (2.10 a.m., E.S.T.)

Sgt. -Maj. Willis Meuller, 31 and Sgt. Walter Wolf, 29, followed them to the gallows 32 minutes later.

Staley, a native of Bracebridge, Ont., was hanged at 1.05 a.m., M.S.T. (3.05 a.m. E.S.T.)

Three Slash Wrists

Shortly before the procession to the scaffolds started, prison officials disclosed that Percenowski, Mueller and Busch tried unsuccessfully to end their own lives yesterday. The men, convicted along with Wolf for the murder of Cpl. Karl Lehmann in the Medicine Hat prisoner-of-war camp Sept. 10, 1944, slashed their wrists and arms with pieces of razor blades.

Prison officials said they believed the blades were smuggled into the jail concealed in books borrowed by the men from the prisoner-of-war camp here.

But the attempt was discovered almost immediately by alert guards.

All three lost a considerable amount of blood, officials said.

The Germans, who lynched Lehmann after a "kangaroo court" had decided the victim was the leader of a Communist plot to overthrow their Nazi camp leadership, continued to ignore Staley to the end.

They contemptuously refused to speak or even to recognize his presence, claiming he was a common criminal. They maintained that they had simply executed a military order in "removing" Lehmann.

Only Wolf, a former Afrika Korps infantryman, failed to take part in the suicide bid. He told officials "I didn't want to die that way."

Earlier all four men had asked to be shot.

Percenowski and Wolf were the only married men of the quartet. The former is survived by a wife and daughter living in Austria and the latter by a wife living near Essen, Germany. Mueller, a Luftwaffe mechanic and Busch, a pilot, were single.

All five executed men will be buried in a common grave dug in the jail yard. The bodies will be placed in individual coffins. Early today no one had come forward to claim the bodies from jail officials.

Government, Opposition In British Commons Protest Russ Charges

London, Dec. 18 — (CP)—Government and opposition members of parliament joined forces last night in the House of Commons to protest Russian charges that a convoy of war supplies to Archangel was mishandled by British authorities in July, 1942.

The Admiralty, in a statement read by its financial secretary, John Dugdale, denied the criticisms of the convoy handling which recently appeared in the Soviet navy newspaper, Red Fleet.

"This account appears to impugn not merely the naval tactics of the convoy but also the courage of the British and American seamen who took part in it," Dugdale said.

Winston Churchill, opposition leader and wartime Prime Minister, called attention to "the number of men who lost their hands and feet through frostbite and are in frightful condition of deprivation for the rest of their lives."

The Red Fleet story charged that the Admiralty did not take sufficient pains in organizing the 37-ship convoy. Only 11 of the ships reached their destination. It also charged that crew members of American transports left their ships "at first danger" of a German raid.

CUTTER OVERDUE WITH 13 ABOARD SAFE IN PORT

Missing Since Last Sunday on Voyage From Grand Haven to Port Stanley

St. Thomas, Ont., Dec. 18 — (CP)—Vincent Barrie, chief owner of the S. S. Chaparral, said here today that the former coastguard vessel, reported missing on voyage from Grand Haven, Mich., to Port Stanley, Ont., pulled into the port of Charlevoix in northern Michigan, last night. The boat Mr. Barrie said was never in any danger and made Charlevoix according to schedule.

The vessel left Grand Haven Sunday night for Port Stanley, where it was intended to reconvert her for passenger and freight service between Port Stanley and Cleveland next summer. Mr. Barrie said Captain Hoag of Amherstburg, Ont., was ordered to stop at northern Michigan port to await clear weather before attempting the more dangerous Mackinac Strait passage.

Mr. Barrie's first information on the arrival of the Chaparral came from a coastguard station at Traverse City, Mich., which sent out a plane to keep a lookout for this and other ships following the displaying of storm signals.

After the report from the Traverse City plane had been received Mr. Barrie received a telegram from Captain Hoag and Chief Engineer Fred Gerster, of Port Stanley saying they had made Charlevoix harbor for the night and would start out again as soon as the weather cleared.

The Chaparral was formerly in the Windsor-Detroit ferry service, being sold to U. S. government when the ferry service was discontinued.

With many aids to navigation such as buoys and markers removed for the season and adverse weather conditions on the Great Lakes, their chief hope lay in the possibility that the vessel had taken shelter at some small port.

The Chaparral is owned by a syndicate headed by Vincent Barrie of Port Stanley. The owners purchased her with the intention of converting her to use in the passenger trade between Port Stanley and Cleveland, Ohio, and were bringing the ship around to enable re-conversion work to be done during winter months.

Thirteen in Crew

Thirteen men make up the crew, with Captain Hoag, of Amherstburg, in command. His first officer is Guy Hays, Sarnia, and Chief Engineer, Fred Gerster, Port Stanley.

Two other crew members, Morley and Hugh Smith, are also Port Stanley men.

Mr. Barrie, who was in Grand Haven when the ship sailed, said that six other of the crew from Port Stanley and a cook from Blenheim were not known to him by name as they were hired by the First Officer.

Assistance is search for the 157-foot vessel was given by the U. S. Coast Guard station at Traverse City, Mich., in the broadcasting of a general alarm to all ships and ports in its area, asking them to be on the lookout for the tiny ship. A similar message was sent from marine stations in Cleveland.

Thirteenth member of the crew, George Shelder, is the only non-Canadian aboard. Shelder, an American pilot, was taken aboard to navigate the Chaparral through the dangerous Mackinac Strait.

Port Stanley, Ont., Dec. 18 — (CP)—The steamship Chapparral missing since last Sunday on a voyage from Grand Haven, Mich., to Port Stanley, arrived last night at Charlevois, Mich., it was learned here today.

Anxiety of relatives of crew members of the former coast guard vessel was deepened by knowledge that the Chapparral had only enough food aboard for a normal run to its scheduled destination and one day's extra fuel.

HIGH CAR PRICES FORCING MANY "OUT OF MARKET"

Production Costs and Retail Prices Causing Manufacturers Increasing Concern

By DAVID J. WILKIE

Detroit, Dec. 18 (AP)—Production costs and retail prices are giving automobile manufacturers increasing concern as they try to chart their programs for the year ahead.

Increased material and labor costs are a certainty; whether retail prices can be pegged at their present high levels will depend upon the industry's ability to find other manufacturing economies.

Currently these are not in sight and leading industry heads have asserted bluntly that if there is an advance in production costs, especially in wages, there must be a corresponding rise in retail prices.

The motor industry does not cherish high prices; it needs volume both for sustained factory operations and profit, and volume does not thrive on high prices.

Many "Priced Out"

Although maintaining they can sell all the vehicles the assembly plants can produce next year, sales executives of the various companies do not deny that thousands of would-be buyers already have been "priced out of the market" by the steadily mounting retail charges.

They do not like to think about what further price increases might do the 1947 and 1948 market for automobiles, particularly those in what formerly was the "low-priced" field. This bracket, which in normal times accounts for up to 80 per cent of the industry's volume, reportedly already has begun to feel the effects of large order withdrawals.

Fire Destroys Marysville Grill, Service Station

Napanee, Dec. 18 — Fire believed to have been caused by an overheated chimney, yesterday totally destroyed the combined two-storey stucco dwelling and business place operated as Bates Grill and Service Station at Marysville, 10 miles west on No. 2 Highway. Deseronto Fire Chief James McVicker and three firemen responded to the call with a chemical extinguisher, but were unable to get near the blazing building.

House contents and other equipment were all lost and only two charred and blistered gas pumps remain above ground level. Fanned by a strong wind, flying sparks and embers menaced the near-by farmhouse and barn belonging to James V. Walsh but neighbors prevented any damage.

Christmas Bonuses Will Be Scrutinized

Ottawa, Dec. 18. (CP)—Employers were warned by the Federal government yesterday that the validity of Christmas and New Year bonuses to employees and pay increases retroactive beyond December 1 would be scrutinized for possible disallowance as income tax deductions. Hon. J. J. McCann, Revenue Minister and Acting Labor Minister, announced the National War Labor Board would investigate bonuses and raises when requested by income tax authorities to determine if they exceed "what is reasonable and normal."

SIX LIFE-TERM ARMY PRISONERS ELUDE CAPTURE

Escape From Criminally Insane Hospital In Pennsylvania And Considered Dangerous

Phoenixville, Pa., Dec. 18 — (AP)— Six criminally - insane army life-term prisoners who forced a window to escape from Valley Forge General Hospital eluded capture in eastern Pennsylvania today.

Police units hunting the fugitives called on civilians in radio broadcasts to help by reporting immediately any trace of the men. They warned the men were dangerous and should be approached with caution.

Heavily armed and equipped with torchlights, civilians and military police searched densely wooded sections and lonely country lanes in the hospital vicinity after the escape was reported shortly before last midnight.

But there was no trace of the fugitives or any clue as to the direction in which they fled.

A state-wide alarm from the hospital to all police departments identified the escaped men as Joseph Bruno, 28, Staten Island, N.Y., Frank L. Lofton, 26, Saginaw, Mich.; Gerald Brant, who was admitted to the hospital only yesterday and was not described; Howard Boggs, 28, Huntingdon, W. Va.; Harry F. Keller, 28; and Curtiss L. Fogarty, 34. Brant, Keller and Fogarty's addresses were not available immediately.

Police of nearby Norristown, Pa., said "We understand the men are all serving life sentences for crimes ranging from rape to murder."

A spokesman for the army hospital described the escaped men as "mental patients" and said they were "dangerous" but were not armed when they left the ward. However, the spokesman added, it was not known whether the men, who fled the hospital grounds in blue denim uniforms, obtained weapons later.

Penicillin Mixed With Hemoglobin Curing Wounds

By HOWARD W. BLAKESLEE

Cleveland, Dec. 18. (AP) — Penicillin mixed with hemoglobin, the red coloring matter of human blood, is curing wounds and sores where nothing else succeeds, not even pure penicillin, it was reported to the American College of Surgeons today.

Lt.-Col. Felix Jansey, of Northwestern University, Chicago, said the discovery was made in two U.S. Army hospitals in England, which were short of medical supplies and on their own initiative tried for new uses of what they had.

Waste blood, of no use to anyone, was one thing these hospitals had in abundance. They extracted the hemoglobin, in the form of a red, sticky powder. They mixed it with water, making a jelly and into this jelly they mixed penicillin.

The mixture was placed directly into wounds. The cases at first were only those wounds which had failed to heal with all other available treatments. Penicillin, given internally, had failed. This was because in the blood the penicillin does not get higher than a certain concentration, and this concentration was not strong enough to kill some kinds of germs, which are highly resistant to penicillin.

9 Pupils Killed In South Carolina Crossing Accident

School Bus Driver Killed, 12 Children Suffer Injuries

Newberry, S. C., Dec. 18—(AP) —Nine pupils and the driver of a school bus were killed today when the bus and a southbound Southern Railway passenger train collided at a grade crossing on the outskirts of Silverstreet, a village seven miles southwest of Newberry.

Twelve other school children were injured. They were brought to Newberry county hospital for treatment. Attendants said all were in critical condition.

Mrs. H. N. Wallace of the McSwain Funeral Home, where five of the dead were brought, said ambulance drivers told her the train struck the bus on the side and dragged it a half-mile down the tracks.

Some bodies were carried along on the cowcatcher of the engine while others were scattered beside the train, according to her information.

Mrs. Wallace said the crash occurred on a straight stretch of road. It was thought, she added, that the bus driver was not expecting the train because it was reported running late.

Richard Sanders, the driver, was killed.

Attlee's Cabinet Not Consulted About Engagement

London, Dec. 18 (AP)—Prime Minister Attlee and his cabinet have not been consulted about an engagement for Princess Elizabeth, an official source said today, and as a result the rumors that she will marry Prince Philip of Greece and Denmark must be regarded as premature.

Under the Royal Marriages Act of 1772—passed to guard against undesirable marriages that might affect the succession to the Throne—no member of the Royal Family may marry without permission of the King, and the King as a constitutional Monarch acts only with the advice of his ministers.

An exception is made for members of the Royal Family who are 25 or older. They may marry without consent, provided they give the Privy Council a year's notice and parliament, during that year, does not disapprove of the marriage. Princess Elizabeth will not be 21 until next April.

The government sources said he had been assured "very recently" by Admiral Lord Mountbatten, Prince Philip's uncle, that there was "nothing too" the report of an engagement—although Lord Mountbatten has been described by other sources as strongly favoring his nephew's marriage to the future Queen.

If there were any "political objections" to the Princess' choice of husband, the cabinet certainly would express opposition, the informant said. Some sharp objections to Prince Philip as Royal Consort have been voiced in left-wing circles on the ground that he would form a link with the Greek Royalist Government.

However, the handsome, 25-year-old Prince, soon to become a British subject, has been defended by a number of left-wing Labor members of parliament, and the press recently has printed a series of pictures and stories pointing up his English background and his lack of any direct connection with Greek politics.

25,000th House Opened at Moncton With Due Ceremony

By IRVING WHYNOT
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Moncton, N.B., Dec. 18 (CP)—With two shiny new keys in his pocket, war veteran C. L. Harris, on the Moncton police force, today packed his furniture and started moving into his new home —The 25,000th emergency shelter structure built in Canada by Wartime Housing Ltd.

At elaborate ceremonies yesterday he and his wife, the former Catherine Burke of Cape Bauld, N.B., were presented the keys by Maj.-Gen. Hugh A. Young, President of Wartime Housing and Vice-president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the Crown Company which supervises the work of Wartime Housing.

As his wife proudly displayed the new quarters to her seven-year-old daughter Barbara, Mr. Harris carried ten-weeks-old John William through the new building.

The house was one of a Moncton project of Wartime Housing built under a new plan which may be used on more than 90 per cent of such projects across Canada because it cuts time, labor and material costs The house, a five-room, two-storey structure, was one of 100 houses, built in 66 working days, complete with sewer and water connections.

As the keys were presented to the new tenants, Wartime Housing officials announced they were prepared to build an additional 10-20,000 Canadian houses in the coming year if requested by municipalities.

Mean Neighbor Restrained By Court Order

Detroit, Dec. 18—(CP)—Mike Schych says he has the meanest neighbor in the world — and backs up his statement with this proof:

1. Mitchell Geresyca — the neighbor — plants unclipped hedges and trees to shut out the sun from Mike's victory garden.
2. Geresyca keeps a pile of lumber in the yard to attract rats which he traps and tosses into Mike's yard.
3. Geresyca's young daughter shakes the ladder every time Mike climbs up to paint his own house.

The Judge issued a temporary restraining order against the Geresyca clan protecting Mike from rats and ladder shaking.

There's no provision to protect the garden — but it's too cold for a victory garden these days anyway.

New Highway From Vermilion Bay To Red Lake, 105 Miles, Ready for Use

Toronto, Dec. 18 (CP) — Although official opening will not take place until early next year, Ontario's newest and northernmost road is ready for use.

Stretching from Vermilion Bay on the Trans-Canada Highway 50 miles east of Kenora, straight north to the Red Lake for 105 miles, the road runs through heavily timbered bush country, across sandy plains in some places and over streams and muskeg in others.

Its northern terminus is the mining town of Red Lake, and today Highways Minister George Doucett with a party of officials and contractors arrived in the town on an inspection tour which took less than four hours, in sub-zero weather, compared to the former travelling time of two days and nights under good weather conditions.

Built at a cost of $3,000,000, the road was constructed in less than six months. Construction of the road required 180 pieces of road-building equipment to clear 1,325 acres of land, close-cut an additional 900, excavate 14,000,000 cubic yards of rock, and lay 250,-000 cubic yards of top dressing. 000 cudic yards of top dressing.

Cost of freighting supplies to Red Lake are expected to drop to $5 a ton. Previously freight shipments had cost $100 a ton by air, $40 a ton by winter transport and $20 a ton by water in the summer.

Mining operators at Red Lake have signified their approval of the new road and their intention to expand mining operations in the area.

Lumber and tourist industries will also benefit from the accessibility to this area gained by construction of the Red Lake Highway.

William Boyd Found Mentally Incompetent

Charged with indecent assault involving a 13-year-old boy, William Boyd, age 58, of Coe Hill, was found mentally incompetent to stand trial when the issue was heard Wednesday morning before Judge W. S. Lane of Picton who is presiding over the General Sessions of the Peace.

Following arraignment of the accused on the charge defense counsel R. A. Pringle pleaded his client was mentally incapable of instructing counsel. A special petit jury was then empanelled to decide the issue and after hearing evidence declared the accused mentally incompetent.

First witness called by the defense was Dr. Roger Billings, psychiatrist, who stated that the accused had the mental ability of a child of eight years and at the time of examination had appeared "silly and facetious".

Under cross examination by Crown Attorney Donnan, however, the witness stated he believed Boyd had sufficient intelligence to instruct his counsel and that he realized he was on trial.

Provincial Constable Stan Palmateer of Bancroft stated he had known the accused for ten years and believed he was "partly" capable of instructing counsel. He admitted Boyd was incapable of carrying on any work without supervision.

Mr. Frank McCaw, farmer with whom Boyd was employed, agreed that the accused could not go ahead and do anything and stated he would agree with any suggestion.

Opening of the case against Boyd came following the conclusion of the presentation of charges against Ralph Turner, former Coe Hill school principal, who was charged on four counts of gross indecency. Turner was acquitted on one charge, was found guilty on three charges and on the first conviction was sentenced to a [illegible] months definite and nine months indefinite term. Sentence on the last two convictions will be made known by Judge Lane on Thursday.

George Urbach, Coe Hill, also is charged on six counts of gross indecency and indecent assault and electing speedy trial at his appearance before Judge Lane this week, will come before county judge on January 27th.

POLICE BLOTTER

Thieves responsible for the theft of an auto owned by William Hull, Herchimer Ave., had but short use of the stolen vehicle when the car went out of control on the second concession of Thurlow township and ended up in the ditch after breaking off a pole.

Hull told police that he had left his car on a local parking lot and when he went to get his auto the vehicle had disappeared.

Police believe they have a good description of those responsible for the theft as following the accident on the 2nd of Thurlow a passing motorist obligingly gave two men who were in charge of the vehicle a lift back to Belleville.

Otherwise all was comparatively quiet at the police station over the night. Two individuals were apprehended by police, one on an L.C.A. charge and the other on two Highway Traffic Act charges, as result of a chase by officers in the police cruiser. Driver of the car was stated by police to have been exceeding the speed limit while his car was also mechanically deficient.

Earle Elliott, 195 George Street, complained that a $2 bill had disappeared from a milk bottle.

77 Temporary Employees Taken On at Post Office to Assist In Handling Christmas Mail

Just about the busiest place in the city this week is the Belleville post office where commencing this morning 77 temporary employees were taken on to assist the regular staff in taking care of the Christmas rush which has already commenced.

Twenty-four of the additional staff will assist the letter carriers on their various walks and in arranging their routes in the office, while the remainder will be on duty at the post office where efforts will be made to keep ahead of the avalanche of mail expected during the balance of the week.

"If people would just make it a point to come to the office during the morning it would assist our cause greatly," commented Postmaster Waddell on Tuesday, as during the afternoon he viewed the long line of customers waiting their turn at the stamp wickets. Generally the mornings are slack at the office, while during the afternoon the post office lobby is jammed to capacity with waiting customers.

Differing from the procedure in former years when high school students were pressed into service as additional staff at the post office during the Christmas rush, the preference this year is being given to the returned war veteran. This being the case the majority of the extra help employed are men who served their country during the last war.

Emergency sorting cases have been set up at the local office for the annual Christmas rush and until after the holiday the staff will be working "round the clock" handling the tremendous volume of mail.

Male of the Species No Longer Shy About Buying Perfumes for Own Use

Don't be alarmed if strange rumblings are heard emanating from below ground. It won't be an earthquake, merely the gay blades and he-men of yesteryear turning over in their graves.

For the [illegible] of the present generation is turning to perfume, and perfumed lotions, believe it or not, and liking it.

Years ago, the male of the species who felt so inclined would enter a drugstore, look furtively around him and in a low voice order a small bottle of after-shave lotion for which he paid in the neighborhood of 35 cents. For the occasional gent of that period liked the flesh-tingling bite of an alcohol-spiked lotion.

Now he goes for the highly perfumed variety, pays top-flight prices for it, and doesn't give a tinker's darn who knows it.

It is not an uncommon sight these holiday days to see a big husky male built on pachydermic proportions and who looks like a Notre Dame halfback unconcernedly order his favorite odor. And he can and does pay as high as $2.50 for a small daintily shaped container with a fancy label, and giving off a smell like a June hayfield in full bloom.

Plenty of Choice

And in the modern drugstore he has plenty of variety to choose from. Men's toiletries this year are plentiful and come in all sizes, shapes and odors. It's quite the thing anymore, or at least it will be in and after the Yuletide festivities, for the male of the species to give off a redolent smell as he strides down the boulevard.

And Mr. Business has not lost sight of this new trend in men's personal adornments. There are at least 25 new varieties adorning bulging shelves of drug and other stores, with flamboyant advertising designed to attract the eye of the susceptible male and likewise that of his wife or sweetheart.

And many a man who was born to blush unseen, will not, in the future waste his sweetness on the desert air.

"Years ago," as one Front Street druggist puts it, "the guy who bought a 35-cent bottle of shaving lotion was a sissy. Now the big lugs walk unashamedly into stores and demand their favorite odor at top prices. They, at least some of 'em, drink the cheap stuff, and adorn their ear-lobes and jowls with the high-priced, highly perfumed article."

Has Possibilities

And the thing has possibilities. Who knows that before very long, some far-sighted perfumer will develop "character" perfumes for the breadwinners. It could be that before long we shall see cluttering up store shelves and showcases dainty bottles for men of action and dubbed "Evening in Shannonville" or "Moonlight on Zwick's Island."

And there will likely be such slogans as this "Two Whiffs of This, and You've Got the Miss" or "A Touch of Dream Moon, and the Gals Will Swoon," or "Our Javel Five Keeps Romance Alive."

Another far-reaching possibility is that the new fad may cause domestic upheavals. The boudoir dressing table with its glittering array of cosmetics and perfumes will no longer be immune to the raiding fingers of the male if some night he discovers he is short of his favorite odor.

In fact there's no telling to where the thing might lead. In the meantime we'll settle for a cake of shaving soap, a razor, and a caustic pencil. He-he!

Accidental Death Jury's Verdict; No Blame Attached

A verdict of accidental death was returned Tuesday evening by a coroner's jury at the adjourned inquest looking into the death of Benjamin Spiegel, Station Street, who died in hospital December 3rd after being struck by a motor car while crossing Front Street. No blame was attached to the driver of the car which struck Mr. Spiegel.

The adjourned inquest was held before Coroner Dr. J. Russell Scott with Assistant Crown Attorney S. Gordon Robertson acting for the Crown. A total of twelve witnesses were called to give evidence before the jury consisting of Foreman Harry Rollins, Arthur Hill, Russell Wotten, C. Arthur Bateman and Leo Buckley.

Witnesses included Dr. J. B. McKay, pathologist at Belleville General Hospital; Dr. E. McDonald; Bert Bolton; Peggy Reynolds; Ronald Graham; Jack Phillips, driver of the car which struck Mr. Spiegel; Abram Somberg; Milton Burtt; Ernest Chalk, Arthur "Nobby" Jones, and police constables Halliwell and Minaker.

Jack Phillips, driver of the car, told the jury that he had been driving north on Front Street at approximately 20 miles per hour when he observed a man and woman crossing the street about three car lengths in front of him.

According to witness there was a south-bound car approaching and it appeared as though the man had almost stepped into the path of the car when he quickly stepped backward two or three paces and was struck by the bumper and fender of his car. Driver of the car stated he had no opportunity of avoiding the accident.

"If Mr. Spiegel had remained in the centre of the street he would have been all right," stated Mr. Phillips.

Middle West Has Cold Spell

Chicago, Dec. 18 — (AP) —The Middle West shivered again today in sub-zero and below freezing temperatures as the season's severest cold wave lingered over a wide area and headed for the middle Atlantic and New England states.

Below zero temperatures extended from Eastern Montana across North Dakota and into Minnesota, Wisconsin and Upper Michigan. The mass of cold air was expected to move into the Eastern section tonight with sharp drops in temperatures by tomorrow.

The heaviest fall of snow was 15 inches reported at Ely, Minn., near the Canadian border.

ONTARIO COUPLE KILLED IN NEBRASKA

Sidney, Neb., Dec. 18 — (CP)—Two persons were killed and a five-year-old girl was critically injured yesterday in a head-on collision of an automobile and a truck two miles east of here.

Sheriff W. W. Schulz identified the dead on the basis of Canadian ration books in the wrecked car as Mr. and Mrs. David Dillabough of Jordan, Ont. The child was identified as their daughter, Sandra.

Schulz said the driver of the truck was Chick Richmond of Chapell, Neb. He suffered a broken collarbone.

The sheriff said he talked with a sister of Mrs. Dillabough, Mrs. Fred Jackson of Spokane, Wash., who said the family was en route to Spokane at the time of the accident.

Drug Stores Enjoy Big Volume Of Christmas Sales; Plenty of Choice Gifts Available for Late Shoppers

Back to almost normalcy since the piping days of pre-war distribution, drug stores of the city are revelling in one of the heaviest volumes of holiday trade in years.

Glittering arrays of holiday gifts from the ornate gold fountain pens to the inevitable Christmas card, adorn the shelves and showcases of the stores and an eager money-spending citizenry is taking full advantage of the first opportunity to "get what it wants when it wants it" in a long time.

Stocks in practically every line are plentiful. As one druggist said today, "We have plenty of everything and the only shortage we know of is one odor of perfume, one brand of fancy soap, and candy."

At that there was a certain supply of box candy available but this was quickly lapped up by a sweet-toothed clientele.

From the gift point of view, especially toiletries there is practically everything one desires and at almost any price.

One article that hasn't been too much in evidence for years is the hairbrush for the male of the species. Some of them are neat glass-topped gadgets that would delight the eye of any man unless his dome resembles the cue ball on a billiard table. Others come in nifty wooden tops attractively laid out in handsome leather cases.

There are plenty of perfumes with the exception of one high-priced article while fancy soaps can be had in almost any shape and size.

A number of Christmas stocks were late in delivery, according to another druggist, but holiday-minded Mr. and Mrs. are making up for lost time. Then there is the inevitable last-minute shopper who will raid shops and stores the first two days of next week and cash-registers will likely ring a higher tune.

Residents of 14 Apartments Left Homeless by Fire

Montreal, Dec. 18. (CP)—Residents of 14 apartments were left homeless today when a two-alarm blaze burned out a West End Souvenir Street apartment building.

Many residents were still in bed when the fire was discovered in the basement of the building but all were evacuated without injury, although some were dressed only in night attire and overcoats. They were given temporary shelter with neighbors.

Firemen from eight stations were on the scene for more than two hours and traffic was rerouted around their ice-covered hoses. Smoke billowing from the building hampered their work.

One of the residents was 73-year-old Mrs. H. Illingworth, who shared a ground-floor apartment with her daughter. She escaped wearing only pyjamas and a dressing gown and said she lost all her belongings.

BROKEN TOYS

The brave little soldier is hiding a tear .. He's faded — and nobody cares .. His gun has been missing for nearly a year .. That served in such brilliant affairs .. The doll that could speak has a still little voice .. There really is nothing to say .. She lies in the attic—while youngsters rejoice .. With Christmas a week away. A calico puppy is battered and torn .. And waits by the chimney to see .. If Santa remembers the last Christmas morn .. When they were left under the tree .. But Santa is busy and scarcely has time .. To pause when he's working so fast; .. We fear there are too many chimneys to climb .. To visit with friends of the past. On Christmas, we'll all feel a thrill getting up .. While toys brightly painted are shown .. But what of the doll and calico pup .. And the soldier, upstairs —all alone?

Huge Demand for Mechanical Toys Like Trains and Autos

By JACK GRAY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

A peace-time casualty, the criticism-riddled toy soldier tottered on his modelling clay battlefield today with all his trappings of miniature war as pre-Christmas buying indicated Santa Claus is beating his juvenile swords back into plowshares.

"We couldn't give away a toy tank today," said the manager of one Brantford store. His words were echoed in varying degree by dealers across Canada as a survey by The Canadian Press showed huge demand for mechanized toys like trains and autos, wooden pieces like wagons and sail boats and plastic toys.

With some exceptions, dealers reported toys of better quality than during the war years and in good to excellent supply, although shortages of rubber, paper, cloth and steel made themselves felt in some lines.

Prices were reported lower on such toys as were available last year mainly because cheaper lines were harder to sell with the return of better quality toys. Slightly higher prices for the latter category did nothing to hamper brisk sales. Some centres reported lower prices because of competition.

Here is how Santa Claus fared: Halifax reported big demand for metal and mechanical toys; cooking sets, plastic dishes, dolls and doll carriages also in good demand.

Charlottetown reported prices for quality toys slightly lower than last year with airplane models, target games and engineer sets popular with boys, dolls, household articles in miniature liked by girls.

In Ontario, Canadian toy makers were said to be making more items this year than ever before. Prices at Toronto were higher for dolls imported from England and metal toys from the United States. Supplies reached an all-time high at Toronto. Other Ontario cities had similar reports, with Peterboro dealers at the bare shelf stage.

Reports from the west were much the same as in Eastern Canada. Mechanical and fretwork toys from England were selling well and department stores had better selections than in years.

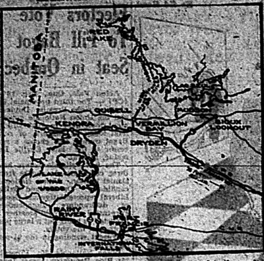
HIGHWAY BUILT IN RECORD TIME



The broken line at the top left of this map depicts the route of the new highway which connects the Red Lake mining area with the southern part of Ontario. Highways Minister Doucett led a convoy of trucks and cars into the town Tuesday to officially start traffic rolling over the road.

Started just six months ago, the road was completed in record time in the face of extreme difficulties, including the spring breakup, forest fires, below-zero temperatures and a heavy labor turnover. Cost was $3,000,000.

Children's Book Sales At Record New High

By DOROTHY CAREW

New York —(AP)— Parents, friends and doting relatives are spending about $200,000,000 for children's books this year, publishers estimated recently. This is a far cry from pre-war years when annual sales jogged along at $25,000,000 to $35,000,000.

Publishers say lack of toys during the war, more buying power and the birth rate all contribute to the sharp upswing in book sales.

But most important, they said, was "a revolution in the field," which brought with it greatly improved illustrations in moderately priced picture and story books.

In 1941 publishers began to think in terms of mass production. Instead of printing 5,000 copies of a book, they began to turn them out in tens and hundreds of thousands.

"Terrific improvement in offset lithography made it possible to do nice-looking books more cheaply than ever before," one published said.

With large printings, children's book illustration became a lucrative field for outstanding artists. To the consumer this meant better illustrated books on a much broader scale.

Sales Grew With War.

Before the war, department stores and some book shops stocked children's books as seasonal items. They accounted for 10 to 15 per cent of total annual book sales.

Today they are recognized as a profitable year-round business in their own right. Displays greet the shopper in many different types of stores, and some have special consultants to advise the prospective buyer in making his choice.

Before the war the average price of juveniles was $1.50, and more than half the titles were priced at $2 or higher. Today the greatest unit volume is in books selling for less than $1. A little more than a thrid of total output retails at $1 or more.

Wide retail distribution has brought child books to drug and stationery stores, paint, auto accessory and even some food stores.

The overwhelming percentage of sales volume is in the two to six-year-old class, retailers said, and "Mother Goose" in her various forms still is at the very top of the best-seller list.

Children's classics — Anderson' and Grimm's fairy tales, Heidi, Hans Brinker, Pinnochio, Tom Sawyer, the Louisa M. Alcott books and similar stories—are said to be headed for a boom.

Reference books and anthologies for children, which account for about 20 per cent of the entire juvenile market, are in greater demand than ever before at prices ranging from $50 to $100 a set.

There is no indication yet of any slackening in sales despite the return of toys, publishers said. Certain types such as animated books and flat picture books are said to be overpublished, but retailers said there is no indication that most types of children's books are anywhere near the saturation point.

Youths Remanded, Robbery With Violence Charged

London, Ont., Dec. 18 —(CP)— Two Indians of the Muncey Reserve west of St. Thomas were remanded without plea yesterday on charges of robbing with violence Duncan McKellar, Strathroy district farmer, Dec. 8 as police continued investigation of other recent crimes. Accused are Lyle Riley, 18, and Hubert Grosbeck, 17.

It is alledeg that the pair beat up McKellar, trussed him, and fled in the farmer's car with a mantel radio and $8 in cash. The car was later found on the Muncey Reserve and the arrests followed.

Over the same weekend two elderly Chinese laundry men here were beaten and robbed of $160 and there was a series of breakins in the London and Tillsonburg districts.

Sam Riley, 25, brother of Lyle, was also charged yesterday with receiving stolen goods and was given a similar remand of one week.

Medicine Warned On Use of Atom

(From the New York Times)

New York—While hailing "the potentialities" of radioactive isotopes in medical therapy and research, several atomic scientists issued a warning of health hazards in the use of the materials now being produced in large quantities by uranium chain-reactor piles.

Speaking at a forum on atomic energy at the mid-year meeting of the American Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, five prominent scientists agreed that isotopes were "the most useful tool for medical and biological research available."

However, Dr. Samuel K. Allison, director of the Institute for Nuclear Studies of the University of Chicago, warned that "many radioactive preparations are deadly poisons if improperly used."

Scientists Called Careless.

Dr. Frank H. Krusen of the Mayo Clinic quoted several workers in the field to show that "nuclear scientists are notoriously careless about their own protection and most of them are only vaguely aware of the hazards of their occupation."

Dr. Gioacchino Failla, director of the Radiological College of Physicians and Surgeons, Columbia University, broached the problem of possible influence on future generations if the widespread use of atomic power and radioactive isotopes raised "the level of ionizing radiation."

"Exposure to ionizing radiation has a cumulative effect on the germ cells," he declared. "Mutations, in the vast majority of cases produce inferior individuals. We must indeed be wise in the atomic age to avoid sudden extermination in an atomic war or slow deterioration and possible eventual extinction of the human race."

Dr. Shields Warren, assistant professor of pathology at the Medical School, Harvard University, reported that radioactive isotopes produced their physiologic effects by the ionization of protoplasm, probably through disruption of enzyme systems.

Injury to Cells Possible.

"Cells are injured in several ways," he continued. "A vital portion of the nucleus may be damaged with cell death resulting. Chromosomal alterations may be induced that show no effect in that cell itself, but will be apparent in abnormalities of descendants of that cell. Alteration in cellular function may be produced."

Dr. Paul C. Aebersold, chief of the isotopes branch at the atomic plant in Oak Ridge, Tenn., said there was no immediate prospect of large-scale production of a therapeutic agent consisting of radioisotopes.

"We have here no 'miracle drugs,' such as penicillin, streptomycin and sulfa compounds, which require manufacture by the ton," he said. "The potency of radioisotopes as therapeutic agents or a tracer tool stems from the extremely minute quantities which are required."

In the first four months of distribution of radioactive isotopes from Oak Ridge, he went on, about fifty millicuries of Carbon 14 (an amount equivalent to one-twentieth of a gram of radium) was sent out to forty investigators for experimentation.

Awarning against the use of this substance on humans was sounded by Dr. Failla. He said there was no information available on what happens if radioactive carbon is retained in the body.

Increase in Interest

In many communities the municipal elections this year have been marked by a great increase in public interest, shown in the greater numbers of voters who have demonstrated that they feel a vital interest in the electing of their civic bodies for the coming terms of office. It is one of the healthiest signs and is a favorable augury for the future. It is paying a just tribute to the citizens who offer themselves to serve their community's welfare and a real service to the municipality.

People realize that their own community is something that is vital, that it has problems of its own, which they as citizens should help to solve. They also know that every community has its own individuality and is a living institution which they can assist in forming and developing.

New issues will come up in these days of recovery from the war and in the period of rehabilitation and so there is a freshness of outlook and besides there is an air of confidence and interest, holding out bright hopes that the fact that more voters voted this year than last means that in coming years the percentage of those who exercise their franchise will continue to grow until the vast majority of the people are voting year after year. That will be approaching the ideal community when the citizen will give his or her say on municipal affairs whenever there is an election.

Helicopter in Mail Service

Helicopters are to be given the most extensive tests in New York area early in January in the collection and delivery of mail in metropolitan areas. Ten of these craft are expected to be shuttling between depots in New York State, New Jersey, Connecticut and between New York City and vessels at sea to save time. It is hoped to cut off an hour and possibly a day from the time of deliveries. Similar experiments have been made in the Los Angeles and Chicago area. There are hopes that they will be found to be a paying proposition and a great saving of time. The plan of having helicopters take off from building roofs as tried out in Chicago and Los Angeles sections will be followed in the forthcoming trials.

Mail has been for ages one of the developments of civilization. The very name post is from the Latin word "positus" meaning "placed" because horses were put at certain distances to transport letters or travellers. This was the ancient beginning of one of the most effective instruments of man's progress. Nineteen centuries ago in the time of Julius Caesar the services of couriers in parts of the Roman dominions was so well organized that remarkable speed was attained for those days. It took two letters written by Caesar in Britain to Cicero in Rome only 26 days for one to arrive and 28 days for the other.

Private persons used slaves to convey their letters to their destination or to trust to some person going to the place to which a letter was addressed. The Emperor Diocletian at the end of the third century set up a postal system for private persons. The University of Paris established the first service in the thirteenth century in France. In Germany the first post was in the Tyrol in the late fifteenth century. There were private posts from the time of Edward III in England. Couriers and stage coaches carried mail as every reader of Dickens novels knows. Then came trains and ocean-ships. With the plane has come airmail, the latest form working in conjunction with railways and ships. In this age a great amount of personal and business mail goes by cable or telegraph and wireless communication.

Heavy Christmas Buying

The great amount of buying which has been felt in anticipation of Christmas continues to add interest to the plans for the Yuletide season. Shops have been unusually busy for weeks past and there is no let-up of interest in the purchase of gifts and arrangements which are going forward for the festival. Weather has become at times inclement, mainly through high winds but otherwise beyond the slippery condition of the roads and walks on Tuesday morning for a short time the actions of the weather have co-operated with the planning for the festivities which come to a peak on Christmas Day. There have been several light falls of snow which for a short period of time transformed the landscape to a winter scene fitting for the time. Fortunately there have been no heavy falls of snow in these parts, though everyone recognizes the annual need of snow for the sake of the soil and roots and the next season's crops. Everyone can remember the blizzard condition which was felt west of this section and was particularly heavy in Toronto and the district around about, leaving snow piled deep on the ground. That was on Dec. 12th, 1944, when traffic was tied up in the western portion of Ontario. But that did not halt Christmas festivities in that part of the province.

The heavy buying and the generally favorable weather together indicate that Christmas cheer this year will rival or surpass that of Christmas seasons of the past. The fact of the large amount of goods available as gifts and the gradual lifting of some of the restrictions have created a feeling of greater freedom in planning festivities.

The pre-Christmas days that remain are days destined to be filled with activity of planning and buying. A further index is the large amount of outgoing and incoming Christmas mail.

Plan Planes of 1950's

Even before construction work begins on Britain's revolutionary series of Brabazon air-liners, designers and engineers in the United Kingdom are already suggesting their successors for "sometime in the 'fifties'". The plane of the next decade, according to the experts' composite ideas, will be tailless, shaped like an arrowhead, capable of a speed of 600 miles per hour at 50,000 feet altitude, and will have a range of 3,500 miles. While it is emphasized that four years normally elapse between the drawing board and the actual construction, a six-foot model of this type of plane will be one of the main items at the United Kingdom Ministry of Supply's stand at the 17th International Aeronautical Exhibition in Paris.

Solo From Sol

British scientists recently discovered that the sun and the Milky Way make noises which can be heard on a radio set. But surely the scientists are a little behind the times. Shakespeare knew all about it:

"There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st
But in his motion like an angel sings;

and, long before that, Pythagoras had drawn up a program that included "the music of the spheres."

By all accounts, however, it is unlikely that the public will listen in much to this "music," or desert the dance bands in the hope of catching pep tunes from the Pleiades when the Seven Sisters swing it. In fact, the ancients were wrong in thinking that mere noise was music — but the present age can sympathize there, for this mistake it does not always avoid itself, says Christian Science Monitor.

Repeaters

The tragedy of the youthful prison repeater was again brought into sharp focus in the Winnipeg city police court when a 20-year-old robber was given a four-year penitentiary term. It was his 26th conviction. One of his partners in crime who is 22 years of age, and who was also sent to Stony Mountain for four years, was only released from that institution last March, says the Winnipeg Tribune.

PLEASANT PEOPLE ALL

Office boy comes in to see
Just what he can do for me.
Postman waves along the way,
Shouts: "There's mail for you today!"
Milkman begs of me to tell
If right now I'm feeling well.
Wonder why so suddenly
All are being nice to me?

When he sees me driving in,
Gas attendant wears a grin.
Interested seems to be
In my small grandchildren three;
Asks about them, one and all;
Thinks some day on them he'll call.
Rubs my windshield till it glows.
Likes to do it, I suppose.

It is heartening to find
Willing helpers, gracious, kind;
Welcomes everywhere I go,
Smiles, and then a glad "Hello!"
In my welfare such concern,
Of my health desire to learn,
And I wish, with Christmas near,
These could last throughout the year.

LOOKING BACKWARDS

GLEANINGS FROM OUR FYLES OF BY-GONE YEARS.

20 YEARS AGO

Dec. 18th., 1926.

In connection with the opening of the new Albert College on Dundas Street West, it is interesting to note that Mr. W. Jaffers Diamond, barrister, of this city, attended the Belleville Seminary, which was the predecessor of Albert College, and stood upon the same land as the college buildings now vacated on College Street. The Seminary was conducted by the Methodist Episcopal Church as was Albert College originally and the Tabernacle was the church of that body. Later the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Wesleyan Methodist Church, which was Bridge Street Church, entered into union. Mr. Diamond attended the Seminary in 1857. Education was not so easily within the reach of the youth of Canada in those days as now, when almost any ambitious young man has the facilities to obtain a liberal education at nominal cost. The only artificial light used in the Seminary in the class rooms and dormitories was shed by candles. Wood, which was plentiful those days, was burned in the big heaters and the school boys helped to gather the firewood. Mr. Diamond is still actively engaged in the practice of law here and is the efficient secretary of the Board of Education which position he has held for many years.

A stray brown rooster was wandering on Front Street last evening when the eagle eye of Police Constable Ellis saw it and after a brief but exciting chase the bird was made a prisoner. Not wishing to have the quietude of the police station disturbed by the crowing of the rooster at early dawn, the officer placed the bird in safe keeping with an uptown merchant where it is feeling quite at home.

In the Nov. 26th., 1916, issue of "Canada," an English publication, the following reference is made to Major Roscoe Vanderwater of Sidney township: "For conspicuous gallantry in action. He commanded the attacking party with great determination and held and consolidated the captured trench. He personally supervised the digging of the new communication trenches. On other occasions he has done fine work." As a reward of Major Vanderwater's bravery, as above recorded, he received the Distinguished Service Order.

At a meeting of the city council Ald. Knox asked if the snow by-law was to be enforced this year. In the case of vacant property, he questioned, would the city clear off the snow on the sidewalks and charge the expense of doing so in the taxes? Ald. Panter said that the public works department would not clear the snow from the sidewalks along vacant property until a new arrangement is made. In the past, he said, that it had been understood that the public works department would remove the snow and be reimbursed when the taxes were collected. A lot of snow was removed on this understanding and a lot of money spent, but not one cent of the taxes collected was ever credited to the public works committee. Ald. Knox insisted that something be done in this connection, but the matter was dropped.

Electors Vote To Fill Bagot Seat in Quebec

Acton Vale, Que., Dec. 18 — (CP) — The third provincial by-election since Premier Duplessis and the Union Nationale government took over in 1944 will be held today as electors of rural Bagot county will choose a successor to the late Cyrille Dumaine, Liberal.

The 9,671 eligible voters have three candidates to choose from: Daniel Johnson, Union Nationale candidate; Dr. Rolland Bailly, Liberal representative and Georges deGrandpre, Independent. Forecasted clear, cold weather is expected to bring out a large percentage of the voters.

Present standing in the 91-seat legislature is:

Union Nationale, 50; Liberals, 35; Bloc Populaire, three; Independent, two; vacant, one (Bagot).

In the two other by-elections, the Union Nationale captured Beauce from the Bloc Populaire and Compton from the Liberals.

There are 49 polls in the eastern townships riding, opening at 9 a.m., and closing at 6:30 p.m. There are no advance polls.

Premier Duplessis and Adelard Godbout, Liberal leader of the opposition, have held main interest in campaign speeches so far with Mr. Duplessis emphasizing Quebec's desire for provincial autonomy and Mr. Godbout accusing the premier of setting up a dictatorship in Quebec through electoral methods.

Cost of Life In Building Jap R.R. Told Crimes Trial

Tokyo, Dec. 18 (AP).—A survivor testified at the International War Crimes trial Tuesday a Japanese officer declared "it is no use quoting the Geneva Convention; the (Burma-Siam) railroad has to be finished within a certain time at all costs, irrespective of the loss of lives of British and Australian prisoners."

These costs, state documents introduced as evidence, included the deaths from starvation, torture and disease of 44 per cent of one unit of 7,000 British prisoners of war sent from Singapore.

A score of affidavits charged the prisoners were worked from 12 to 20 hours a day on scant ration of rice and vegetable soup, with an occasional piece of fish; they were clad in rotten remnants of clothing in which they were captured 15 months earlier; they were subjected to daily beatings, the mildest of which included whacks with rifle butts that splintered bones and bruised flesh, and they were kept at night in flooded huts in camps where cholera and dysentery were rampant.

Lt.-Col. Charles Henry Kappe, Australian senior officer at one camp, testified by affidavit that the Japanese officer in charge replied to his protests that Japanese engineers were prepared to sacrifice their own lives to follow out orders to complete the railway and "prisoners also must be prepared to sacrifice their lives for the railway".

Romance Started By Girl's Voice

Capetown — (CP) — A clear soprano voice singing an Irish love ballad started a romance that will shortly result in marriage. The principals in the love story are William (Bill) Foster, 32-year-old ex-corporal of the British army, now in Capetown, and Miss Lucy Fisher, 26-year-old city shop assistant.

Bill was sitting on the verandah of a city hotel one afternoon. He was lonely and his thoughts were thousands of miles away in England.

"Suddenly a woman started to sing," he said. "It was a clear soprano voice. It was so beautiful —that Irish love ballad—that I could only sit and hope it would go on for ever.

"I looked over to where the voice came from, and I saw her. I wanted to talk to her and tell her how homesick I was. I was too shy. When she looked at me I knew that I would never rest until we were married."

Unfortunately the young woman left the hotel soon afterwards and Bill then spent many a long day tramping round Capetown looking for her. "I must have walked hundred of miles," he said, "but could not find her. When eventually I left Capetown for the country I left letters for her with the hotel manager, the waiters and other members of the staff — in the hope that she would return to the hotel.

"I was beginning to despair of seeing her again when I received a letter from her. She had been handed one of my notes. And in her letter she confessed that she had felt the same way as I had."

They became engaged and hope to marry early next year.

"Yet, it sounds like a storybook romance," Miss Fisher agreed. "When I saw Bill I instinctively knew that I loved him."

PERSONAL HEALTH TALKS

By WILLIAM BRADY, M.D.

DIGITALIS HAS A LONG TAIL

Why don't you doctors pronounce digitalis according to Webster? All the doctors I have talked with pronounce it with a short a.

(Oh, I don't know—Webster isn't so hot—see how he flopped trying to define somersault, for example—I'll bet Webster has sent a lot of gullible geeks flying through the air to break their necks trying to do their morning rolls a la Ol' Doc Brady, who takes his always by firm contact with the floor or ground.)

At the risk of being tiresome (continues the correspondent) I recount my experience. Seven years ago, at the age 72, I had a severe heart attack and went under medical cre for the next two years—I could not ascend a flight of stairs, was forbidden to make any exertion not absolutely necessary and I was so short of breath I could hardly read a paragraph aloud without puffing and gasping for breath.

Well, I just got disgusted with the whole set-up, threw away my medicine and said I'd have no more of it.

About that time I met an old gentleman (8 years my senior) who was spry, active and did a good deal of walking every day. He invited me to accompany him on his morning strolls. I did not cover as much territory as he did but I joined him every day and for three years thereafter, rain or shine, we trudged along together to the city park where we could sit on a bench for an hour, cuss the democrats and remake the world in our own finds. All along I felt myself improving. I was taking vitamin B (here the correspondent uses vague language) after reading your (more vague language, but I infer he means the booklet CVD which deals with heart disease) and have continued taking it ever since.

Now at the age of 78 1-2 I haven't the slightest discomfort from my heart. My blood pressure seems.... my digestion is good. I have taken no other medicine.

I do not use tobacco—though I often envy the peace and satisfaction pipe smokers seem to enjoy. Mind, I say pipe. Damn a cigarette smoker. He's a pestiferous nuisance. An afflictive visitation. (Here! Here —I mean Hear! Hear!) As for alcoholic liquors I simply do not care for them. They may be all right for peevish old folks as you describe but I'll wait till I'm a hundred. (You've got me wrong, brother—I have never suggested or implied that old people should use alcoholic liquors.) I have never taken a drink of any intoxicant that did not make me feel worse for the taking. My interest in life is such that I am not inclined to stupify my senses and miss the enjoyment. No sir, go along to your golf course. I'm still too young to indulge in such frivolity.

(Signed) ......

Brother, if I happened along and stopped to chat with you some day, on your park bench, I'm afraid there'd be a lot of dust raised around there. Golf course my eye. Why should I go along to a golf course when there is a beautiful bowling green only seven blocks away? Shucks, man, that's a foolish question if you know anything about the historic game of bowling on the green—a game that was ancient when some modern loafer invented golf.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

It's A Date

You can see me any morning busily rolling somersaults, taking an occasional "nip" of iodine in water, doing my keepfit exercises and otherwise following advice laid down in "The 7 Keys to Vite." In our family (grandparents, children, grandchildren) arguments cease when the teaching of "Ol' Doc Brady" is cited. (Mrs. B.L.A.)

Answer.—Thank you. How early in the morning—or if you are serving old-fashioned yeast-raised buckwheat cakes with Pennsylvania maple syrup and coffee in unlimited quantities Thursday mornings I'll try to get my rolls and everything done early enough to get over to your house and see your show.

Never Missed

I believe we have never missed a single one of your articles since they first appeared in the paper. (Mrs. J. H.)

Answer.—That's what makes me so mad sometimes—practically nobody misses my stuff when it is omitted. But thank you for your good intention.

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

Do ships sink to the bottom?

There is a popular notion that vessels that go down at sea do not sink all the way to the bottom, but remain suspended in the water because of the increased pressure and density at great depths. The fact is that any modern steamship will sink all the way to the bottom regardless of the depth of the water.

Pressure in itself does not enter into the question, because the pressure of water is exerted equally from all directions. Increased density, which is owing largely to the increased pressure, is not an important factor, because water is almost incompressible. The compressibility of water is so slight that even at a depth of a mile a cubic foot of water weighs only about half a pound more than at the surface.

The law of floating and sinking bodies is simple: If a body weighs more than its equal volume of water at any depth, it will sink and continue to sink until it reaches the bottom; if it weighs less, it will float on the face; and if it weighs the same, it will stay wherever placed. In other words, an object sinks in water if its average density, including entrapped air, is greater than the density of the water in which it is immersed.

Fresh water weighs about 62.4 pounds a cubic foot. Therefore, since, according to the principle of Archimedes, the lifting effect on a submerged body is equal to the weight of the displaced liquid, any object weighing more than 62.4 pounds a cubic foot will sink in fresh water. Sea water, which is somewhat denser owing to its salinity, weighs about 69 pounds a cubic foot in the deepest known places. Any object weighing more than 69 pounds a cubic foot will sink to the bottom in such water. All modern vessels if filled with water will weigh more than 69 pounds a cubic foot and accordingly would sink to the bottom of the sea immediately.

Of course, it is quite possible that a ship of the old wooden type, carrying a cargo of low density bulk like cork, might have the same weight as its equal volume of water. Such a vessel after filling with water would remain suspended in the sea at a distance from the bottom where the ship displaced exactly an equal weight of water. The condition of such a ship would be similar to that of a "water-logged" piece of wood that sinks to a certain depth but not to the bottom.

The U. S. Bureau of Standards says that, at the mouth of a large river like the Amazon, where a layer of fresh water flows for miles over the denser sea water, it is conceivable, though highly improbable, that some wooden ships with cargoes of low density might sink through the fresh water and remain "half-sunk" for some time at the boundary between the fresh river water and the salt sea water. The equilibrium of such a vessel, however, would be precarious and within a short time it would either rise to the surface or, which is more probable, sink of the bottom.

POINT TRAVERSE

Duck Lighthouse Closed for Year

Point Traverse. — The closing down of the Main Duck lighthouse and wireless station, and the departure of the keepers, leaves the isolated, wind-swept island without a solitary human inhabitant.

The caring for livestock and harvesting of ice at the fishery there annually required caretakers to spend the winter months on the Ducks, but not since March 1944, when the body of 60-year-old Jake Devers, winter caretaker of the island, was discovered in the Dulles' summer residence, has anyone remained on the Ducks during the winter months.

The summer's ice supply for commercial fishermen operating out of the Ducks, is now put up at the Point Traverse fishing colony.

The Main Ducks, a 1,200-acre island, lies a few hundred feet north of the International Boundary Line in Lake Ontario, and some 18 miles off this peninsula.

It was owned by Claude Cole up until the time of his demise in May, 1938, which he sovereigned over for some forty years. Since her husband's death, Mrs. Cole was owner of the island until June, 1941, when it was acquired by John Foster Dulles, eminent Long Island lawyer.

$1,050 FOR BEING STRUCK BY PUSHED STALLED CAR

London, Dec. 18 — (CP) — Miss Nellie Chatterson of this city will receive $1,050 damages as result of settlement in a supreme court suit over an unusual traffic accident.

She was hit by a stalled car being pushed across a sidewalk by Russell and Earl Smith.

Skim Milk Better Than Whole Milk Experts Declare

Ottawa, Dec. 18 — (CP) — The case of Ottawa district milk distributors today was placed before the Ontario Royal Commission on milk, which yesterday heard from one of Canada's foremost nutrition experts that skim milk is better than whole milk.

The statement was made by Dr. L. F. Pett, director of nutrition for the Federal Health Department, who told the Royal Commissioner, Mr. Justice Dalton Wells, that a quart of skim milk, the by-product left when butterfat is removed, was a "better" bargain than a quart of whole milk, with its high butterfat content.

Skim milk retails in the Ottawa district for 11 cents a quart against 15 cents a quart for whole milk.

Dr. Pett said that from the viewpoint of nutrition and health the fat content of milk was "not the most important factor" and expressed belief the consumer would get "a lot more for his dollar" in food value if he purchased skim milk.

Showing through nutrition charts that skim milk contained more nutritive units than whole milk, Dr. Pett said it was "unfortunate" the price of milk was based on butterfat content.

Speaking as a physician, he said a "great deal of harm" could be done to infants by feeding them milk with too high a butterfat content and added that this was why many physicians placed children on a diet containing milk with a low butterfat percentage.

He said there was no "health reason" why milk should contain 3.4 per cent butterfat or any other specific figure because the health value of milk could not be used to establish a precise figure for butterfat content.

HOSPITAL RAISES RATES

Ottawa, Dec. 18 — (CP) — Trustees of the Ottawa Civic Hospital have authorized a general increase in rates ranging from $1.50 to $2 daily, effective Jan. 1. Rising operating costs of wages, food and general hospital supplies made the boost necessary.

Rates for private rooms will be increased from $6 to $8 daily and semi-private from $3.50 to $5. A new classification — semi-public — also was created. This would cover patients accommodated in large wards and attended by their own doctors. The charge will be $4 daily.

Trevor-Wilson Retired to Reserve

Capt. F. K. Trevor-Wilson terminated a very successful army career on the 27th November 1946 when he was retired to the Reserve Army with the rank of captain. Keith joined the Hasty Pee's at Picton in Sept. 1939 as a private and has worked his way up through all the ranks to that of a major.

Since Dunkirk he has been associated with the R.C.A.S.C. and has held various appointments all connected with food. In retiring to civil life, Keith, who will be remembered by his association with Fred Arber and the Central Bakery for ten years, has chosen the same profession and is now employed by Canada Catering Co. Ltd., as the manager of Tip Top Tailors cafeteria on Fleet Street, Toronto. Keith has purchased a house in the Armour Heights district of Toronto which is now under completion.

It is expected that Mrs. Trevor-Wilson, Douglas and Barbara will move to Toronto early in the New Year.

WHERE SCHOOLS FAIL MOST, SAYS CANADIAN YOUTH

Toronto, Dec. 18 — (CP) — Canadian youths feel the schools "have failed them most" in the field of training for marriage and social life, said R. E. G. Davis, former secretary of the Canadian Youth Commission, in discussion last night of the as yet unpublished report of the commission. Davis said that almost all those between the ages of 15 and 24 who had been interviewed by the commission stressed the need for re-definition of the place of children in the family.

Radar Navigation Used to Speed Export Shipping

Liverpool, Dec. 18 — (Reuters) — Immediate introduction of the latest radar aids to navigation will make the port of Liverpool first in the world to utilize radar on a full scale basis for piloting ships in and out of port. The menace of coastal mists and winter fog to deep sea shipping thus will be banished from the River Mersey.

Ships now at sea and others due in the Mersey within the next six to eight months will be "seen" from Liverpool fully 25 miles before they reach port, and will be guaranteed safe navigation into the River Mersey under the poorest conditions of visibility short of absolute "zero."

Motive of the new port plan is to speed up the turn around of ships in support of the British export drive, and at the same time to widen the margin of safety in the navigation of the Mersey Channel and its approaches. The port handles as many as 70 deep sea ships at once.

The Liverpool installation has been specially designed for cargo supervision — the movement in and out of big freighters — and will work this way:

Observations will be taken from an 80-foot-high watchtower, to be erected early in the new year. The tower will house six radar "displays." The master "display" will keep constant watch out to sea, scanning Liverpool Bay and the port approaches and revealing all shipping within a radius of 25 miles.

Others will pilot the movement of the vessels in five well defined sections of the navigational channels and give readings on a large scale. Radio-telephone will be used by pilots aboard inward and outward bound ships to keep in touch with the radar tower.

CANOE 3,000 MILES TO SPEND CHRISTMAS

Winnipeg, Dec. 18 — (CP) — Eric Partridge, Canadian Army veteran from Red Lake, Ont., and his wife, a former nurse, arrived in Winnipeg Tuesday on their way to spend Christmas at Carnduff, Sask., a canoe trip of nearly 3,000 miles behind them.

The couple left Red Lake in September, paddled and portaged their way to the headwaters of the Mississippi and then paddled downstream to New Orleans which they reached Dec. 10. They returned by rail.

INSURANCE RATES RAISED

Toronto, Dec. 18 — (CP) — Increases in motorcar insurance rates were announced today by the Canadian Underwriters' Association and the Independent Automobile Insurance Conference on the grounds of increase in traffic accidents and cost of repairing cars.

Increases are approximately 10 to 15 per cent.

Changes in rates will not affect existing policies until their renewal.

350 Guerillas Surrender In Northern Greece

Athens, Dec. 18 — (AP) — A summary of official reports today disclosed that more than 350 guerillas had surrendered in Northern Greece in the last 48 hours, coming down from snow-laden mountains where they said scores of their fellows were dying from sub-zero weather and lack of food.

The sharp increase in the number of reported surrenders followed an intensive leaflet-dropping campaign by 3rd Army Corps planes. The leaflets stressed that the deadline for surrender, an amnesty offer, was Dec. 21st.

A delayed dispatch from Joseph C. Goodwin, Associated Press correspondent, said 3rd Army units were taking prisoners in mopping up operations around the foot of Mount Olympus, on the Gulf of Salonika.

Formal Ceremony to be Held

London, Dec. 18 — (Reuters) — Passing of the coal mines from private to public ownership will be celebrated here Jan. 1 — a day which the mine workers will mark the dances and parades. The formal ceremony of handing over the industry to the National Coal Board will take place at the London headquarters of the Ministry of Fuel and Power.

WEDDINGS

LUCAS—BRANT

Mohawk Reserve.—A wedding of considerable interest to friends in this community and in Hamilton, Ont., was solemnized recently in Christ Church when Fern, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Brant, became the bride of Kenneth Thomas, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Lucas, of Hamilton, the Rev. Canon Kidd, M.A., M.C., of St. Mark's Church, Deseronto, being the officiating clergyman. White lilies adorned the altar and Mr. Thomas Brant, organist of the church, presided at the console.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a floor-length gown of white taffeta with net yoke, the skirt gathered to form a slight train, and a halo of orange blossoms holding her long veil of white illusion. She carried an arm bouquet of Sunset roses.

Miss Ruth Brant was her sister's maid-of-honor, wearing a gown of pink taffeta with white accessories, and carrying a Colonial bouquet of pink roses. The bridesmaid was Miss Marie Carte, of Hamilton. She wore a gown of orchid-pink crepe, with green accessories, and carried pink roses. Two winsome flower girls, Wilma Brant and Carol Hill, sister and niece of the bride, led the bridal procession. They wore dainty frocks, reminiscent of the quaint charm of the Kate Greenaway dresses, made of light green taffeta, with orchid sashes and matching poke bonnets, and they carried a basket of multi-colored 'mums.

Mr. Jack Reider, of Hamilton, attended the groom.

Mrs. Clarence Brant wore a becoming green dress with a corsage of red roses, while the groom's mother wore an ensemble in the American Beauty shade, with a corsage of roses and baby 'mums.

Many guests were present at the bride's home for the wedding dinner which followed the ceremony. The long table with its lace cloth was centred with a bouquet of white lilies and tall pink tapers. Canon Kidd proposed a toast to the bride, to which the groom ably responded. In the evening a reception was held in the Council House where wedding gifts were on display.

Many good wishes for the young couple's health and happiness follow them to their new home in Hamilton.

Age-old Story of the 'Nativity' Told in Pantomime, Pageant By Albert College Students

Albert College chapel was a suitable setting for the enactment of the sacred drama of the age-old story of the "Nativity", which becomes more beautiful each time it is depicted in pantomime and pageant.

Once inside the doors of the main entrance, visitors were conscious of an atmosphere of welcome and hospitality, emphasized by the brightly lighted Christmas tree on the landing at the top of the stairs leading to the chapel doors.

An air of expectancy was prevalent in the dimly lighted chapel; the stage curtained in rich tones of maroon velvet, with a matching drape over the grand piano below the stage making a background for a group of tall ivory tapers whose rosy glow added to the richness of its tones. The central dais leading to the stage was banked on either side with the bright greenery of potted ferns, in distinct contrast to the deeper wine shade of the curtains above.

Triumphant Notes

At length from the piano in the balcony the triumphant notes of the Processional Hymn, "Hark the Herald Angels Sing" was the signal for the entrance of a choir in maroon gowns and carrying lighted candles, through the doors leading from the corridors on either side of the auditorium to meet before the chancel steps for a procession to the balcony behind the audience, where their candles were effectively grouped just inside the balcony railing.

From the balcony came a voice reading—"And lo, the Angel of The Lord came upon Them and the Glory of The Lord shone round about Them", the choir taking up the story with the Hymn "Shepherds in the Fields Abiding" and the "Gloria in Excelsis Deo", while on the stage "shepherds" in typical Eastern garb reclined around a small campfire discussing the political problems of the day and the probable advent of a Messiah, "who shall rule my people Israel". Some decided to sleep, but Daniel stood guard because of the restlessness among the flocks, so was first to notice an unusual brilliance in "yon sky". As the choir rendered "It Came upon the Midnight Clear" an angel appeared to hover near the star, proclaiming— "Behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, for unto you is born in the City of David, a Saviour, who is Christ, The Lord".

Carols Sung

As the shepherds decided to go to Bethlehem the carol, "Good Christian Men Rejoice" was followed by the appropriate solo "Nazareth", feelingly rendered by Mr. David Gilchrist.

The first scene in Act II, depicted King Herod, in robes of state and crown of gold, seated on a throne discussing with soldiers and pages a report, brought in from the streets of Jerusalem, that a Messiah had been born to be a Governor of Israel. Herod sent a guard to bring the prophets, who had spread this report, who, when they were questioned, read from the prophesy by Isaiah. In Scene II, Herod had the Three Wise Men from the East also conducted into his presence that he might question them, the carol "We, Three Kings of Orient Are", preparing the listeners for the entrance of the three richly robed men from the East. Herod received them kindly, questioned them closely and demanded of them, "when ye have found Him bring me word".

Carried To Streets

In Act III, the story is carried to the street of Bethlehem, where the shepherds stop to inquire of children, who direct them to the "Inn", as the place where strangers may be located. Soon the Wise Men also enter the village and are likewise directed to the Inn, the children following to see the Baby King of Whom the strangers have spoken.

"Away in a Manger" sung as a solo by Miss Lorna Burton was greatly appreciated and "Silent Night" softly rendered by the choir set the scene for the tableau in Scene II, with a reader continuing the Biblical version of the shepherds decision to follow the star, as found in St. Luke's gospel—"Let us now go . . . and they found Mary and Joseph and The Baby lying in a manger". The soul stirring hymn "Joy to the World" expressed the thrill which the "good tidings of great joy" brought to the hearts of believing shepherds.

Benediction Pronounced

Last, but by no means least, was the act of "Adoration", where the Kings of the East "opened their treasures" and offered their costly gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh, overshadowed by the presence of the guardian angel above the creche, as the children followed the Wise Men and knelt beside the manger, accompanied by the exultant strains of "O Come All Ye Faithful, Let us Adore Him, Christ The Lord".

The Franklin twins, Carolyn and Bobby, sang very sweetly "So Long Ago", after which the pianist, Mr. Alec Gordon led in the opening notes of the Recessional Hymn "The First Nowell". During the hush which followed the last distant strains, Dr. Bert Howard pronounced the benediction.

FARMERS' SNOW CLUB

Collingwood, Dec. 18 —(CP)— The "Snow Club" formed by farmers of nearby Nottawasaga's sixth line may sound from its title like a social affair—but its purpose is strictly useful. The farmers are interested in keeping the Duntroon-Stayner road open all winter, hence the snow club, in which members collected more than $200 to defray expenses of keeping the road clear.

GETS HIS PRESENTS BACK

London, Ont., Dec. 18 —(CP)— Ronald Stewart has his Christmas presents back. All he has to do is rewrap them because the thief who went "shopping" in the Stewart car didn't find what he wanted. Police said the presents, many opened, had been thrown from the car against a nearby building.

That Baffling Question of What Makes a Person Popular

Remember that Popularity Quiz? The list of questions about your likes and dislikes, your habits and hobbies, that so many of you wrote me for, filled out, and sent back for me to look over and tell you where your social weaknesses seemed to be?

So many of you wrote in for them that it has taken a long time to get anywhere near the bottom of the huge pile of filled-out quizzes and answer them all carefully. And incidentally, if any of you are still waiting for your answer, will you drop me a card and let me know, so that I can be sure I haven't overlooked any?

In the meantime, I thought you'd be interested to hear about why many people have social difficulties.

One striking fact that stood out like a red light was that most of the people who complained of loneliness and shyness and self-consciousness waited for others to make advances to them, instead of making friendly gestures themselves.

They rarely or never gave a party or included friends to their homes; never thought of starting the ball of a new friendship rolling by saying to some casual acquaintance in their office or school or neighborhood: "Let's go to the movies tomorrow night;" or "Let's have lunch together on such and such a day;" or "Don't you think it would be fun if we got up a crowd and all went to the football game, or the hockey match, or the skating rink Saturday afternoon?"

No; they never did any of the inviting, any of the suggesting, and so people forgot about them, and they sat at home brooding over their loneliness.

The moral of that, of course, is: If you want to win friends, don't always wait for the other fellow to make the first move. Start something yourself.

And another outstanding fact was that many shy and lonely people apparently never think of using a hobby as an entering wedge into a circle of friends.

In reply to the question of the quiz: "What are your hobbies?" innumberable people mentioned reading, collecting records, taking walks, going to the movies, playing the piano, sewing, sketching, swiming and a host of other things—one girl even said she liked housework better than anything else—any of which can be pursued alone, and evidently were by those who listed them as favorite pursuits.

Now since the very meaning of popularity is to know and be liked by many people, it is obvious that if you engage in a hobby all by yourself, it's not going to help toward achieving your real objective. But you can make it help you; turn it into a stepping stone toward becoming more popular.

So the moral of that is: Take up a hobby that offers you the opportunity to join a club or a class whose members all have the same interest. There are endless numbers of such these days, ranging from bridge clubs to jewelry-making courses, Spanish or other language groups, photography clubs, and so on. Look around and pick one out that you think would interest you. And if you don't see one that's right in line with your own special interest, apply Principle Number One, mentioned above and don't wait to have someone else start things. Start your own type of club yourself, and invite others to join.

Then there's a third important thing which helps make people popular that the quizzes showed was usually muffed by those who said they felt self-conscious in company. This came out when they replied to the question of whether or not they were able to take part in conversations about what's going on in the world. "Can you join in," the question asked, "or do you have to remain silent?" And most of them said they had to keep still.

Now if you haven't taken the trouble to keep informed, in a general way, on the thrilling things that are going on in today's world, it's no wonder that people think you are dumb and uninteresting. You have just as much time to read the papers as anyone else, and your opinion is just as valuable as that of the persons who's doing most of the talking at the party, and impressing the others no end.

And the moral of that is: Keep yourself sufficiently informed, in a general way, on current happenings so that you can make a contribution to any conversation at which you happen to be present that will be not necessarily learned, by any means, but intelligent; that will indicate to the others that there's something in your head besides a lot of air.

These, then, are three things that many people who feel lonely and left out are apt to neglect. If you're one of these people, better get busy right away. For all three things are easily remedied.

Improve on Nature? Rather!

Once upon a time the oldies used to tell the youngies that you could not improve upon nature. That was before the popularity of the lipstick. "Paint and powder" were supposed to makes a woman look like sin. Not much of that talk any more. Most of the old girls have joined the make-up parade. They don't feel or look like dodos. Yet now and then a stand-patter will protest against the use of artifice.

Nature does very well, we must acknowledge. But what if Nature has shortchanged you? She is an artist. She flings sunsets in western skies like gay scarves. She puts beautiful plumage on birds and white boots on the kitten's feet. In a thousand volumes her art work could not be catalogued. Yet few of her children come up to beauty par. There's always something. A famous movie magnate has announced that he has never yet seen a truly beautiful woman.

The loveliest head of hair would not qualify if it were not beautifully clean, brushed to a state of luster becomingly arranged.

Mama nature placed lovely pink sheathes upon our fingertips but she gave no guarantee that they would stay that way. We have to pet them, oil them and shine them to keep them in form. If the complexion is pale, we simulate the cutaneous rosebuds by using the rouge compact.

The girl who looks in the mirror when her hair is still wet from the shampoo, realizes that nature demands considerable help. Miss Stringy Locks is grateful for the permanent wave. Fancy having to go through life with a mop resembling a pile of jackstraws. It would be too, too dreadful.

Physicians and surgeons lend a hand when it comes to correcting Nature's errors. Teeth that crowded, not properly placed are put in order. Babies' bowed legs are straightened by the use of corrective shoes. Superfluous hair is removed skillfully and with no ill effects.

Pretty hands are almost entirely the result of carefuul attention and regard for graceful movements. The youthful figure is retained through proper dieting and regulated exercise.

It is to woman's credit that she makes herself attractive, hangs onto what good looks have been given her and camouflages defects. There's no virtue in plain appearance.

Fashion Flashes

A GOOD TONIC for the winter-weary wardrobe is a new hat. Palest beige felt is used for a high pillbox trimmed with pompoms of iridescent coq feathers and misted in pale rose veiling.

A STANDOUT amidst all the colorful glitter is the plain, perfectly-cut suit. Black woolen is used for a suit whose jacket has long, smooth lines and a fly front closing that starts from the high neck. Only speck of glitter is a tiny collar of jet beads. Skirt is slim. When jacket is doffed it reveals a white satin blouse scrolled in black jet beads.

THE FAVORITE color for formal evening events seems to be white—for frocks, wraps and furs. White and silver brocade is used for a beautiful frock with narrow silhouette and a side-slashed skirt that has a looped pouf and sash. The slightly slanting decolletage is strapless and has cuffed band detail. The cuffed band is repeated on long, matching mitts.

SOFT LINES mark some of the prettiest of the new pure silk prints. Brown scrolls on a white ground is used for a pretty resort frock with a high, cowled neckline and elbow-length cape sleeves.

THE BRIDGE between the felts and furs of winter and the straws of Spring is the fabric hat. A beauty is a softly draped turban of light blue satin, done on softly rising line, with a scarf drape of black, Chantilly type lace. Equally pretty in rose and black.

MOVING UP into popular acceptance is skunk, dyed in such shades as stone marten and platina. Nice for budget-priced jackets for Spring wear, they are seen with such detail as scalloped hemlines and mandarin slits on sleeves and hemlines. Skunk dyed in new shades is a nice alternative to the cheaper versions of silver fox and wears much better.

New Soapless VEL Makes Suds Old Fashioned

by Frances Thompson
noted homemaking authority

Have you tried soapless VEL yet? It's the newest thing in washing helps. Over a million dollars have been spent in developing this new cleanser. It does everything that any good soap will do—yet it is not soap and doesn't act like soap.

OUTCLEANS— OUTLASTS SOAP SUDS

When you add warm—or even cool water to VEL, it forms light, billowy suds instantly. But just like a frothy drink, the bubbly foam soon subsides, leaving a clear solution that cuts grease and lifts out dirt in double-quick time.

WATER STAYS CLEAR

Unlike the cloudy, milky-white water which soap produces, VEL keeps the water almost transparent so that you can see what you are doing . . . see the things you are washing. A teaspoonful or so of VEL in the dishpan quickly dissolves grease making that inevitable chore of dishwashing less tedious. VEL contains no soap so leaves no soapy scum—makes china and glassware sparkle so that drying is unnecessary.

VEL LIFTS OUT DIRT

VEL literally lifts out the dirt from soiled clothes and deposits it at the bottom of basin or wash tub. Lack of suds has nothing to do with VEL's new and scientific cleansing action, so don't contrast it with soap products. You need have no fear of VEL's effect on colours or fabrics for it's a mild gentle cleanser which is as safe for woolens and nylons as it is for the weekly family wash.

WONDERFUL FOR FLOORS— WOODWORK

For the speedy removal of greasy dirt from floors, walls and woodwork, just put about a tablespoonful or two of soapless VEL in a pail and add hot or warm water. You'll find VEL makes hard rubbing and rinsing unnecessary.

THOROUGHLY TESTED

My own rigid tests with soapless VEL prove that it's foolish to cling to old-fashioned ideas about suds. And don't think VEL is just a temporary substitute for soap. It has a permanent place of its own in every home.

Cancel 1948 Dies

In some industry sources General Motors' recent cancellation of orders for 1948 model dies is seen as laying the pattern for the industry's strategy for the next two years. As these sources view it, this contemplates sustaining the demand for lower priced cars by avoiding any engineering or design advances that would add to their cost.

Withholding the changes originally planned for 1948 models was the only way, say these authorities, that a runaway upsurge in prices for the less expensive models could be avoided. It is considered significant in this connection that in disclosing the tool and die cancellation, General Motors President C. E. Wilson said the action would affect Chevrolet, Pontiac and Oldsmobile; no mention was made of Buick and Cadillac.

Not Many Changes

If the assumptions in industry circles prove correct nothing more than "face-lifting" changes again will be in prospect for cars in the lower-priced brackets, while alterations may be made in the upper-middle and higher priced models.

Automotive experts figure that General Motors' cancellation of tool and die work for most of its 1948 models effected a saving of about $50,000,000 in next year's budget.

Other manufacturers can make good use of similar savings; there will be no excess profits tax credits to offset losses next year.

School Teachers Receive Bruises When Hit by Car

Bancroft (Special)—Miss Emily Price and Miss Kay Dawson, of the Bancroft school teaching staff, received bruises and shock Tuesday evening when they were struck by a car as they were walking on the roadway inside the village.

Owing to the slippery sidewalk the girls were walking on the roadway where they were knocked down by a car being driven by Archie Woodcock whose vision had been obstructed by the lights of a truck parked near The Times office. The driver swung out from behind the truck, the bumper and fender of the car striking the girls who were knocked to the pavement.

The girls were treated for bruises and shock at the office of Dr. S. S. Lumb and later were permitted to return to their homes. Constable Roy Robinson investigated the accident.

Urge Conference To Seek Solution Of China's Strife

Washington, Dec. 18 —(AP)— Republican Senator Ralph Flanders of Vermont and Democratic Senator James Murray of Montana joined today in urging an international conference to seek a solution of China's internal strife, proposing that Gen. George C. Marshall preside over the meeting which they said could be called within the framework of the United Nations.

"The situation in China is critical," the Senators declared. "Widespread civil war threatens an indefinite period of chaos and destruction."

"Representatives of all important political parties in China should be permitted to participate in the government of China, and America, Russia and Britain, the most important countries in China's foreign relations, should declare themselves out of Chinese politics."

The senators said "it is known" that Communist forces are not receiving Russian supplies, although they are capturing United States army equipment from their opponents.

"American supplies," they said, "have been identified in the eyes of all Chinese as the major factor in perpetuating a chronic and indecisive civil war. As a further and inevitable consequence, a spreading tide of anti-American feeling is undermining the traditional friendship between the American and Chinese peoples."

Strike Opposed By Union Men Court is Told

Windsor, Ont., Dec. 18 (CP)—The summer-long strike at Chrysler Corporation plants here and in Chatham, Ont., was opposed by three union officials being tried for "conspiracy to beset," one of them testified yesterday.

Thomas MacLean, Assistant Canadian Director, United Auto Workers (CIO) testified for the defence, said "I told the men it was unwise to take a strike vote but to let negotiations continue."

Similar stands had been taken by George Burt, the other accused, Canadian U.W.A. Director, and Harry Rooney, Union Plant Chairman at Chrysler.

The case continues today before Judge E. A. [illegible] and an Essex County General Sessions Jury.

MacLean said he had told plant workers "we were not instructed as leaders of the union to advise a strike at Chrysler's at that time (last June)." As a result the union membership had called him a "pork-chopper" which, he told the court, meant "yellow."

After the strike started June 18 he said, there had been union-management discussions about permitting foreman to work inside the plant clearing debris left by a tornado the day previous.

"Mr. Burt and I explained about these matters that as far as the foremen were concerned we felt they should go back to work as they couldn't make cars," he said.

Robert B. Bridge, Vice-President and General Works Manager of the plant at that time, earlier had said foreman had been prevented from entering the works.

"Power in the union rests with the membership, doesn't it?" asked defence counsel Maj. H. Clark.

Mr. Bridge replied: "I don't know, we did business with the top men."

AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE RATES IN ONTARIO

Effective January 1, 1947

Due to the increase in traffic accidents and the cost of repairing automobiles it has been found necessary to make certain increases in Automobile Insurance rates for the Province of Ontario effective January 1, 1947.

Following the termination of gasoline rationing, rate adjustments were made restoring premiums, generally speaking, to pre-war levels. However, the average cost of Bodily Injury, Property Damage or Collision losses has increased since 1939 from 15% to 40%, depending upon the type of coverage.

In the first nine months of 1946 traffic accidents have increased 36% over the first nine months of 1945.

Comparison of Traffic Accidents in Ontario

First Nine Months	1945	1946	Increase
Accidents	8,683	11,866	36%
Property damage (to Aug. 31)	$1,179,574	$1,891,635	60%
Persons killed	385	453	17%
Persons injured	6,563	8,707	32%
Cars registered	656,563	689,672	5%

If traffic accidents and loss costs continue to increase, it is inevitable that Automobile insurance rates will have to be raised still further.

There will be an increase in rates in Bodily Injury, Property Damage and Collision premiums, and a decrease in Fire and Theft premiums in certain territories. These changes in rates will not affect existing policies until their renewal.

Full particulars about the new rates may be obtained from your insurance agent.

Won't Centralize Power in Ottawa Says Col. Drew

Toronto, Dec. 18—(CP) — The federal and Ontario leaders of the Progressive Conservative party—John Bracken and Premier Drew of Ontario — were both scheduled to speak this afternoon at meetings of the Provincial Associations continued. They will address the women's division of the Ontario Progressive Conservative party.

Keynote of the provincial policy at least was set forth in the speech Premier Drew made yesterday to the meeting of the Young Progressive Conservative Association, when he told delegates of this division — mostly under 25 years of age — that so long as he heads the Ontario government there is not the slightest chance of Ontario signing any Dominion-Provincial agreement "which would centralize power in the hands of an incompetent government in Ottawa."

He added: "This province will never so long as I am head of the government sign any agreement with the Dominion that gives them one speck of authority to tell us what we are to do. And we shall continue for some time to operate here with a full sense of our responsibilities, and continue to carry out our duties under the constitution, without being told by Mr. King or any of his assistants what we can do."

The Federal government, he said, would not get very far in establishing unity and stability across Canada unless Ontario and Quebec were given agreements they could sign. The two provinces had 63 per cent of the population of Canada.

The Young Progressive Conservative Association later defeated a motion saying that the Union Jack is Canada's only flag but agreed the Union Jack should be incorporated into the design of a distinctive national flag.

VETERAN MURDERED SAYS DETECTIVE

Pittston, Pa., Dec. 18 — (AP) — A 26-year-old war veteran whose battered body was found near railroad tracks in the business section, was murdered, John Loughney, Luzerne county detective, announced today. Loughney fixed robbery as the motive for the slaying of Michael Amatia, 26, after Amatia's wallet was found to be missing.

Game Wardens Continue Probe Of Beaver Pelts

Sudbury, Dec. 18 —(CP)— Game wardens continued their check-up into handling of beaver pelts allegedly taken out-of-season and overseers said weekend investigations uncovered fresh evidence of illegal activities.

No legal action has yet been taken against four fur dealers in the North Bay, Sudbury and Mattawa districts at whose premises game wardens said last week they found large quantities of illegally taken pelts.

District Forester James Taylor of Gogama said that in his area some of the pelts seized appeared to have been taken last April, shortly after the spring break-up. He said charges would be laid later this week against trappers alleged to have caught the beaver illegally.

Game officials at North Bay announced last week that surprise raids on the fur dealers led to seizure of upwards of 400 pelts, some of which were covered with blue mould. Appearance of the pelts convinced veteran wardens they had been taken weeks before the season opened Dec. 1.

Tells of Flogging In Prison Camp

Hamburg, Dec. 18 — (Reuters) — Mrs. Odette Sanson, 34-year-old Paris-born British agent who won the George Cross for bravery under Nazi torture, told of the flogging of women when the trial of 16 members of the staff of the Ravensbruck concentration camp was resumed here Monday.

Almost every night women were flogged in a punishment cell next to hers, she said. They were given 15, 20 or 25 lashes, and when they fainted water was thrown over them and floggings continued. She heard the blows and the screams.

Mrs. Sanson said she "impressed" the Gestapo by giving her name as Churchill, borrowing the name of Capt. Peter Churchill, her commanding officer and pretended he was her husband. Peter Churchill is a distant relative of Winston Churchill.

Mrs. Samson recently announced she shortly will marry Capt. Churchill.

Steeple, Belfry Of Church Burn

Merrickville, Dec. 18 (CP) — Fire yesterday destroyed the Merrickville United Church steeple and did considerable damage to the belfry and minister's office. The blaze was believed to have been caused by a spark from a chimney fire in a building about 90 feet away.

Firemen said they were hindered by lack of equipment, some of the town's hose and pumps having been left at Smiths Falls Monday, where the Merrickville crew aided in battling a 200,000 blaze which destroyed the Kerfoot apartment and retail store building.

Returning the assistance, members of the Smiths Falls department helped in the final stages of putting out the United Church fire.

The church, one of the largest in the Ottawa district, was built in 1890. No estimate of the damage was available, although it was reported to be covered by insurance.

Five Studio Pickets Change Pleas

Los Angeles, Dec. 18 — (AP) — Facing the prospect of a drawn-out trial, five of 208 film studio pickets charged with disturbing the peace in the current movie strike, changed pleas from innocent to guilty. They acted after a judge refused yesterday to permit defendants to be absent during selection of a jury. The five can receive possible maximum sentences of $500 fines or six months in jail.

Plan "New Deal" For Irish Nurses

Dublin—(CP)—A new "charter for Irish nurses" is envisaged in plans for improving wages and working conditions recommended in a circular sent out by the ministry for local government and public health.

Minimum pay for staff nurses should be £100 ($400) a year through Eire, the latter states, in addition to "normal rations, apartments, laundry and uniform."

Hours of work are governed by size of staffs, it says, but "so far as practicable, nurses should not be required to remain on duty for more than 96 hours a fortnight."

"These new rates and improvements may help to stop the rush from hospitals here to others in England," said one spokesman for the nurses.

Equip Special Home For Blind Infants

Auckland, N.Z. —(CP)— Sunrise Home for blind babies under six has been opened in Auckland as an adjunct of the Blind Institute, to care for the early training of the infants.

Special equipment and expert assistants have been obtained for the home. Blind children on admission are found to be very backward in learning to walk, talk, feed themselves and in other ways, but through care in developing their other senses they are already making rapid progress.

COW HAS TRIPLETS

Meadowvale, Ont., Dec. 18 — (CP) — Dairymen generally consider twin calves unusual but this week a 16-year-old Guernsey cow on the farm of Harry Sutton gave birth to triplets — all heifers. One calf died but the other two, strong and healthy, are doing well. Meadowvale is a Peel county community near Brampton.

Three Persons Burned in Fire

Brookline, Mass., Dec. 18—(AP)—Three persons — two brothers in their 20's and a 43-year-old mother of three — died and two men were injured in escaping early today during a fire which roared through a three-storey apartment building and penthouse.

Police listed the dead as Mrs. Thelma Starrett, first floor occupant and member of the family which owns the apartment house, and Robert and Rupert Lewis, 22 and 28, respectively, occupants of a third-floor suite.

The injured were Charles Alexander, 53, who leaped from a 3rd-floor window, and Joseph Lennon, who fell when he tried to descend the outside of the building from his third-floor apartment. Both were taken to hospital.

Firemen, estimating the damage at $40,000, said the flames apparently started in the lower part of the building.

TEACHERS GET BOOST

Ottawa, Dec. 18 — (CP) — The Public School Board has approved an annual salary boost of $200, effective Jan. 1, for principals, teachers, nurses, caretakers and other officials.

In addition, the Board also raised maximum salaries by $400 and minimum salaries by $200. They set the minimum salaries the maximum at $2,800. Minimum for women teachers at $1,400 and for men will be $1,800 and maximum $3,200.

THREE DIE IN FIRE

Detroit, Dec. 18. (CP)—Three persons died today in a fire which swept a two-storey frame rooming house and police were checking reports that two other persons are missing. The dead: Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Stincel, in whose room the blaze apparently started, and Charles Conrad, 74.

Fireman rescued Charles Bins, 56, overcome by smoke in a rear bedroom. As the bodies of Mr. and Mrs. Stincel and Conrad were removed, flames still were flickering in the victims' bedroom.

The landlady, Mrs. Annie McKee, 45, said she believed the fire started by a cigaret.

Expenses of Canadian Team To Prague Not Guaranteed By British Hockey Assoc.

Dr. Hardy Tells Canadian Press No Such Offer Ever Made

By JACK SULLIVAN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Dec. 18 (CP Cable)—John F. Ahearne, Secretary of the British Ice Hockey Association, said Tuesday the association has given no financial guarantee concerning the expenses of a Canadian team to attend world championships at Prague Feb. 15-23.

He told The Canadian Press he is "amazed" at the weekend announcement by Dr. W. G. Hardy of Edmonton, President of the International Ice Hockey Association, that Edmonton Canadians, a junior team, have accepted a B.I.H.A. financial offer enabling them to attend the championships.

"Dr. Hardy telephoned me from Edmonton last Friday and I made no such guarantee and no commitments," said Ahearne. "I am amazed."

Ahearne further said that official approval of the club by the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association is necessary before it will be allowed to take part in the championships. If C.A.H.A. approval is not forthcoming the team will not be allowed to play.

"All cables from this side in connection with a Canadian club went to Hanson Dowell (President of the C.A.H.A.) and Friday night was the first I heard from Dr. Hardy in connection with the tour.

"In my telephone conversation with Dr. Hardy I told him that due to the lateness of the decision for a Canadian tour it would be difficult, with consequent financial limitations, and I made tentative arrangements for some European games in Switzerland and Czechoslovakia, but I can't do anything definite until the C.A.H.A. has approved this team."

Following the telephone conversation Dr. Hardy sent this cable to Ahearne:

"Edmonton Canadians, runner-up western Canada junior championships last year willing come stop club paying transportation cost to club before return instead of keeping for C.A.H.A. As per phone conversation you will pay all transportation costs for party of 15 from New York back to New York also pocket money. Club informed no guarantee regarding bonus or amount of pocket money cable confirmation."

Ahearne's reply:

"No phone guarantee given only possibilities you undertook Canadian exhibition games cover return Edmonton-New York transportation with refund possibilities As explained lateness of decision makes tour difficult with consequent financial limitations Will cable further meeting this week and continental replies."

RED-HOT FIGHT BETWEEN DALLAS, TULSA CONTINUES

Both Teams Battle for Leadership of Southern Division

(By The Canadian Press)

The red-hot scramble between Tulsa and Dallas for Southern Division leadership in the United States Hockey League remained unchanged today, both teams still deadlocked.

Tulsa last night set back Minneapolis Millers, Northern Division leaders, 6-3, while Dallas pushed Hapless Houston deeper into the cellar 5-1.

The Minneapolis loss left the Millers in a first place Northern Division tie with idle Omaha.

Tulsa and Minneapolis got off to a slow start in the first period ending with a one-goal lead for the Oilers, but in a scoring spurt in the second Tulsa's Scotty Mair and Maurice Vaillancourt of the Millers counted a pair of tallies each.

Joe Sadler, Bud Hellyer, Johnnie Ubriaco, Pete Kapusta chalked up the other Oilers' tallies with Maurice Vaillancourt bringing in the third count for Minneapolis.

Armstrong helped the Texans score twice in the last period. The teams were tied at one all at the end of the second, but in the final Dallas broke loose to outdistance its opponent.

The Texas net-crashers were Laurie Peterson, Lloyd Frinkbeiner, Ken McKenzie, Lou Smrke and Bobby Thorpe while Ducky Skinner got Houston's only goal.

Sports Roundup

By ALAN HARVEY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New York, Dec. 18 — (CP) — The tapped telephone wires which led to the arrest of 28-year-old Alvin J. Paris may be less valuable to the authorities in the case against the Broadway man-about-town than to the United States sporting public as a spotlight on the wartime growth of illicit gambling . . . The bribery charges against Paris, described by police as front man for a New Jersey betting syndicate of "considerable means," conceivably might spark a drive to remove the evils of an "industry" whose activities eclipse the scope of bootlegging . . . In this post-war era betting ranks ahead of motion pictures, steel and automobiles for financial turnover, with devotion to the dollar replacing the starry-eyed adulation for sports heroes which marked the golden age of the '20s.

"Washed," But Not Clean

The performers still draw a little play in the papers and such sporting frills as statistics and strategy aren't overlooked altogether, but the sharp-faced men with the powerful bankrolls have moved into the arenas and auditoriums with such authority that betting terms require a special section in the glossary of sport . . . The bull-rings sound now with soft-spoken terms like "wash" and "6-5, give-or-take 10 points the Bears" . . . observers estimate between $20,000,000 and $100,000,000 was wagered on last Sunday's championship between Chicago Bears and New York Giants, the game Paris is charged with attempting to fix . . . The Bears were rated 10 points better than the Giants and the familiar 6-5 odds meant that the spectator, whether he liked the Giants or the Bears, put up $6 and the bookmaker laid $5, with a 10-point margin accorded the bettor if he took New York . . . Since the final score was 24-14 for Chicago, the 10-point wagering margin added to the Giant total made the betting score 24-24, thus cancelling all bets and creating what bookmakers term a "wash."

Chips Off The Sports Block

By George H. Carver, Sports Editor

According to the groupings of the Ontario Hockey Association yesterday, it appears as though teams from this city got the well-known run-around, or perhaps the Greeks had a better word for it. What has actually happened is merely a series of games between Kingston squads and those from this balliwick. There should be long and loud squawks from the master-minds of the squads here if not only for the fact that both teams wearing the colors of Belleville will have two strikes on them before they put stick to puck.

Kingston teams have been gallivanting over ice surfaces for some time now and will be at peak form by the time OHA group schedules start. And the way weather conditions are at present and in the near future, there is a possibility that the Belleville crews may be forced to start without a practice.

Without detracting from the Kingston clubs, the Intermediate picture insofar as the "A's" are concerned looks to be a sorry one. The colorful Peterborough and Oshawa squads not to mention Whitby will be conspicuous by their absence as they are designated in another grouping.

Just what the reason is, we are at a loss to understand. Oshawa Legion has been grouped with Brantford, St. Catharines and Kitchener. To say that the reason is distance is ridiculous. It is not a bit farther from here to Oshawa or Whitby than it was a year ago, or from Peterborough for that matter.

Kingston and Oshawa are the only two places in this district with artificial ice. Peterboro, like Belleville is forced to resort to natural ice, although the Petes have to travel out of town to get that. But that is not the point. Fans in this city like hockey as well as those in other towns and they are entitled to see their share of outside squads. The present set-up is, as was mentioned before, merely an inter-city series between Kingston and Belleville with the Limestone City getting the breaks all the way around.

Of course if the Intermediate "B" teams from Trenton Air Station and Mountain View play their home games here, there is a chance of the fans seeing some outside ice battles. But there is a strong possibility that these games may be played on another ice surface.

The Ontario Hockey Association ruled that "due to unsettled conditions Intermediate "A" clubs will be allowed three imports this season" while in addition it warned that next year O.H.A. regulations would be in effect.

Tommy Pedder, diminutive but husky 1938-39 Canadian and United States bantamweight champion weight-lifter, is once more going to give his favorite pastime the once over, and thinks he can gather a Belleville district team that should go a long way along the championship trail.

At least Tommy who ranked with the best of the good little men just prior to the war, is organizing a weight-lifting squad at his physical culture studios on East Moira Street at the city limits or you can reach him by phone at 3026-W.

Tommy came up the hard way and not only learned the art of his favorite sport but also discovered that he had training ability. He has already proven that in 1939 one of his pupils Jack Cooper won the Canadian heavyweight title and later covered himself with glory in the United States.

This year Jimmy Varcieux sought Tommy's uncanny training methods and six weeks later, on September 3rd, to be exact, Varcieux won the Canadian light heavyweight title in Montreal. Tommy feels that he is better than ever this year and is willing to go all out, if sufficient people are interested to train and take a Belleville team to the top.

Official weights in organized weight lifting are: bantamweight, 123 3-4 lbs limit; lightweight, 148 3-4 lbs; featherweight, 132 1-4 lbs; middleweight, 165 3-4 lbs; light heavy, weight, 181 1-4 lbs and heavyweight, over 181 1-4 pounds. So if you're interested in this popular sport get in touch with M'sieu Pedder he will give you all the info necessary.

Mr. Lou Novikoff, the Mad Russian, faded quietly back to the Pacific Coast League last season. A sensational hitter in minor league play, the Clouting Cossack came a cropper with the Chicago Cubs. He was popular with the fans, but impotent at the plate.

There never was a more spectacular steal of third base in the entire history of the game than the one Mr. Novikoff made one night. It was exquisitely done, but Manager Charley Grimm failed to appreciate it—because of the trifling reason that the bases were loaded at the time.

But Loole, the light-hearted, explained it fully.

"I couldn't resist, Charley," said the sheepish Slav, "I got such a great jump on the pitcher."

Regina, Dec. 18 — (CP) — Joe Potts carefully studied every word in baseball's "bible," The Sporting News. He re-read every item about Connie Mack's Philadelphia Athletics.

The 68-year-old Regina barber and baseball authority told friends he was living only for the day the Athletics won another World Series pennant.

But the news that Connie was going all out for a 1947 title came about 24 hours too late. Joe collapsed of a heart attack in his shop and died shortly after entering hospital here last Thursday.

Hockey, too, was high on the list of interests of the former arbiter of sport in Regina. To his shop came all the controversies as well as the celebrities.

From Dick Irvin, Montreal Canadiens' coach and one of his closest friends came the tribute: ". . . Joe was a keen sportsman who loved to win but could also take a beating . . . I know of no one in the sports world who got a greater thrill out of meeting celebrities, particularly in baseball and hockey . . . I have met many people who were fortunate enough to have met Joe and who always asked about his welfare . . ."

Regina Capitals' coach, Bill Hunter, burst into the Western Canada Hockey League this season with a roar of enthusiasm which has turned often into a bleat of pain.

Under other tutelage the Caps didn't win a game last year. They have improved this year with 3 victories, 12 defeats and one tie.

Last week the bleat was turning to a roar again as Tank Kummerfield, 215-pound Winnipeg product, acquired recently to bolster the unhappy defence, dished up some hip work that pleased both fans and Hunter.

Other newcomers who promised to lead Regina from the cellar were Bud Ritchie, a hard-working defenceman from Flin Flon, Man., and Dutch Van Deelan.

To top it all Harry Mosienko, brother of Chicago Black Hawks' Bill, signed with Caps when his re-instatement to amateur ranks from the St. Paul sextet of the United States League, was O.K.'d by the National Hockey League.

Hunter beamed as the Caps held Calgary Stampeders to a 1-1 tie. But the axe fell again at Edmonton when Caps not only took a 4-1 licking but lost the services for at least one month of Toby Brown, fleet forward and 20-point man, who fractured his arm in the first five minutes of the game.

It was Friday the 13th.

OFFERING CLUB SHARES FOR SALE

Buffalo, N.Y., Dec. 18—(AP)—Buffalo Bisons of the National Basketball League seek to overcome a financial loss by offering club shares for sale and free tickets to buyers.

General manager Leo F. Ferris announced yesterday that the team has "suffered a financial loss" and that the ticket gift was aimed at "putting more people in Memorial Auditorium."

"We're offering 30 of our 100 shares for sale at $1,000 apiece and with each share goes 1,000 tax free tickets to our next two home games Dec. 25 and 28," said Ferris.

Toronto, Dec. 18 (CP)—Judge J. C. M. German was admitted to the Western Hospital here late yesterday for treatment for diabetes. The judge of Northumberland and Durham counties had won freedom on bond yesterday pending appeal against his conviction at Cobourg Saturday on charges of drunken driving and dangerous driving, for which he had been sentenced to 30 days in jail and fined $250.

Judge German, 57, has been under treatment for diabetes for the past 30 months.

What's Doing in Sport

(By The Canadian Press)

W. A. Hewitt, registrar of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association, said yesterday he had received no complaint from James P. McCaffrey, manager of the Ottawa Senators of the Quebec Senior League regarding loss of two of his players — Jim McFadden and Les Hickey — to a professional club.

Tony Zale, United States middleweight boxing champion who returned from the U. S. Navy to defend his title against Rocky Graziano with a sixth-round knockout in one of the most sensational brawls in New York boxing history last June, has been awarded the Edward J. Neil Memorial Trophy as the man who did the most for the fight game in 1946.

Bruce Woodcock, British heavyweight boxing champion, tuned for a bout with Joe Baksi of Kulpmont, Pa., early next year by scoring a technical knockout over Swedish heavyweight Nils Andersson in London last night.

Don Bradman and Sid Barnes with identical scores of 234 paced Australia to a 571 first-innings score to give them a commanding lead over England in the second test match. England, all out for 255 in the first innings, put on 153 for two wickets in their second try.

Steve Belloise of New York grabbed a split decision over Henry Brimm of Buffalo in the 10-round middleweight feature of a Buffalo boxing card last night.

A program has been launched by the Incorporate Canadian Racing Association to improve the breed of Canadian racing stock by turning brood mares and foals over to farmers to be cared for with the assistance of funds made available by the Ontario government's rebate on part of its tax on provincial tracks this summer.

FORMER BOXER FAR FROM DEAD

New York, Dec. 18 — (CP) — Frank Erne glanced today at newspaper clippings reporting his death in an automobile accident, chuckled, and said:

"I'm not ready for the slab yet."

Now a fuel salesman, the 71-year-old man who won the United States lightweight boxing championship from Kid Lavigne in 1900 and lost it to Joe Gans 2 years later at the International Athletic Club in Fort Erie, Ont., said he still is "in the best of health" and hopes to live to be 90.

Explaining published reports Saturday of his "death" in San Bernardino, Calif., Erne said that two years ago he learned that an admirer in California was "going around saying he was me."

The admirer, it developed, was Frank Ellsworth, a hospital cook whose pockets were found stuffed with clippings about the real Frank Erne.

Erne, who once fought against George Dixon, Young Griffo and Terry McGovern, retired from professional boxing in 1905 after 13 years and 115 bouts.

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

A problem hand is usually solved by plays that are unusual. It is so with the puzzler that has been dangling here. The cards are as shown here:

North
♠ A Q 8 6 5 4 3
♥ Q
♦ None

West
♠ K J 9 7 2
♥ None
♦ Q J 8

East
♠ None
♥ 10 9 4 3
♣ K 8 5 4

South
♠ 10
♥ J 7 6
♣ A 7 3

Nine cards are in each hand. Sit south as declarer at no-trump. The lead is now in your south hand. Take seven of these remaining nine tricks. Do this against anything the opponents may do.

There is a way of stopping you if you start with the lead that seems obvious; a spade. The solution is with some other lead. Start out with the lead of your diamond ace.

On your diamond ace throw away the queen of hearts from dummy hand. Next lead your heart six. On it sluff the nine of clubs from the dummy. This clears the tracks for your later plays.

Suppose east wins your six with the nine of hearts. If he comes back a heart, win it and lead your smallest club. This will throw the east hand right back into the lead again.

Take his return heart and your ace of clubs. All this consumes six tricks, four of which have been taken by you. East has won two.

You must lose no more. Nor will you.

By this time west is down to three cards. If he has no diamond, take your diamond and a spade finesse for the rest. If he has left a diamond, he has only two spades. Your spade finesse makes the rest.

When east takes heart six, he may return a high club. In that case, refuse to win it and take the next. This develops into the same situation as the other.

When you lead heart six, east may refuse to win it. Then lead a small club and refuse to take his first high club return. It comes to the same thing as either of the others.

Pull this on your bridge club and they will think you are good.

The Movie Column

By HELEN BANNERMAN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

The heroism of the little people of France is getting a hand on the screen these days with the release of two films, a feature that unreels like a documentary, and a real documentary telling parts of the stories of the French resistance and the underground under Nazi occupation.

"Jericho," a French feature production glorifying the resistand the Royal Air Force, depicts French plans to blow up a German oil train at an unnamed town which the distributors identify as Amiens. The German conquerors, expecting such action, take 50 hostages from the innocent townsfolk. After deliberation the resistance leaders decide to carry out the original plan.

A blue to the way out of the unhappy situation is contained in the title, for the R.A.F. answer the appeal of the maquis with "Operation Jericho", a mission in which bombers breach the walls of the jail before the hostages can be executed. Here fiction approaches fact for the R.A.F. carried out just such an operation during the war to liberate prisoners held in jail at Amiens.

The film dallies in backwaters sometimes instead of surging on to the climax but the dialogue is that of real life.

The other celebration of the French resistance is a documentary, "Operation Underground", sponsored by the editors of Newsweek magazine, which reveals the story of how Allied fliers were smuggled out of occupied France.

The working of the Underground is shown, from the farmer who first shelters the three fliers who are the central figures to the clearing house in Paris and the final run over the frontier to safety.

Much of the film is real-life action photographed by maquis cameramen in occupied Paris and the climax comes when the camera follows them—two Americans and one Englishman with their French guide—on a conducted tour of the Nazi-occupied city. Some German soldierse in sight look curiously into the camera lens. Final shots re-unite the two Americans in New York.

AT THE BELLE

"Man Alive", Funny

A neglected wife, an old admirer, a jealous husband, an advise full of bad advice, a spiritualist seance, and a phony ghost, are just a few of the ingredients which make RKO Radio's "Man Alive", closing at the Belle Tonight, a most hilarious comedy. Pat O'Brien, Adolphe Menjou and Ellen Drew are starred and Rudy Vallee is featured.

"It Shouldn't Happen to a Dog"

Merry mayhem and riotous romance are the keynotes of the hilarious comedy farce 20th Century-Fox' "It Shouldn't Happen to a Dog", the second new comedy feature attraction on the same program, starring Carole Landis, Allyn Joslyn and an amazingly talented Doberman Pinscher who answers to "Rodney".

"Follow That Woman"

"Follow That Woman", Paramount's newest comedy-thriller, with the accent on thrills, is one of two new features coming to the Belle Tomorrow. This is another Pine-Thomas production and one that is in keeping with the high standards established in their action films.

William Gargan and Nancy Kelly are co-starred. The supporting cast includes Regis Toomey, Byron Barr, Ed. Gargan and Don Costello.

"Swamp Fire", Thrilling

Action and thrills are the keynote of Paramount's blazing adventure romance, "Swamp Fire", the companion feature attraction. Johnny Weismuller, star of the Tarzan pictures for thirteen years and Buster Crabbe are featured, with Carol Thurston and Virginia Grey the feminine romantic interest in the story.

"Popular Science" in Technicolor completes the program.

BOTH FATHERS HAPPY

Kansas City, Dec. 18 — (AP)— Two expectant fathers, Owen R. Davison and G. K. Harvey, compared notes to cool their nerves while waiting outside the hospital delivery room.

They discovered: both had sons aged five and three, and both wanted the third child to be a daughter.

Their conversation was interrupted when a nurse informed Davison he was the parent of a red-haired girl. Ten minutes later Harvey learned that he, too, had a daughter — also a red-[illegible]

Chicago Black Hawks Tangle With Detroit and Rangers Meet Bruins

By JACK MITCHELL

With the bounty on live player talent leaving hardly a cornerlot rink unscouted, the necessity of getting there "first with the most" was emphasized today in the plight of the National Hockey League's Chicago Black Hawks.

The $100,000 bait that owner Bill Tobin recently dangled for ready-made players to strengthen his last-place team fell on deaf ears. In effect, the other five clubs told him that players were too hard to find these days—they had to be caught young and weaned carefully.

The result was that the Hawks had to be content with one or two minor trades, in which player was traded for player.

If money were the big talking points in professional hockey these days, the Hawks would probbaly be at the top of the standing instead of the bottom. With the biggest rink in the circuit, gate admissions alone from the crowds of 17,000 and more that pack it for almost every game should see to that.

Instead, the Hawks meet up with Detroit Red Wings tonight as the "hungriest" team in the loop with their record of one victory and a tie in the last 11 starts.

The Red Wings, tied for fourth with New York Rangers, should prove no easy touch for Jack Adams' team is as victory-starved as the Hawks, although several ties make their recent record look a little better. It was Nov. 27 since Chicago last scored a victory, Nov. 23 since Detroit last finished on the long end of the count.

Since then, however, the Red Wings have played three ties, one a scoreless deadlock with the Hawks themselves in their last meeting.

With the league-leading Toronto Maple Leafs and the second place Montreal Canadiens, the other game gives Boston Bruins a chance to close in in third position.

The in-and-out Bruins play host to New York's Rangers and this one also should prove no soft touch. The Rangers are still smarting from the double weekend losses that cut their winning streak short.

A LETTER TO SANTA BY RADIO

Niagara Falls, Dec. 18 —(CP)— A little pale-faced boy walked into the police station at nearby Stamford the other day and asked radio operator Jack Goodfellow to relay a letter to Santa Claus. Jack consented — and found he had taken on a big job. He opened the letter and discovered a list ranging from Nylons to toys, estimated at $25 for the boy's brothers and sisters.

BOB DAVIDSON STARTS WITH TIE

(By The Canadian Press)

Bob Davidson, new temporary coach of St. Louis Flyers, cellar team of the Western Division of the American Hockey League, says that some conditioning and new plays "will make a difference" in the team—and he may be right.

At least he started off right last night, piloting the Flyers into a 2-2 tie with Hershey Bears, Eastern Division leaders, in his first game as St. Louis coach since coming from Toronto to replace Ralph Taylor.

Pat McCreavy brought home both Flyers' counts—the second less than two minutes before the end of play to guarantee a tie and the first on an assist from Pouzo and Harvey Fraser in the first stanza.

Lloyd Oronsdahl and Frank Mario chalked up the Hershey tallies.

Jimmy McFadden And Les Hickey Join the Bisons

Buffalo, N.Y., Dec. 18—(CP)— Dr. James J. Allinger, vice-president of the Buffalo Hockey Club of the American Hockey League, said last night that two Ottawa hockey players were expected to arrive here today for a trial with the pro club. He identified them as Jimmy McFadden, top-scoring centre star for Ottawa Senators in the Quebec Senior Hockey League, and Les Hickey, starry Senators' right-winger.

The club officials said that should they make the grade they will see service with the Buffalo squad against Providence Reds here tonight.

In Ottawa yesterday, officials of the Senators club said the departure of the two players followed a visit last week by Hap Emms, Bisons' scout. It was believed that if they did not make the grade they would play for Houston Skippers, Bison farm club in the United States Hockey League.

London, Dec. 18 — (AP)—"Analyzer," Moscow radio commentator and frequent critic of British and U. He said "the issue of a general armaments curtailment, raised on the initiative of the Soviet delegation, was undoubtedly the principal item on the agenda."

Little Benny's Note Book

We were eating supper, being lam stew without dumplings, and ma said to pop, Well William, you cant say women aren't sensible.

Cant I even think it? pop said, and ma said, Year after year our little bridge crowd have exchanged Chrissmas presents with one another as a sort of unwilling tradition, because when I say "exchanged" I imply the werd with a dubble meening.

For Peet sake do you meen they've been in the habit of taking their presents back to the stores and exchanging them for something else? pop said, and ma said, That's just what I meen, and it's given rise to bad feeling and sometimes even open dissention. The crowning blow came last year when Blantch Hipple and Sally Jardin met face to face at Hookbinders exchange desk in the red handed act of getting exchange credits for each other's gifts. Naturelly they hardly knew what to say, and I only wish I had been there to hear it, ma said.

So this year they've decided to be sensible and settle for an open exchange of Chrissmas cards, is that the plot? pop said, and ma said, Abslutely. We all agreed that Chrissmas giving should be a spirrit rather than a cold blooded exchange, and that it should be confined to the immediate family and outside children. We all felt very happy about it, and yet we were a little sad too, because after all it's been a habit of many years standing to present each other with a little something at Chrissmas time, and then Kitty Summers proposed the perfect solution. We're all going to send each other a department store credit slip for 2 dollers and 98 cents, in other werds the cost of an average price gift and we're going to meet downtown and have lunch at the Zipper Tea Room and then go on a buying spree with our sales slips, ma said.

There was a new coat that had its share in the felicity of these days; there was a round navy blue hat wreathed with daisies. The coat was not, indeed, as fine as the one Jennifer had seen in Stan Lichtenstein's room at the St. Francis, but she liked it even better. It was navy blue, lissome and light and just pleasantly rough to the touch; it had once cost somebody more than a hundred dollars; it cost Jennifer two.

Miss Shapiro had told her about it.

"My cousin Babette has gone into mourning and she's sending all her clothes to the Salvage Shop, and there's a Bond Street coat you ought to have. She got it in New York last year," said Jean Shapiro. "All the dresses at the shop are a dollar and all the coats are two, so if you want to stop up there with me this lunchtime I'll have it set aside for you."

That an unknown named Babette had worn the coat a few times in no way impaired its value to Jennifer. he bought it on sight and had thenceforward the pleasant feeling that she always had a good time when she wore the blue coat. But then this summer was filled with good times!

In July Mollie's mother asked her to spend her holidays at the lake. "At what lake? Not Tahoe?" Jennifer stammered in answer.

"No, not Tahoe; Fallen Leaf," Mollie said. "It's near Tahoe and we all like it better. Dad has a place up there."

It was as simple as that! One did not have to be in the Social Register, one did not have to belong to the Burlingame crowd, to go to the lake! All Jennifer's values began to shift and change, and every shift and change was toward happiness—toward an easier, simpler feeling about life. Life could be supremely satisfying even on very simple terms; in these days Jennifer would not have changed places with any of the girls who drifted into Vogelsang's in the morning and chattered of Hawaii and Palm Springs and Santa Barbara while they selected white linen frocks and daring bathing suits.

On a hot Friday afternoon she started with three or four others for a fortnight at Fallen Leaf Lake. Jim Lippincott was in the party, tired and silent and amiable; just the smile he gave her as he swung up her suitcase and helped her into the car was enough to transport Jennifer with a heady happiness that made the trip magic.

They drove away from the warm winds of the city, up through the chicken farms and past the great prison gates; they drove on and up into the lovely woods where the last light was uping on the shafts of the tall crowding redwoods. They dined at a little Italian place and went on again, into the dark, into the moonlight. And finally they were being welcomed into a wide plain cabin whose windows streamed hospitable light and where a late supper and fires and wide turned-down comfortable beds were awaiting them. And that night Jennifer was too tired to see very much else.

But to waken in the sweet still morning before the mist had quite risen from the lake, to hear clinking noises from the kitchen and catch whiffs of bacon and coffee, to get into light clothes and go out to the porch to look down at the blue water paneled between pine shafts and breathe the ozone of the clear warm air and get all the details of the summer morning—the geraniums framing the porch steps, the little lattice work fence, the small pier with a rowboat riding motionless at anchor with its own reflection motionless below it—she had never known happiness like this! A little launch came fussily over the blue mirror of the water, with a load of glittering fish; the mirror wavered and shivered to fragments; Jennifer leaned on the railing of the porch, steeped in a bliss that was beyond all analysis or even consciousness, and drank in the glory of the world as from an inexhaustible chalice.

"Aren't you swimming?" Joe Evans said, beside her. Evidently he was; he was wrapped in an old striped dressing gown and had a towel over his arm.

"Oh—oh yes! But I can't swim—but is it deep? I'd love it!" she stammered joyfully.

"It's shallow enough near the shore." Joe waited for her as she rushed back to get into her bathing suit; the before-breakfast dip became one of the happiest moments of the day. But they were all happy.

They would come back up the steep little brown path under the pines and junipers to shake their wet heads like puppies, scramble into other clothes, and sit down to breakfasts that began with a snatch popover or a wedge of cornbread, proceeded to orange juice and coffee and poached eggs, went back to corn bread and more coffee and a few purloined strawberries from the lunch provisions or a discovered melon that someone was hoarding. Everyone was seated for a part of the meal, at odd moments was coming and going between the table on the big side porch and the kitchen. The milkman came and was relieved or an incredible army of white milk bottles. Millie brought her baby out, fresh and powdered and rolled in a towel for her ten-o'clock bottle; the older baby, Sheila, wandered about on unsteady little sandals and was kissed on the top of her corn-silk hair by practically everybody.

Then there was an interval of dishwashing and bed making; the first went rapidly with the men helping; the second was more leisurely, for the girls continually paused for long gossipy intervals, and the various babies of the family and visitors absorbed much attention.

Then . . . well, if it was very hot there was a gathering in the shade of the pier, and more swimming. Or if it was softly foggy and dim they all walked in for the mail and loaded the truck with which Mollie or her mother followed them with whatever food they could find: fresh eggs from neighboring farms, broilers and peaches, corn and firm big scarlet tomatoes. At every meal Jennifer said in an undertone, "My favorite meat—dish—pudding—cake!" They seemed to be always eating, yet they brought gargantuan appetites to every meal. Most of the lunches were picnics, and if Jennifer liked one hour better than another it was the one in which they buttered buns and packed cookies in the kitchen with the glorious world outside waiting for their wandering feet.

Jim stayed only three days the first time, came up for another three days at the end of Jennifer's visit. On the last day they hired horses and a dozen of them rode for hours through the scented silent pine woods, lunched beside a strange lake miles away, came back in the late afternoon exhausted with sheer happiness.

Jennifer had said to herself that morning: "Perhaps this'll be the day."

Now, sharing baths and talks and rest with the girls of the group, she moved her absorbing hope just a little farther on.

"Perhaps tonight. . . .if we sit on the steps and sing. . . .or if we take the boat out. . . ."

She was rather silent at supper through excitement and expectation. What the others said came to her somewhat vaguely; she was conscious only of Jim, who had gone down to the shore for a long swim after their all-day trip, whose tawny hair was still wet, who seemed almost as preoccupied as herself. Mollie's mother lamented audibly the sorrow of last times. The lake wouldn't seem the same place with Mollie and Jennifer gone; couldn't they stretch it a bit and take another three days?

"I'd lose my job," Jennifer answered.

"And I'd lose my husband," said Mollie. Jim said nothing in words, but he faintly, regretfully shook his head. His holiday was over too.

The evening went by in moonlight sweetness and beauty. Joe Evans, on the step below her, never left Jennifer's knee. She rested a friendly little hand on his hair; she really loved Joe without ever wanting to make him love her. Joe was in a sentimental mood tonight. No matter he was staying on with his mother, and this was the last night.

Jim might stand up at any minute and say, "Come on, Jennifer, let's walk up around the meadow." Mollie might suggest a walk, but Mollie was too tired to stir. She had packed up everything for herself and the babies and was meditating only upon the question of how soon she could decently collapse into bed. Mrs. Evans and the nice Swedish doctor who had come up with Jim, and the two girls of the party, sat on and on. And after a while Mollie said, "Come on, let's break it up. We're all completely exhausted and we have to make an early start tomorrow."

"Jim's asleep now," said his Swedish friend, and although Jim denied it vigorously he did not protest against being led in to bed

And the next day was a complete loss. Jim was not going to say anything on this day, that was evident from the start. He was driving the car, and Dr. Nielsen sat next next to him on the front seat; obviously the place for Jennifer was with Mollie in the back seat, where she could be of some use with the babies on the long trip.

They started at seven, lunched on sandwiches in the car, and as rapidly as possible reversed the wonderful unrolling of the trip up to the lake country—down through the mountain pines, down between the little hillside farms dotted with the white specks that were a million chickens, down through the oven of the Yolo Valley to the cold foggy winds blowing in the Golden Gate and the already lighted arch of lights over the bridge.

Jennifer was to stay with Mollie that night. The men left them at the doorway of Mollie's house at Ingleside Terrace; Mollie's husband rushed joyfully out to handle baggage and welcome home his wife and the sleeping babies; the doctors must come in for a drink, Dan said. No, the doctors couldn't; they had a big day coming up tomorrow; they called out their good-byes, and Jenifer went into the house with Mollie.

He was in the same city with her, that was something. He might come into Vogelsang's at any minute and stand watching her for a few minutes and then come over with his slow smile and ask her if she could come have lunch or dinner with him. But he didn't, and the weeks went by, and presently she learned that he had gone to Pasadena. Didn't she know that? He was at the hospital there. And he'd gone without a good-bye!

But Jennifer went on dreaming. Every dream began and ended with him. He might come around every street corner. A letter from him might arrive any morning: "Jennifer dear, I didn't quite dare ask you. . . ."

She flew to the telephone like one possessed; she listened eagerly to any scrap of of talk about him that the others interchanged. He was tremendously admired by all of them; Jennifer knew that they saw in him something unusual, and she saw it too. He was not just another person in the group; he was Jim. He never thought of her, she knew that too. But she could think of nobody else but him.

Now and then she went to see Betty reinstated in the old role of wife. Clint was apparently not only prospering but reformed Faddy and Elna seemed to Jennifer rather pathetic little souls caught in the trap of the dingy school, the sordid little flat, the limited ambitions of their group. But they appeared absorbed and contented enough in the drab environment of the crowded little dining room where the old sights and the old smells smote upon Jennifer like a troubled remembered dream. Nothing was changed. The picture of "September Morn," the drop-head sewing machine, giving out its old odor of warm oil, the red wallpaper paneled in black, the familiar dust on the radio and the chair rugs, the familiar grimy outlook from the double window—an outlook on autumn dusk and the backs of huddled apartments with their flimsy wooden stairways, their garbage barrels and their kitchen windows—how well she knew it all!

She felt like a traitor, going back to the Floods' home where there was a wash of bright setting sunlight slanting in across the potted geraniums in the glassed porch and everything in the kitchen that was not white paint was shinning copper or scrubbed woodwork or the housewifely checks of clean tea towels. Jennifer could look back upon the girl she had been a few years ago, troubled, an outsider, bewildered by the inaccessibility of all she wanted from life, and wonder what miracle had wrought the change. Why was she now so free, so interested and confident and gay, so satisfied with just that portion that had fallen to her? Why did love even Vogelsang's unnatural atmosphere and the women who came in to pay fifty dollars for a bottle of perfume and eighty dollars for a blouse?

Well, loving Jim with all her awakened heart and soul had something to do with it, of course. But there was more to it, too. She had not only discovered the man who meant more to her and would always mean more to her than any other in the world, but she discovered herself.

Work of Signal Corps Explained To Kiwanis Club

Brigadier A. Genet, now retired from the Canadian Army and former Officer Commanding of the Signal Corps and who served in both Great Wars, explained in detail the composition and work of that Corps to members of the Kiwanis Club at their weekly luncheon at the Hotel Quinte on Tuesday. The members were full of the Christmas spirit collections being taken for two projects and a goodly sum for each was realized. Miss Hest Gerald Jenkins, who caters to the wants of the inner man each Tuesday was sincerely thanked for the fine turkey dinner that was given "on the house." It was a splendid gesture and the delightful dinner was most thoroughly enjoyed by the members.

The members will meet at the Bowl-O-Drome on Friday night for the turkey roll promoted by the Ways and Means chairman Ted Schwab. It is understood that the high total will not necessarily win a turkey. All are asked to put in an appearance at ten in the evening and enjoy the fun. Archie Harris, a director of the club, is leaving the city to accept a higher post with the Bell Telephone Company and he was bidden farewell by the president and members at the luncheon. His worth to the club was particularly stressed by Mark Vanner as Archie has been a great worker for the Boys' Camp at Roblin's Lake since its inception. Len Dandino, the next highest in the voting at the time of election for directors will take Archie's place on the Board.

Served 34 Years

Brigadier Genet, introduced by Everett Fairman stated he had served 34 years in the Canadian Army and all with the Signal Corps and on retirement liked the Bay of Quinte district so well that he had permanently settled in the area and was enjoying the simple life immensely. He explained that the Signal Corps was better equipped than any department of the army to take up their task when war was declared and that in 1938 while on a staff course in Britain he had been told that war was only months away. Brig. Genet was sent over with the Canadian Headquarters staff and remained with that unit until the end of hostilities.

Not Canada's Fault

"It was not the fault of the Canadian officials that the Army spent so long in England on their arrival but at the request of the British government" said the speaker. "The Canadians were the only trained troops in Britain and that country did not have enough to protect their own shores." He claimed the Signal Corps was never short of personnel and that the [illegible] recruits were in the unit. He stated there were 6,000 in the headquarters staff made up of two eschelons and it was quite a problem all through the war to keep up the communications with the other corps that were the fighting units. "It was quite all right while the Army was stationary but when it started to move the troubles of the Signal Corps began" said Brig. Genet. "The first move ordered in France was 35 miles and I strenuously objected but we compromised on 70 miles" laughingly stated the speaker.

Laid 20 Miles a Day

He showed how the corps laid 20 miles of communications a day or 24 hours and that the Corps moved every ten or 15 days. He claimed the switchboard handled 150 calls an hour at the peak and never during the war was communications broken down. He told how the Rhine and Seine rivers were crossed with cables and confessed that the Germans were quite clever, but in some instances quite stupid. "They always blew up the telephone exchange but always managed to leave the cables and it was no trouble to hook up our equipment on these cables. He praised the Signal Corps for their teamwork in the war and expressed the opinion that Canada must maintain a small permanent force and that Canadians should take an interest in the defence of their own country. Kiwanis appreciation was expressed by Fred Symons.

GOVERNMENT

Mr. Dugdale's reply, made in answer to a question by J. P. L. Thomas, Conservative, said the Red Fleet report had been read with "considerable feeling" by the British government.

He announced that the Admiralty is circulating a long technical account of the operation.

Bill of Rights Declared Invalid

Edmonton, Dec. 18 — —(CP)— The Appellate Division of the Alberta Supreme Court in a judgment released Tuesday found that a section of the Alberta Bill of Rights is invalid.

The five judges were unanimous in their finding that part two was beyond the powers of the provincial legislature, but they decided part one was valid.

The bill was the latest attempt by the province's Social Credit government to institute its "philosophy." All previous legislation calculated to implement Social Credit theories and passed by the government since it was elected in 1935 had been declared unconstitutional by the courts.

This bill approved by the legis-

Part one, "a statutory declaration of the just rights and responsibilities of the citizens of Alberta," provided for pensions for unemployment and old age, education and medical benefits, and social security payments to give each adult Albertan a minimum annual income of $600.

A five-man board of credit commissioners was authorized by part two which the government said deals with methods by which rights set out in part one "can be realized in actual experience." The second section provided for licensing of chartered bank branches and set out penalties of from $1,000 to $5,000 for each day of non-licenced operation.

Before the appeal court, Attorney-General Lucien Maynard had argued the bill differs from previous Social Credit legislation particularly the outlawed 1937 Social Credit Act, in that it involves no new medium of exchange and no control of trade or the legislation was within the province's jurisdiction because it dealt with "credit which is inseparably linked with property and civil rights," both provincial prerogatives.

Counsel for the Dominion government and the Canadian Bankers' Association urging the bill be declared ultra vires of the Alberta government, told the court that it is essentially banking legislation and therefore infringes on federal jurisdiction.

Alberta government spokesmen said the bill would ensure control of credit by the provincial government through issuance of "Alberta credit certificates," which they compared with Dominion government bonds.

The spokesmen have not outlined details of the certificates would be used beyond saying they would not be used by individuals and that they would have to be used by banks as collateral in creating credit.

British Brides Like this Country

Toronto, Dec. 18. (CP) — Although those "darned Canadian in-laws" came in for criticism, British war brides arriving here Monday had little sympathy for contemporaries who blamed war veteran husbands for Canadian housing shortages on their arrival back in "blighty."

Claiming that lack of homes is just as bad in England, one bride said "several of my girl friends arrived back in London because they couldn't get along with their husbands' families. They didn't like the idea of having to live in the same quarters as their in-laws. I think their people in England feel that they should have been willing to accept the housing shortage in pitality before," said one pretty blonde from Surrey.

(Last Thursday in a letter to the Liverpool Post, Senator W. Rupert Davies, publisher of The Kingston Whig-Standard, referred to a front-page story headed: "Heartbreak ship here once more; brides again back from Canada."

(In his letter, Senator Davies suggested that "instead of plastering a three-column heading on your front page about disillusionment of a few returning brides, you try to find out something about the thousands of English girls who have found there happiness and contentment.")

Many brides expected to be welcomed in Toronto by below-zero weather and stepped off trains wearing woollen slacks and parkas. One of them, Mrs. J. F. Holmes, expressed her disappointment because "there isn't any snow".

$3,000,000 Loss As Grain Elevator Goes Up in Smoke

Three Million Bushels Barley Lost in the Conflagration

Minneapolis, Dec. 19 (AP)—A spectacular fire with flames shooting more than 150 feet into the air and visible for several miles destroyed the Union Grain Elevator filled with nearly 3,000,000 bushels of grain today. Early reports were that the elevator was filled with barley and at current prices the loss was expected to run to more than $3,000,000.

A general alarm was sounded when the fire broke out after midnight and firemen from neighboring St. Paul were sent to man stations in the early morning hours as most of the city's fire equipment was sent to fight the conflagration in the 80-foot-tall, two-block-long structure.

Firemen succeeded in preventing the flames from spreading to nearby grain elevators in the immediate vicinity in the southeastern sections of the city. The fire was brought under control after about four hours although it was expected to burn several days.

The building was owned by the Froedtert Grain and Malting Company, of Milwaukee. Immediately the cause of the fire was not determined but it was believed to have started from grain which became overheated when it clogged in a chute.

Must Provide Wife Home Other Than With His Parents

Kingston, Dec. 19 — (CP) — Despite the housing shortage, a husband is legally bound to provide a home for his wife elsewhere than in his parents' residence, Mr. Justice P. E. F. Smily has ruled.

He made the ruling yesterday as he dismissed with costs to the defendant an action brought by Arthur K. Twigg of Kingston, former Canadian Army lieutenant, for annulment of his marriage to Elizabeth McCusker Twigg of Glasgow, Scotland. The couple were married in Glasgow in August, 1942.

Evidence taken by a commissioner in Glasgow and sent to the court here was that Mrs. Twigg refused to live with her husband in his parents' home but would live with him if he provided a separate residence.

Twigg told the court his wife refused to come to Canada to live with him. He claimed he and his wife lived together only four or five days in Great Britain. He said the marriage was not consummated.

M. Justice Smily said that it was "a nice gesture" for parents to invite daughters-in-law or sons-in-law to live with them but as a rule the arrangement did not work out well. More marriages broke on the rock of family trouble than through any other cause.

A husband is obliged to provide a home for his wife "even if of only one or two rooms, separate from her husband's parents," Mr. Justice Smily said.

Churchill Plans Vote of Censure On Labor Govt.

London, Dec. 19 (AP)—Winston Churchill today accused the Labor Government of "tyranny, conceit and incompetence," and announced he would call next month for a parliamentary vote or censure on his charges.

Churchill's announcement came as Prime Minister Attlee's party announced new plans to boss British farmers and prepared to take over the country's 20,000 mile railway system.

As leader of the Conservative opposition, Churchill said he would demand a parliamentary debate to arraign the government when parliament reassembles Jan. 21 after a month's Christmas holiday.

A vote of censure is not so severe as a vote of lack of confidence, but its passage would amount almost to the same thing. If carried it would force either a change of government policy or resignation of the government. However, Labor controls more than 60 per cent of parliament's 640 seats and Churchill's motion undoubtedly will be defeated decisively, as was a previous censure motion.

Anniversary Marked Exactly to Second Century After Event

Toronto, Dec. 19 (CP). — One hundred years to the day after the opening of the first telegraph line between Toronto and Hamilton, Mayor R. H. Saunders at noon today sent a message of greeting to Mayor Samuel Lawrence of Hamilton during a ceremony marking the anniversary.

To ensure that today's message went on the wires exactly 100 years after the first one, employees of Canadian National Telegraphs calculated the difference between the solar time used in 1846 and the present standard time system. It worked out to 17 minutes and 37 seconds.

Family at Hotel Costs Toronto $360 a Month

Toronto, Dec. 19 (CP). — One family with 10 children is living in a Toronto hotel at a cost to the city of $360 a month, Controller H. E. McCallum told a special meeting of Board of Control which last night unsuccessfully attempted to solve the problem of undesirable tenants of emergency housing units.

Welfare Commissioner A. W. Laver explained that eight or nine families composed of 32 persons altogether are housed in Toronto hotels at city cost awaiting transfer to emergency housing quarters.

In virtually all cases these families have insufficient funds to pay for accommodation. Where the family is able to pay the bill, the city requires them to do so. The families are moved out of the hotels as soon as converted suites are ready in buildings now being reconstructed at Malton and other places.

Beverage Rooms To Close at 6.30 Christmas Eve

Toronto, Dec. 19 (CP)—All hotel beverage rooms are to close at 6:30 p.m. Christmas Eve, the Ontario Liquor License Board announced today. Clubs are exempted from the order. It will be the first time that such a pre-Christmas early closing has been ordered. A spokesman declined to say whether there was any special reason for the order.

Heavy Cuts in Electricity and Gas Add to Nasty Weather Discomfort

By MONTAGUE TAYLOR

London, Dec. 19 — (Reuters) — Shivering Londoners and their neighbors of the home counties, having weathered days of fog and traffic chaos, had another cold douche today — heavy cuts in electricity and gas.

More than 6,000,000 Londoners awoke to face the cold snap and the chilling news that three gas companies had ordered 10 per cent cuts. People in central and southeastern areas of England had the additional shock that their electricity had been cut by 10 per cent, too. Other areas learned they had to face a five per cent cut. Consumers were warned that cuts are likely to go on during the present cold spell.

Three reasons are given for the reduction — coal stocks are low; gas plants are operating 24 hours a day but labor and material for maintenance and replacements are lacking, while plants damaged in the war have not been replaced; consumers are using about 28 per cent more gas than in 1939.

Housewives were able to find some mild reassurance in the fact that an electricity board official said the position could be described as "easier," for people seemed to be responding to the appeal to economize.

Discussing the electricity cuts, a Board official said "The country is critically short of power-producing plants of every kind today. The whole national effort was diverted to the forces so all work on the replenishment of electrical equipment had to stop. We had planned new plant and equipment for 900,000 kilowatts to come into operation this year, but to date we have only 200,000."

Installation of a 6,000,000-kilowatt plant has been planned by 1950, he revealed, but the equipment is still being made and it will take several years before it begins to produce sufficient power to have a marked effect on the situation.

Electricity cuts are not due to coal shortage yet, the official said. Thousands of British housewives bought extra electric appliances on which during an emergency they could cook and with which they could heat the home. The housewives play an important role in the fact that the demand for electricity in Britain today is 67 per cent above the 1938 figure.

FIVE NEGROES PERISH IN FIRE AT PHILADELPHIA

40 Others Injured And More Than 100 Are Forced From Hotel In Freezing Weather

Philadelphia, Dec. 19 —(AP)— Five Negroes perished and more than 40 others were injured as fire swept the first floor of a low-priced South Philadelphia hotel, forcing more than 100 residents from the four-storey building in near-freezing weather.

Fire Marshal George Gallagher said a preliminary investigation of the fire which gutted the ground floor of Abe's Hotel, indicated it originated from a lighted cigarette in one of the rooms.

Most of the fire victims, none of whom have been identified yet, died in first floor rooms.

Carnegie Lester, 37, night manager, said many of the 150 persons registered in the hotel's 67 rooms, escaped from upper floors by fire escapes.

However, many guests fled to the top floor. As the flames gained headway and smoke reached the roof, one man jumped, seriously injuring himself. Firemen reached the roof in time to prevent others from following him.

Three of the injured, carried from first floor rooms, were reported in critical condition at mid-city hospitals where officials said one is not expected to live.

United States Presses for Quick Vote on Proposal

Lake Success, N.Y., Dec. 19 (AP).—The United States, with the declared or apparent support of most of the United Nations Security Council, will press today for a quick vote on its proposal to send a commission to investigate conditions on both sides of the northern border of Greece.

Herschel Johnson, U.S. Security Council representative and current president of the body, offered a resolution to create the commission yesterday and would have sought a vote then if Russian representative Andrei Gromyko had not protested against an afternoon session.

Creation of the investigating commission is a substantive matter under terms of the U.N. charter and, therefore, requires a unanimous vote of the Security Council members.

Gromyko expressed no opinion of the Johnson resolution. He objected to holding an afternoon meeting as Johnson suggested, apparently in an effort to obtain a quick decision, on the ground that an afternoon meeting had not been planned and it would be inconvenient for him to attend. The meeting then was set for this morning.

The commission would travel to Greece and cross the border into Yugoslavia, Albania and Bulgaria to determine facts of Greek charges that her neighbors are interfering with her domestic affairs and counter charges by the accused against the Greek government. It would be composed of representatives of Britain, the U. S., Russia, France, China, Brazil and Poland under Johnson's proposal.

Russian Officer Blamed By Pravda for Criticism Of Operation of Convoy

Moscow, Dec. 19 (AP).—A Russian naval officer who wrote an article for Red Fleet recently accusing the Royal Navy of mishandling a convoy to Archangel in 1942 was called to task today by the Communist Party organ Pravda for having given "an incorrect, one-sided picture" of the operation.

Pravda said the article, by Capt. Secon Rank V. Andrev, "merits criticism", but objected to foreign commentators "trying to raise a furore about the article by representing it is 'a campaign of Soviet propaganda' directed against Britain."

(John Dugdale, British Admiralty Financial Secretary, told the House of Commons in London on Tuesday that the Red Fleet article "appears to impugn not merely the naval tactics of the convoy but also the courage of the British and American seamen who took part in it." Dugdale said the convoy in question was "admittedly one of the least fortunate", but added that "not all operations of war are successful, and we have a right to expect that the efforts of the Royal Navy in the common cause should not be decried.")

The Soviet state and public, Pravda said, have "appraised at their worth both the competent operations of the Allied fleets and the indubitable courage of the seamen of Britain and the United States."

DUPLESSIS GOVT. CAPTURES BAGOT FROM LIBERALS

Montreal Lawyer Given 1,000 Majority in Rural Riding

St. Liboire, Que., Dec. 19. — (CP)—The Union Nationale Government headed by Premier Maurice Duplessis counted its by-election victories at three straight today—all gains from rival groups.

The rural riding of Bagot yesterday returned a youthful Montreal lawyer, Daniel Johnson, to the Quebec legislature with a plurality of more than 1,000 votes.

Dr. Roland Bailly, country doctor, chosen by the Liberals to defend a seat the party had held with one exception since the turn of the century, was defeated by a margin greater than ever recorded before in a constituency where close elections had been the rule.

When Returning Officer Hermas Cardin last night decided to call it a day, four polls out of 49 were unreported, and the vote stood: Mr. Johnson, 4,301; Dr. Bailly, 3,278; Georges deGrandpre, Independent, 36.

The successful candidate's plurality of 1,023 shattered a 27-year-old mark of 769 set in 1919 by the Liberals. It compared with a Liberal plurality of 127 votes in the 1944 general election when the late Cyrille Dumaine polled 3,781 against 3,654 for Dr. Philippe Adam, Union Nationale, and 479 for Mr. deGrandpre, then running under the Bloc Populaire banner.

The clearcut triumph for Mr. Duplessis and his party in its emphatic tone rivalled the two previous by-elections held since the general election: in Beauce, where a small Liberal margin in the general election was turned into a 6,000 majority for the Union Nationale candidate, and in Compton, where the Duplessis Government nominee came through with a 2,500-vote margin in a seat previously held by the Bloc Populaire.

Premier Duplessis will meet the legislature when it convenes Feb. 12, with a Party standing of 51 in the 91-member House, an increase of three from the 1944 general election. The Liberals will have 34 and now politically dormant Bloc Populaire three, with one Nationalist, one C.C.F., and one vacancy.

Both Premier Duplessis and Liberal Leader Adelard Godbout spoke twice in the riding during the campaign, the Union Nationale leader made Dominion-Provincial relations and Provincial autonomy the keynote of his speeches. Mr. Godbout charged Federal issues were being used as a smokescreen to fade out the government's administrative record in the Province.

Bilbo's Former Secretary Tells Of Threat on Life

Washington, Dec. 19 —(AP)— Edward P. Terry, former secretary to Senator Theodore Bilbo (Dem.-Miss.), testified yesterday that A. B. Friend told him last April that if he told what he knew about his former boss he would be killed.

He said that Friend, a war contractor and Bilbo's campaign manager in last summer's primary election, delivered the warning to him while entertaining Terry and his wife at dinner in a Mississippi hotel.

He quoted Friend as saying: "Ed, if you take any part in this campaign or tell what you know on Senator Bilbo you'll be killed."

YOUTHS' DREAMS OF ADVENTURE END AT BORDER

First Canadians Are Brought Back by Plane for Deportation

Detroit, Dec. 19 (CP). — Nine Ontario youths stepped from a United States Army transport plane here last night and were escorted back to Canada under guard. Eight dreams of adventure and one of courtship were ended, at least temporarily.

The nine, first Canadians to be flown to the Canadian border for deportation: John Clarke, Gordon Blackwell and Albert Goodman, Ottawa; Richard Moir and Jack Abbot, Hamilton; Alfred B. Watts and Ralph J. Flaxman, Toronto; Morris Miller, Thamesville, and George Southgate, Brantford.

Clarke entered the United States a year ago, obtained a $15 a day job in a hospital at Stanton, Va., pushed on to Texas, was jailed—and quickly released—during investigation of the "phantom killer" slayings in Texarkana, "settled" in San Antonio. He sold his automobile, fell in love with Maxine Graham, and arranged wedding details.

"Two hours before it's to come off I'm arrested," he said. "Yeah, Maxine is coming to Canada as soon as she can. We're going to be married in Ottawa."

Blackwell and Goodman headed southwest for the bright lights of Hollywood — and got as far as alien detention barracks in San Pedro, Cal.

Moir and Abbott reached Texas —and were whisked back to the Dominion because they took a railway constable at his word. At Amarillo the constable told them: "Just come along peacefully and we'll see you get a passport and travel along some other way instead of by box car". A few minutes later they were sharing a cell with five suspected murderers, they said.

Best part of the return home was the generosity of Richard H. Brondyke, deportation chief here. He knew the youths' case histories —knew they'd be hungry and broke. From his own pocket he produced money for the meals they wanted.

Moir said: "It was the first full meal I've had in five months."

One immigration official remarked: "It's tough to have to do this to the kids. They probably weren't doing any harm, just looking for excitement. Maybe some of them have found it."

The plane in which they were returned to Canada left San Francisco Tuesday, stopped at the Mexican border before coming here, and went on to New York. It was the first experiment at deportation by plane and officials heralded the plan as a time and money saver.

Canadian Papers Circulation Over 3,000,000 Daily

Toronto, Dec. 19. (CP)—Combined circulation of Canadian daily newspapers now is more than 3,000,000 copies daily, the Canadian Daily Newspaper Association reported today. Gain in circulation has been steady since 1939, but today's figures exceed that year's by nearly 1,000,000.

The gain has been made despite a 50-per cent increase in newsprint prices during the last two years, and a 20-per cent jump in labor costs which forced many dailies to increase their price to the public.

Increased circulation in member papers, the Association said, is good news to advertisers because milline rates now are at a new low.

THIRD SESSION 20TH PARLIAMENT OPENS ON JAN. 30

Expected to Feature Lengthy Battle On Contentious Issue Of Retaining Controls

Ottawa, Dec. 19 —(CP)— The third session of the 20th parliament, expected to feature a lengthy battle on the contentious issue of whether controls should be retained, will open Thursday, Jan. 30.

The opening date was disclosed last night by Prime Minister Mackenzie King in a brief announcement made following a cabinet meeting at which the government also is believed to have considered the legislative program for the new session.

The January date is in line with Mr. King's promise to opposing political parties at the last session, which dated from March 14 to Aug. 30, that parliament would be opened before the end of January.

The present standing of parties in the 245-seat House is: Liberals 124; Progressive Conservatives 67; C.C.F. 28; Social Credit 13; others 11, and vacancies two. This standing will be changed by the result of Dec. 23 by-election in the Quebec riding of Richelieu-Vercheres. A second by-election is pending in Halifax constituency but it is not expected to be held until after the House rises.

Two Possible Courses.

Outstanding items on the legislative program are expected to be bills dealing with the continuation of controls which the government feels should be retained.

Informed sources say the Cabinet has been giving thought to two possible courses — either to ask parliament to continue the Emergency Transitional Powers Act for another year as a temporary measure or to submit a series of bills to give statutory form to controls being retained.

One source expressed belief the Cabinet would introduce several bills to give members of parliament time to study them and then ask for continuation of the Powers Act until the new legislation could be considered more thoroughly.

One likely control bill will be a measure to give the government authority to continue the present system under which the Canadian Wheat Board buys and sells all wheat at fixed prices. This could be done by amendment to the Wheat Board Act.

Police Use $5,000 As Bait to Hold Two Suspects

Montreal, Dec. 19 —(CP)— A Provincial Police trap set early Wednesday with $5,000 cash as bait netted two suspects who allegedly had threatened to kill the wealthy owner of a chain of dairies unless he appeared at a specified place on St. Catharine Street East with the money wrapped in a brown parcel.

Detectives kept the appointment instead. One walked up and down the street, carrying the money in $20 bills wrapped in a brown parcel. His partner kept vigil from the other side of the street.

Both men were taken into custody and charged with extortion.

They gave their names as Jacques Noonan, 21, and Alban Choquette, both of no given address.

MAY DEVALUE DOLLAR

Ottawa, Dec. 19 — (CP)—Rumors current on the Montreal Stock Exchange yesterday that the Canadian dollar might be devalued brought neither confirmation nor denial from Bank of Canada or government sources here. Similar reports have cropped up from time to time since the Canadian dollar was brought to par with the United States dollar during the last session of parliament.

100,000-Foot Climb Planned Into Stratosphere With Balloons

Inyokern, Calif., Dec. 19 (AP). —An ascent nearly 19 miles into the stratosphere is planned for 1947 at the Naval Ordnance Testing Station here.

The 100,000-foot climb, to be attempted with special balloons carrying scientists and their complicated instruments, will be in search of new discoveries on cosmic rays, which contain particles with 5,000,000 times as much energy as those in the atomic bomb.

New kinds of particles, different from the protons, neutrons, electrons and other things familiar to atom smashers, are sought. Scientists are particularly interested in mesotron, a powerful but short-lived component of rays found at present research levels and a product of nuclear disintegration of a type never achieved by scientists.

Sen. Bilbo Denies He Ever Sought Gifts or Funds

Tells of Personal Financial Matters at Investigation

Washington, Dec. 19 —(AP)— Senator Theodore Bilbo (Dem.-Miss.) declared at his war contracts investigation today that he never had sought gifts or funds "with the possible exception of the money that I borrowed to make a property settlement with my ex-wife."

Bilbo said evidence to date showed "that I am a very poor man and heavily involved in debt and that I received during all the period that the investigation has covered but two Christmas gifts, one an automobile and the other living room furniture consisting of a sofa, three floor lamps and two table lamps."

Bilbo began reading his statement after a brief discussion with the Senate War Investigating Sub-Committee as to whether interruptions should be allowed in his testimony.

Speaking somewhat indistinctly because he is unable to wear his lower dental plate, Bilbo said "it will take about an hour" to read the statement.

Week of Testimony.

He took the stand after a tumultuous week of testimony regarding thousands of dollars in campaign contributions, alimony payments and gifts of an expensive automobile, a new home, an artificial lake and an elaborate Baptist Church personage on his Mississippi plantation.

Bilbo said all the charges against him had been raised by Ross A. Collins, former Mississippi congressman, and his ex-secretary, Edward P. Terry.

All the charges, he said, were fully discussed in the recent Mississippi election, in which he emerged victorious over four primary opponents.

The issues were raised in his State by two groups, he went on, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and an "Oust-Bilbo Committee" in New York City.

He said he learned early in life that he must buy all the land he could on credit.

Owes Bank $22,500

As a result, Bilbo said he now owes two banks about $22,500 on mortgages. All went well until he had to settle $21,750 for alimony in 1938, the Senator said, for which "I borrowed every dollar."

Of his former secretary, Bilbo said Terry "has been so free with his wild, hazy, vicious and traitorous hallucinations."

Terry yesterday told of being threatened with death if he testified against his former boss. Continuing, Bilbo said:

"They want Bilbo destroyed and unseated because of my convictions and ideologies which are opposed to the great objectives of the all-out Negro groups and Communist groups in America."

Bilbo said Terry and Collins had jointed forces in producing an anti-Bilbo circular "which I have read and analyzed" and in which I find at least 25 separate, distinct, contemptible, pusillanimous and limocolous lies."

(Limicolous: "Living in mud.")

Bilbo poured out contempt for Collins, saying he "has been the most thoroughly, completely and everlastingly condemned, damned, and repudiated man in the history of the State."

Two Escape From Jail at Kenora

Kenora, Ont., Dec. 19 (CP)—Two prisoners escaped from the Provincial jail here early today after seizing a guard through the bars of the cell and grabbing his keys to the block. The men, John Deguyse, 18, and Albert Copenace, 22, an Indian, both awaiting trial for automobile theft, were reported to be heading toward Lake of the Woods.

Wallace Calls On U.S. to Stop Making A-Bombs

New York, Dec. 19 (CP)—Henry Wallace, recently appointed editor of New Republic, called on the United States today to stop making atom bombs.

In an editorial in the current (Dec. 23) issue of the magazine, the former United States Vice-President said the U.S. should turn over those atomic bombs already made to an international tribunal so that they can be held in the United States in trust until the United Nations organization disarmament resolution is given practical effect.

Declaring that Russia wants peace and that delegates of the Soviet Union to U.N. made more concessions than other participating powers in the General Assembly, Wallace said:

"The Russians have met us halfway. Why don't we step out now and meet them more than halfway? Count the bombs! Stop making the bombs! Offer to turn bombs already made, and the supply of fissionable material out of which they can be made, over to an international tribunal so that the bombs can be kept in escrow here on United States soil until such time as the U.N. resolution of disarmament is given practical effect."

Man is Held For Questioning In Fatal Shooting

Renfrew, Dec. 19 — (CP) — Provincial Police said today they were holding Cornelius Madigan, 60, for questioning following the fatal shooting last night of David Green, 49-year-old bush foreman for the Wilson Lumber Company.

Inspector T. W. Cousans said details were skimpy, but from preliminary investigation it was believed Green was shot and killed by Madigan when he was mistaken for a prowler on the Madigan farm near Slate Falls, 55 miles west of here.

Madigan first was brought to Renfrew, but later was taken to Napanee as the scene of the shooting, in Lennox-Addington counties, falls within jurisdiction of provincial police there.

In a statement to police, Madigan said he saw someone moving near a barn. He called "Stop or I'll shoot" and when the man failed to obey Madigan fired a high-powered hunting rifle.

COULD LEARN DEMOCRACY

San Francisco, Dec. 19 — (AP) — A plan to bring German newspapermen to the United States, to learn democracy by working for one year on American newspapers, has been disclosed by Paul C. Smith, editor of the San Francisco Chronicle, who recently returned from an army-sponsored trip through Europe. It can be set in motion, Smith said, once a peace treaty with Germany has been signed, and the status of former enemy Nationals has been fixed.

TRENTON RESIDENT IS FINED FOR IMPERSONATION

Pleading guilty to impersonation of a Provincial Police officer, a Trenton resident was assessed $15 and $5 costs by Magistrate T. Y. Wills in county police court Thursday morning. According to Cpl. Lorime, gate officer at the Trenton Air Station, the accused had come to his office and flashed a badge claiming to be a Provincial Police officer. Witness stated the accused had endeavored to use this means to get into the station to interview a civilian employee.

VENDOR FAILS TO DELIVER TREE

That it does not pay always to trust a stranger was discovered to her sorrow by a local housewife who early in the week paid for a Christmas tree on the local market, the vendor failing to deliver the tree to her house as promised.

Complaining to police the housewife stated the Christmas tree vendor had given his address as 328 Front Street. Police pointed out there was no such number in Belleville but promised investigation into the matter.

Stand Christmas Tree In Basin of Water To Reduce Fire Hazard

Amherst, Mass., Dec. 19 (AP) The best way to keep your Christmas tree from catching fire is to stand it in a basin of water, horticultural experts at Massachusetts State College say. Plain water, they said, is as good as any chemical for reducing the fire hazard.

SOME TO PAY DEARLY

Toronto, Dec. 19 —(CP)— Hotels classified as public houses under the new Ontario liquor regulations — meaning hotels not eligible for dining lounge and cocktail lounge licences — will pay heavily for the privilege of selling beer while providing a minimum of hotel services. The printed liquor regulations released yesterday show the public houses — as distinguished from dining lounges and lounges — will bear an increase from 25 per cent to more than 230 per cent in gallonage fees.

"VIEWING WITH ALARM" GOVERNMENT STATEMENT

St. Catharines, Dec. 19 —(CP) —A resolution "viewing with alarm" the federal government's statement that German prisoners of war would be allowed to stay in Canada as farm labor was passed by the Canadian Legion branch last night. "We should take care of our own before offering citizenship to men of a race responsible for the most devastating war in history," the resolution said.

Port Credit, Dec. 19 — (CP)— If you intend to pop a policeman on the head — don't leave your calling card. This was the experience of a nearby York township resident Wednesday. Police said they had him almost in a cell after arrest in connection with a careless driving charge when he struck a constable in the eye and ran out. Unfortunately for him the telltale card fell out of his pocket and he was later re-arrested.

E.O.M.E.A. Endorses Plans To Provide 60-Cycle Power

The executive of the Eastern Ontario Municipal Electric Association with members of the Hydro Commission of Ontario which included Ross Strike, of Bowmanville, R. T. Jeffrey, W. Hearn, J. Wallace and M. J. McHenry, all of Toronto, met in this city this week and officials from Toronto outlined the proposals to establish a standard frequency in Southern Ontario.

It was pointed out that the plans of the Commission call for an outlay in the future of $100,000,000 to provide further power and transmission facilities and it is advisable at this time to make a decision on whether it will be 60 or 25 cycles.

It will not be necessary to arrange any new financing to make the conversion, the executive were told. The funds will be provided by using the contingency reserves and by fixing the cost of power at the 1945 average plus five per cent.

Proposal Endorsed

It will also be some time before the work could be started as the required 60-cycle power will have to be provided. The executive endorsed the proposal and ordered that the information be forwarded to all the municipalities in the district and that they be asked to endorse their opinion in regard to the matter.

The question of power shortage was dealt with and it was pointed out that the situation was critical and if the citizens did not co-operate it would be necessary to issue mandatory orders.

The opinion was expressed that mandatory orders was the only satisfactory way to deal with the necessary curtailment as the voluntary efforts which have been tried in many municipalities had not met with success. While the time of peak load between 4.00 p.m. and 7.00 p.m. was the most acute time of the day, it was necessary to conserve power at all hours of the day and any saving no matter how small would be a help.

Hunters Astonished When Chance Shot Brings Down Large Owl

The wise old owl winged its way lazily through the wintry air near Jones Creek yesterday afternoon, looking for a pre-Christmas dinner of some tasty mice or perhaps a succulent rabbit.

He knew that the two humans crouched behind a fence away below him were looking for foxes. He noted the shotgun cradled in the arms of one of them, but he didn't give a hoot.

Then a puff of smoke mushroomed from the fence corner, a detonation blasted the air and something hit him a terrific blow in the chest. His talons stiffened and his weakening wings tried to hold him aloft. But his lifeblood stained the grey mass of feathers on his breast and he crashed to earth a lifeless mass.

But before he died, he opened his hooked beak, glassy eyes looking into those of his captors, and murmured "A wise old owl, eh, but these birds were 'wiser'. First time I knew that I resembled a fox".

And so that doughty pair of hunters, Hazen Stairs, and Arnold Dyer, tonsorial artists of the New Central Barber Shop, Front Street, got their only bag of an otherwise luckless afternoon of searching the elusive Brer Fox.

The owl was a large one and measured fifty-inches from wing tip to wing tip, and is on display in the barber shop window.

Paid For Their Fun

But they paid for their fun. They came home with blistered feet, torn pants, ruffled dignity and minus one of two hounds which they had taken along for fox identification.

They toured the woods near Point Anne walking miles in their search for their quarry. Disappointed there they mounted the family jalopy and drove to the vicinity of Jones Creek. It was here that one of the hounds decided to work alone and wandered off by himself. He had not returned to the Stairs' kennels at a late hour today.

Walking through the woods they had sat down to rest when the owl drifted lazily overhead. Mr. Dyer, not desirous of killing the big bird, drew a careful bead about thirty feet in front of it, in an effort to change its direction. The shot rang out and the two hunters, shading their eyes failed to see the bird.

"I guess it worked all right," quoth Mr. Dyer. A few seconds later they jumped in fright. A grey-feathered body crashed to the ground a few feet away from them.

They rubbed amazed eyes. "I'll swear," they chorused, "that we are the only hunters in the vicinity."

They were.

Collection Sent To Aid-Russia Fund in Toronto

Sydney, N.S., Dec. 19 —(CP)— A problem that has kept Mayor Jack MacLean and the Gorlovka Fund Committee in a dither for the last two months shifted west today with the announcement that the fund, collected in Sydney for the adopted Russian steel city of Gorlovka, had been sent to the Canadian Aid to Russia organization at Toronto.

Mayor MacLean, who made the announcement, wrote to Hon. Paul Martin, then secretary of state, two weeks ago, seeking advice on disposition of the $9,400 contributed by Sydney citizens in response to the Canadian Aid to Russia's "Adopt a City in Russia" appeal in 1943-44. The Soviet embassy at Ottawa and the Aid to Russia organization both had applied for the sum.

Mr. Martin turned the matter over to the federal charities department, which decided the money should be sent to Toronto.

Although there was a long delay in disposing of the fund there was compensation—bank interest added another $300 to the total.

Toronto — Harvey Skey, National Treasurer, Canadian Aid to Russia Fund, today said he had been informed by the federal department of charities that $9,400—plus $300 interest—collected by Sydney, N.S., citizens for the adopted Russian city of Gorlovka has been assigned to his organization here.

"We are expecting the money from day to day," he said, adding that it will be used for purchase of goods for relief purposes in Gorlovka and other Russian cities.

CHARGED WITH THEFT

Toronto, Dec. 19 —(CP)— Charged with stealing $17,000 from the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union (A.F.L.) while an official of the union in 1944 and 1945, Abraham Weingarten, 43, of Toronto was arrested last night on two charges laid by Louis Brass of New York, International auditor of the union. Union officials said Weingarten had resigned all official posts with the I.L.G.W.U. a year ago due to ill health and was expelled from the union last month for non-payment of dues.

Cost Accountants Hear G. Friesen Talk on Germany

The December meeting of the Society of Industrial and Cost Accountants, Bay of Quinte Chapter was held on Monday evening at the Hi-H-Q dining hall at which thirty members and guests enjoyed a delicious dinner.

Chairman Art Lockley presided and business was taken care of in noble fashion. Student Instruction Chairman Carl Casey gave a brief resume of the work being done by the group.

One of the most interesting talks of the year was given to the chapter by Mr. Gordon Friesen, Kitchener, formerly of this city. From the introduction it was learned that Mr. Friesen had served with the R.C.A.F. and in the latter days of the war was loaned to the British Government and went to Germany in April 1945 where he served in the capacity of Military Governor in a British zone. The speaker outlined the plan that was inaugurated in their attempt to help and reform "displaced persons."

Very few of us realized how thoroughly the Nazi regime had totalitarized the German people, and the importance of complete denazification. Mr. Friesen expressed his belief that the most efficient way to avert war is to be prepared for it, and at all times an international army should be maintained in strong force. The speaker was introduced by Bert Houston and the thanks and appreciation of the club was expressed by Don La France.

The January meeting will be held on the 20th instant at which Mr. J. W. McClellan will address the chapter on "Succession Duties, Estate Analysis and Wills."

Cheese Factory Meetings Order Of Day in District

With practically all plants closed for the season, annual cheese factory meetings are the order of the day in the Bay of Quinte district. In Hastings county all factories but one have closed for the season.

According to the weekly crop report of the Ontario Agricultural Department the rain of last week helped to fill swamps and to raise the water level in rivers and creeks. As many wells in the district were low the reserve water supply is welcomed by farmers. Springer cows are in strong demand by American buyers.

In Prince Edward County egg production is on the increase and the marketing of cockerels is about completed. There is an abundance of pea ensilage at the canning factories to augment farmers' feed supply. There has been very little movement of hay thus far in the season.

Fifty German Captives Leave Lethbridge Camp

Lethbridge, Alta., Dec. 19 — (CP) — Fifty German captives remaining at the large prisoner-of-war camp here are scheduled to leave tonight for a Canadian Army establishment at Monteith, where the 200 prisoners-of-war given permission to stay in Canada are to be assembled during the next few days.

In announcing the movement which will take the last Germans from the local camp, army officers here said that the establishment at Monteith had been selected for captives who are expected to receive special educational courses before their liberation to go into civilian employment in this country.

The establishment at Monteith was one of the first prisoner-of-war camps opened in Canada, going into operation in 1939. It was to be evacuated today by all captives except those remaining in the country after being carefully selected by the External Affairs Department and the military intelligence.

The final evacuation of Germans from the Lethbridge camp for Britain left yesterday in two special trains and are scheduled to sail from Halifax Sunday in the last contingent of prisoners-of-war from the Dominion. The contingent will consist of about 2,000 captives.

Those going to Monteith from the Lethbridge camp will travel in a special car attached to the evening's eastbound passenger train and their transfer will leave not a single German captive in Alberta.

Mine Operators May Confer With John L. Lewis

Washington, Dec. 19 (AP). — Spokesmen for major sections of the soft coal industry arranged a quiet meeting today, touching off quiet meeting today, touching off contract negotiations with John L. Lewis.

Although the representatives would not confirm the reports that they would discuss resumption of talks with the United Mine Workers' president, other industry and government officials suggested that such a gathering could hardly overlook the subject.

Some officials believe the operators, on the sidelines during the recent soft coal strike and legal battle, might find Lewis more agreeable to negotiating with them because:

1. Lewis lost his big push for a new contract with the government. Instead, he was found in contempt of court for trying to terminate his present contract with the government, and now is fighting in the Supreme Court fines of $10,000 against himself and $3,500,000 against the U.M.W.-A.F.L.

2. A contract with private operators now would remove the threat of a new walkout March 31, which was inherent in Lewis' letter to the 400,000 bituminous miners calling off the Nov. 21-Dec. 7 strike.

28 Cases Heard In Police Court

Trenton—In Trenton police court on Tuesday afternoon twenty-eight cases were brought before Magistrate T. Y. Wills and Gordon Robertson, Assistant Crown Attorney.

George Henry Webb, Water Street and Gordon Anderson, Front Street, appeared before the magistrate on a charge of stealing a number of valuable racing pigeons from the loft of a local citizen, were given suspended sentence for one year, after signing bond and making restitution of $20 per pigeon to the owner. They each paid $6.75 (costs of court). Both had previous police records.

Jean Dunbar, R. R. No. 1, Brighton, charged with stealing clothing to the amount of $59 from the house in which she was rooming. After taking the clothes she left town and was arrested in Peterborough and brought back to Trenton to stand trial. Suspended sentence for one year, paid the costs of court $17.50.

Ivan Stewart, Trenton, appeared on a charge of assaulting a police officer. He was given suspended sentence for one year, after signing bond and paying costs of court $13.75.

Clifford Shaw, Trenton, was fined $3 on a charge of common assault.

Papers May Share Higher Costs With Advertisers

New York, Dec. 19 — (CP) — The Wall Street Journal said in a front-page story yesterday that North American newspapers are preparing "to present bigger bills to their advertisers."

The financial newspaper said:

"Cost of gathering and printing news are sky-high, even by comparison with 1945. They are headed higher. Today, newspaper payrolls are an estimated 50 per cent loftier than in 1941 . . .

"Newsprint paper, second biggest cost factor, has jumped from $50 to $85 a ton in the same five-year span . . .

"Statistics like these give publishers the twiches. They think it high time again to share their cost troubles with advertisers in the form of higher rates."

Stock brokers pointed to the Journal story as a possible reason —albeit a weak one—for a spurt in paper stocks on the Toronto Exchange. They reasoned that higher advertising rates would encourage higher newsprint prices, thereby encouraging increased production.

Brotherhood

Christmastime is one of the periods of the year that call for the tangible evidences of the spirit of human brotherhood of all men and many a man has felt the impulse of that quality which so enriches the giver as well as the person who is the receiver of his benefaction. In his lines on mercy, the poet Shakespeare has spoken for all humanity as he praises that quality of sympathetic kindness and mercy in these words:

> "The quality of mercy is not strained,
> It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven
> Upon the place beneath: it is twice blest;
> It blesseth him that gives and him that takes;
> 'Tis mightiest in the mightiest."

The hand that brings cheer to those who are ill and lonely, in circumstance of need, to causes that depend upon the benefactions of men and women for their support and work becomes a blessing to the world and to his community.

Of such the great Teacher of Life said "Blessed are the merciful for they shall obtain mercy."

Fortunately there are many in all walks of life who possess this quality. It is seen at Christmastime but not then alone but in all seasons and it paves the way of life with blessings for humanity. Of many of these benefactions the world little knows for the benefactor rather hides himself in his gifts and in the works of philanthropy he performs, but many organizations know of thousands of these kindly deeds and courtesies, gifts given in the spirit of love.

Armor

Doctors were responsible for introducing the steel helmet for soldiers in World War I and just at the close of World War II had knowledge of body armor, said Dr. Edward D. Churchill this week at a meeting of the American College of Surgeons at Cleveland, as he advocated a new branch of medicine, preventive surgery, that would produce armor for soldiers and shielding devices for civilians. The armor it is his opinion would reduce the number of men killed in action by twelve per cent and the wounded by eight per cent.

During the early days of the war there was mention in the news of possible developments of armor to protect troops but the war ended before armor could be introduced in any area of land combat, he said. Flak suits were however developed, a sort of armor for the U. S. Air Force.

Dr. Churchill said, "As the military power of this country (the United States) depends upon highly specialized personnel operating extremely complicated weapons and machines, the military surgeon of the future must be an expert in the prevention of injury."

Pantomime

The usual "treat" for Britain's boys and girls at Christmas time is a visit to the pantomime. This is a very special kind of theatrical performance which is given, in London theatres and in the big provincial towns, every Yuletide. Amateur companies often perform them too. They are actually supposed to be for children, but grown-ups love them too. The story is always one of the old fairy tales or nursery rhymes. There are songs and music, ballet dancing, jokes and comic turns by clowns. Prime favorite of all, perhaps, is "Cinderella," the story of the neglected little stepdaughter who went to the ball, thanks to her fairy godmother, and married the prince. "Aladdin," the poor little Chinese boy who found a magic lamp that brought him wealth and a beautiful princess, is a close second. The word pantomime, of course, really means action in dumb show. And that is how the pantomime began, when it first came to Britain from Italy many hundreds of years ago. But it has gradually changed in all that time to its present form. One interesting thing about modern pantomime is that there is always, among the performers, at least one comic old woman who is really a man dressed as a woman; and, on the other hand, the hero is always a girl, called a "principal boy," who wears a special dress of silk tights and a short tunic. These two features came into pantomime from the old Roman feast of Saturnalia, which took place about the same time as Christmas. Christmas without pantomime in Britain would be unthinkable. Even through the war and the "blitzes" they went on. The children would have had something to say about it if they hadn't.

Preserving Timber

Britain has a timber preservation process, which is an answer to the current shortage. A Yorkshire chemical firm has found a method which it is hoped may ultimately banish the timber scourge of dry rot from the world. Timber is first subjected to a vacuum to extract the air and then is immersed in hot fluid containing Wolman salts. High pressure is applied to force the solution into the wood. Treated timber withstands both dry rot and insect pests.

Shakespeare a la Mode

Between the theatrical producers and the musicians' union, the Band of Avon is hardly recognizable these days. Local 802 in New York has now declared the American Repertory Theatre's production of "Henry VIII" to be a musical, as Maurice Evans's G. I. "Hamlet" and last year's "Tempest" were previously declared to be.

The nine musicians who furnish the fanfare for the production will thereby receive a total increase of $294 a week, and "Henry VIII" will be lifted up to the level of "The Student Prince" and "Blossom Time." But it's the fancy modern productions of the Bard that open the way for these profitable reclassifications.

It started back in Cromwellian England when plays disguised themselves as operas in order to get past the Puritan ban on the theatre. And the Restoration of Charles II saw "Macbeth" produced with the three witches transformed into a comic song-and-dance team to please the jaded tastes of court dandies.

Somehow the Bard survives it all. Perhaps it is right and proper that "Henry VIII," which was his "swan song" to the stage, should now have such an expensive accompaniment.

Work Calories

Three slices of bread is the cost in feed for every ton of coal cut by a miner, according to findings of two German physiologists who studied the relations of food to output in the Ruhr coal mines during the war, says a New York Times science writer. Each man, they found, required between 155 and 200 calories per ton of coal produced. These represent "work calories," required in addition to the 1,600 to 1,800 calories needed every 24 hours just to keep alive.

When the proper "work calories" were not supplied, any increased output stimulated by bonuses in cigarettes, came from the "very substance of the body," as was shown by the weight lost by the miners, the study revealed. Another study showed that lack of sufficient "work calories" resulted in about half the amount of peacetime work being done, so that the job of one man had to be done by two or three.

Dividends From Reforestation

Reforestation in North Simcoe, which once seemed a bit of a joke, is now beginning to pay real dividends. Many of the red pine which were planted fifteen to twenty years ago are now big enough to cut into small lumber. There are some magnificent stands of potential timber dotted throughout the countryside. The county and provincial forests in themselves have hundreds of thousands of trees which before many years can be converted into cash, says the Midland Free Press Herald.

Every branch of knowledge which a good man possesses, he may apply to some good purpose.—C. Buchanan.

According to Hoyle

(By WILLIAM J. MURDOCH in Kiwanis Magazine).

This fellow Hoyle whom poker and pinochle devotees are always playing their games of chance according to — why do they keep bringing him up? Who is he, anyway?

He just isn't, any more; he's been dead for more than 175 years. But at one time, and for a long time, Edmond Hoyle was the top-flight authority on whist, great-grandpappy to our present game of bridge and originally called "whisk," (because players snatched up tricks as fast as they captured them) but later changed to "whist!"—ancient and restrained British for "close your mouth so I can concentrate."

Little is known of Hoyle's early life, except that he was born in 1672. He was educated for the bar, but deserted the laws of living in favor of pursuing the laws of chance. He caught up with the latter and formed a better-than-passing acquaintance with them, at least so far as they pertained to whist, while he instructed certain Londoners in the niceties of this parlor game he whote his famous book, "A Short Treatise on Whist."

It sold, as the advertising copy writers claim, like hot cakes. The first edition was issued in 1742, and in it Hoyle divulged the secrets and expounded upon the crafty bidding and playing systems he had collected and observed during his years as a whist player and teacher. Encouraged by the smashing success of this work, he also issued authoritative volumes on backgammon, piquet, quadrille, brag, and chess.

But Hoyle's forte was whist. By 1769, with several editions of his book already corrected and improved and more coming up, Hoye was accepted as Mr. It in whist. "According to Hoyle" became the favorite expression of the whist player who would show others that when it came to explaining the difference between trumps and chumps he was speaking not through his hat but through Mr. H's. very fine book.

Hoyle's book became so highly respected, in fact, that it was pirated right and left. Enterprising publishers helped themselves to Hoyle's writings and published them at cut-rate prices. To protect himself, Hoyle personally signed every one of his books, up to and including the 14th edition.

Hoyle died in London in 1769, at the ripe old age of 97. But his revised whist rules, regulations, and procedure of 1760 continued to be accepted as whist gospel until 1864. Then some London players thought it was time some changes were made. They made them—but Hoyle's name carried so much prestige that it is still attached to a great many books dealing with card games and assorted methods of losing both money and sunny dispositions, some of which the old master never played, much less taught.

Authorities say that you may, if you choose, accept the advice of a poker professor or pinochle pundit who tells you how to play the game according to Hoyle; but don't think that he got the word straight from the old boy himself. They say Hoyle never tried to draw to an inside straight in his life nor did he ever attempt a meld—because Edmond Hoyle never trifled with poker or pinochle in all his near-100 years.

AS REVOLT ENDS

President Romulo Betancourt of Venezuela is shown at the palace as he announced the end of the revolt by Conservative Venezuelan insurgents which occurred recently. Betancourt told newsmen that the small group of captured insurgents will be given a "fair trial by ordinary law, with no executions." This was the third attempt on Betancourt's 14-month-old regime.

Canada Remains Chief Source Of Bacon for Britain

By JAMES McCOOK

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Dec. 19 — (CP Cable) —Food Minister Strachey said Wednesday that he does not propose to visit Canada in connection with Britain's tight wheat supply situation as he is in constant consultation with the Canadian government on the movement of wheat from the Dominion.

Tuesday Mr. Strachey expressed faith in Canada's efforts to expedite wheat shipments.

Speaking at a press conference after consultations with L. W. Pearsall, manager of the Canadian Bacon Board, Mr. Strachey said Wednesday that Canada remains the chief supplier of bacon to the United Kingdom. He added that Canadian shipments were down and world feed shortages made it difficult for other countries to raise their supplies.

The food minister said he hoped Danish bacon shipments would be up in 1947 but 50,000 tons was about the best that could be expected in view of feed shortages, compared with 47,000 tons from Denmark in 1946.

Britain benefited from increased Canadian production in 1946, he said, with 125,000 tons shipped compared with 64,000 tons in 1938, he added.

"Our real problem is to keep up Canadian supplies and that will not be easy as they might well fall to their pre-war position," Strachey said. "There is plenty of room in the British market for both Canada and Denmark and we can do with full Danish shipments and full home production and still take Canadian shipments. There should not be a fear that supplies produced will be crowded out."

Youth Sentenced To Term, Lashes By Military Court

Jerusalem, Dec. 19 — (AP)—A Jerusalem military court sentenced a 17-year-old Jew Tuesday to a month's imprisonment and 12 strokes at the whipping post after convicting him of possessing a leaflet bomb.

Three days ago the Jewish underground organization, Irgun Zvai Leumi, broadcast a warning that "we will treat British soldiers the same way" after a military court sentenced another Jew to receive 18 strokes and a year's imprisonment.

Military sources acknowledged they were "taking the business seriously," but said no added precautionary measures had been taken.

It was learned at the same time that a Lancaster bomber Tuesday returned an undetermined number of Jews to Palestine, from Eritrea, where they had been detained. On landing at Lydda, police said, two Jews were wounded when one of four guards accidentally discharged a Sten gun.

Government sources in Jerusalem said there might be a statement later in the week about the return of the Eritrea detainees.

MINK VISITS HOME

Peterborough, Dec. 19 (CP)—A handsome black mink was a midnight caller at the home of Maurice J. McCarthy near here. Mrs. McCarthy saw it at the back door and thought it was a squirrel. Her husband, called from bed, took it for a black cat until he turned a flashlight on it and it stood on its hind legs. The McCarthy's said the mink apparently was looking for food.

PERSONAL HEALTH TALKS

By WILLIAM BRADY, M.D.

RHEUM IT IS OR RHEUM IT ISN'T

To the best of my knowledge—knowledge? Heck, it is just notion—the rheumatiz, arthritis or joint trouble due to infection is one type or class of ailment or disease, and the joint disability due to nutritional deficiency is another type or class of ailment or disease, and there is no similarity between them except that both ailments or diseases affect joints.

I speak of the joint disability due to nutritional deficiency as if this were an established pathological fact. It is not an established fact. It is just my belief or opinion, for what it may be worth, that nutritional deficiency manifests itself in joint disability in a great many instances, among the well but not wisely fed people of Yankeeland.

The rheumatiz due to nutritional deficiency is not inflammatory and does not follow one or more acute attacks of arthritis or red and swollen joints It is a degeneration rather than an inflammatory of all the structures of the joint—bone, cartilage synovial lining membrane and even the muscles that move the joint are involved in the process of deterioration, wasting, breaking down and of course impairment or loss of function.

Here let me quote a passage from what I believe is the best medical textbook and the best book for an intelligent layman, on geriatrics which is not in the dictionary but will be just as soon as dozen or more physicians in the country get up their courage and limit their practice to the diagosis and treatment of diseases of old folks—Dr. Ernst P. Boas's "Treatment of the Patient Past Fifty," 2nd ed., '44, Year book Publishers, Chicago:

"The results of inadequate dietaries for many years. Many of the manifestations of aging and disease in older persons, that today are accepted as inevitable results of senescence, may well be the result of lifelong faulty dietaries. Sherman has repeatedly emphasized that the ordinary American diet is more deficient in calcium than in any other element. As a result, adults experience a steady long-continued loss of calcium through the years. This does not become superficially manifest because the great calcium stores in the bones constantly make up for the calcium losses in the blood and tissues. But as a result of this constant depletion the bones become poor in calcium and more fragile. Osteoporous (softening, increased porousness, lightening in weight, atrophy and weakening of bone) of the aged may be the result of dietary fault and not an inevitable accompaniment of aging."

The steady long-continued loss of calcium to which Dr. Boas refers is due primarily to the calcium shortage in the common American diet. Reumatiz or no rheumatiz, maybe you had better bone up on that by reading "The Calcium Shortage" by Wm. Brady, M. D., who will send you a copy if you ask for it in writing (not with a clipping) and inclose ten cents and a stamped envelope bearing your address.

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

Why was the Russian emperor called a Czar?

"Czar," like "Kaiser," is merely a corruption of "Caesar," the title assumed by the Roman emperors as a mark of honor to Julius Caesar, who in a sense was the first emperor of Rome.

Although the title was used in Russia in the 15th century, it was not an official title until Ivan IV, known as "Ivan the Terrible," formally adopted it when he became ruler of Russia in 1547.

The Gothic spelling was "Kaisar," which is the source of German "Kaiser." Since most of our early knowledge of Russia came by way of Germany it is likely that "Czar," was influenced by German. At any rate, the spelling "Czar" is not in conformity with Slavic usage and it should really be spelled "Tsar" or "Tzar," which is the Russian form, although "Czar," a Romanized spelling of the Russian form, has been established by long English usage.

During the Middle Ages the title was assumed by various Slavonic rulers and it was ascribed even to the Mongol princes in Russia. The rulers of Serbia, before that Kingdom became part of Yugoslavia after the First World War, and the title was applied to the King of Bulgaria from 1908 until the Second Great War.

"Tsar," as an official title, was abolished in Russia by Peter the Great but it continued to be a popular title of the emperor. The wife of the Czar was called Czarina, a daughter a Czarevna, and a son Czarevitch, although the crown prince had the differentiated title Cesarevitch and his wife Cesarevna.

Nicholas II, who was shot at Ekaterinburg in 1917, was the last Czar of Russia.

In Shakespeare's "The Merry Wives of Windsor" the Host of the Garten Inn says to Sir John Falstaff: "Thou'rt an emperor, a Caesar, Keisar, and Pheezar."

"Kaiser" is a German form of "Caesar" just as "Czar" is the Russian form of the same Roman name and title. This title was applied to the Holy Roman Emperors, the rulers of Austria-Hungary, and to Frederick III and William II of Germany, although the title was always used more freely in English than in German. Kaiser William II was a grandson of Queen Victoria of England, who, as ruler, of India, in 1876 assumed the title "Kaisar-i-hind" or "Quaisar-i-hind," "Caesar" or "Emperor" of Hindustan.

SAINT NICK VISITS A GERMAN SCHOOL

Maybe you didn't know, but "St. Miklas" is the granddaddy of our own Santa Claus. Every year on December 6th., "St. Miklas Day" is celebrated in Germany, when the Saint in a long red robe and white beard and topped off by a mitre visits the schools. With him come "Hans Muff" and two "angels." The records of the children are read. If they are good, the youngsters are suitably rewarded. If bad, "Hans Muff" takes over. Hans is dressed in sackcloth, wears a mask and carries a switch, which he applies to the naughty children and exacts a promise for better behavior in the future. Here Santa (or St. Miklas) is handing out cakes fashioned in the form of the traditional Kris Kringle while the children look at the beloved figure —some in anticipation, some with apprehension. The school is in Roedelheim.

NEW ROCKET-PLANE TURNS ON THE POWER

Chalmers ("Slick") Goodlin, 23-year-old pilot, is shown in this photo made from the inside of a Boeing B-29, as he slid into the tiny cockpit of the revolutionary Bell XS-1 which he piloted successfully on its first flight over the Army Air Forces test base at Muroc, Calif. The youthful pilot made aviation history when he flew America's first rocket propelled plane for about 19 minutes, seven on power. Goodlin climbed into the tiny plane at about 7,000 feet and released it from the bomb bay at 27,000 feet. The new rocket-powered Bell XS-1 leaves a trail of fumes as the power cylinders are turned on for the first time on the first test flight of the tiny craft.

Editorial Member Of London Dies

London, Ont., Dec. 19 — (CP) —George Percival Armstrong, 68, well-known Canadian newspaperman and member of the London Free Press editorial staff since 1925 died in St. Joseph's Hospital here early Wednesday after a lengthy illness.

Born at Guelph, Ont., a son of David Armstrong and Anna Maria Steel, he began his newspaper career with the Guelph Herald shortly after the turn of the century, went west about 1905 and took an active part in the old boom days of Western Canada.

Mr. Armstrong first joined the Regina Leader then went to Brandon, Man., and later moved to Saskatoon where he became associated with the late W. F. Herman, owner and publisher of the Windsor Star. With Mr. Herman he aided in the merger of the Saskatoon Star and the Saskatoon Phoenix just before the First Great War.

Enlisting in the Canadian Army in 1915 he went overseas early in 1916, was wounded in action and invalided to London, Eng., in 1917. He returned to Canada in 1919, went west again and joined the staff of the Vancouver Province.

Mr. Armstrong returned to Eastern Canada in 1923. One of the most popular members of the Free Press Staff, he had a fund of stories and anecdotes about the woollier days in the west. He was a former telegraph editor of the Free Press and in recent years the paper's Western Ontario editor, a job in which he developed and fostered the Saturday feature page, "Looking Over Western Ontario."

Predeceased by two older brothers, he is survived by one brother, Fred of Guelph, and a sister-in-law Mrs. William Armstrong of Rodney, Ont. Funeral arrangements are incomplete.

Iranian Premier Yields Two Posts

Tehran, Dec. 18 — (AP)—Iranian Premier Ahmed Quavam relinquished the portfolios of Foreing Minister and Interior Minister Tuesday, apparently in response to criticism by the left-wing Tudeh party, which had contended the multiple posts placed him in position to control the forthcoming parliamentary elections.

Two under-secretaries were named temporarily to the posts of foreign minister and interior minister until after the elections.

It was reported, meanwhile, that approximately 20 members of the Tudeh party had been placed under arrest, but government sources declined comment.

At the same time the Tehran newspaper Etelaat printed a dispatch from Tabriz, capital of Azerbaijan province, saying that the Russian Consul there had requested that the Iranian army assign guards to the Soviet Consulate and other Russian property.

Iranian government troops, dispatched to Azerbaijan to supervise the elections there, occupied Tabriz last week after brief fighting with forces of the semi-autonomous provincial government, which subsequently collapsed.

Weather Stations in Arctic Regions Permit More Accurate Forecasts

By TIM DICKSON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Expansion of a chain of weather stations around the Arctic's rim would enable Canadian weathermen to tell with a high degree of accuracy when a big storm is about to roll over the northern half of this continent, Andrew Thompson, Canada's new controller of meteorological services said yesterday in an interview.

Currently, only six stations chart weather in the Arctic. Within three years thew will number 16. But Mr. Thompson said 26 are needed for an accurate report.

Such a network of weather observers would help determine what conditions affect flying in the Arctic and if transpolar flights can be made safely and regularly.

Northern Blind Spot

So few weather stations spot the polar expanses at present that meteorologists call the Canadian-United States sector of the Arctic north of 66 degrees north latitude the "blind spot." It covers 500,000 square miles.

Only six stations watch the weather in that vast region, as compared with 164 in an equivalent area extending north east and west from Toronto. Facing the six Canadian-American stations north of 66 degrees are more than 200 stations in the European-Asiatic segment. Half of the 200 are in Russia.

To forecasters, the "blind spot" is of vital importance because that is where most of North America's most paralysing storms are born, Mr. Thompson said. Cold polar air piles up there, seethes for a day or two and then heads south to chill millions of Canadians and Americans and possibly cause death, damage and disruption of communications.

"We need to know what's cooking in the arctic," said Mr. Thompson. "The six stations now operating enable a forecaster to tell when air is piling up in a the arctic but the information he has is so sketchy that he can't tell for certain where the cold air mass is about to break through or whether it will go east or west. When it does move he can hardly tell definitely how low temperatures are going to drop."

Seek Adventurous Personnel

To fill in the blanks in present weather data the meteorological service plans to increase the number of arctic stations to 16 within the next three years, Mr. Thompson said. The next three years after that should see the network expanded to 26.

Finding suitable personnel is one of the main considerations in setting up the new stations and the department hopes to find and train young men with the pioneering spirit, preferably engineering students or radio amateurs with the knack of setting up and handling scientific equipment.

Several war veterans now are taking training for the work.

"We do not claim that additional arctic information would guarantee more perfect weather forecasts at any particular time or place," said Mr. Thomson. "Some blizzards will be foreseen earlier, some storm tracks will be plotted better and some flying weather forecasts will be more accurate. Improvement of public confidence in weather forecasts for cold wave phenomena will result in more widespread precautions.

Vast Savings

"If a single major blizzard can be foreseen in time to permit adequate precautions to be taken warning of its approach may save lives, crops, stock and property representing more than the whole annual cost of an arctic network. If one airline accident is prevented by a better forecast, the value can reach $1,000,000.

"Then there is the question of arctic flying. We don't know enough about arctic weather yet to say what is best."

Mr. Thomson's interest in northern flying stems partly from his wartime experience. A scholarly looking 53-year-old former resident of Owen Sound, Ont., from 1940 to 1945 he was responsible for providing meteorological data for the British Commonwealth air training scheme. In recognition for his work he was awarded the Order of the British Empire last July.

When he was appointed controller recently to succeed Dr. John Patterson who retired he moved up from the position of assistant controller which he had held since 1939.

That Finishing Touch

Garnishing is really an art. It does for food what framing does for a picture. The frame is carefully chosen to accent the picture. In the same manner garnishes should be chosen to compliment the food we serve. They are indispensable in the attractive presentation of food, adding that eye appeal which is so necessary. It has often been said that we eat with our eyes before we eat with our mouths.

At no time of the year do garnishes play a more important role, than during the Yuletide season. With its gay, cheery color scheme of red and green, many attractive garnishes can be used to create that holiday spirit for the occasion. It is the wish of every homemaker to create those perfect "symphonies in food"—not too much of this or too little of that, but all in true fashion. A few pointers may help you to achieve this end.

Let your standard be simplicity. Over-garnishing produces a very repelling effect. It is preferable to have too little rather than too much. Garnishes should be edible and should have a fresh appearance. If they are supposed to be crisp, be sure they are crisp before serving. Drain them well, if they have been made crisp by standing in water.

Colorful garnishes should be used on dishes which are themselves lacking in color. However, be sure the colors do not clash. If the food is to be served hot, use garnishes that will stand up—do not serve jellies with them.

With these few suggestions on the uses of garnishes, the home economists of the Consumer Section, Dominion Department of Agriculture give the following instructions for the making of several varieties of garnishes, which will quickly and easily transform the simplest dish into one of holiday fare.

Garnishes for Salads and Cold or Hot Plates

These may be used singly or in combination.

Radishes

Roses—Select small firm evenly shaped radishes. Wash and remove root ends and all but one or two small leaves, not more than an inch long. With a sharp knife cut uniform thin strips of red skin almost down to stem-end. Two rows of these petals may be cut if desired—one row from the middle of the radish down, the second from the top to the middle. Chill in cold water until the petals curl back.

Accordions—Prepare radishes as for roses, but remove all stem and leaves. Cut radishes crosswise in thin slices, about three-quarters of the way through the radishes. Chill in cold water.

Fans—Prepare radishes as for roses, but slice in thin slices lengthwise down to, but not through, the stem-end. Spread out fan-wise.

Carrots

Curls—Cut lengthwise paper-thin shavings from cleaned, scraped or peeled carrots. That is easy to do with a small vegetable peeler. Curl around the finger and chill in cold water. Insert tooth picks to hold shape while crisping.

Celery

Curls—Separate stalks of celery, wash thoroughly and cut into two or three inch lengths. Slit ends in narrow parallel strips, almost to the centre. Chill in cold water until strips curl.

Stuffed Celery Flowers—Separate stalks of celery, wash thoroughly. Fill with colored cream cheese, processed cheese or peanut butter. Replace stalks as in original bunch. Wrap in wax paper or a damp cloth and chill well. Slice in one-half inch slices.

Celery leaves may be finely chopped to replace chopped parsley.

Jellies to Garnish Cold Meats or Salads

Pour tomato or cranberry jelly into a moistened or lightly greased shallow pan to the depth of 1-2". Cut with fancy cutters into the desired shapes. Dice the left-over jelly and add to salad mixture to give added color and a delightful contrast in texture.

Red-skinned apples make a very attractive garnish. Cut in thin wedges and dip in spiced vinegar from pickles. This prevents discoloration. These wedges are very attractive when put together with cream cheese.

Holly Necklace For Christmas Bird

Cut green pepper into 1-1 1-2" squares. Starting at one corner, using a sharp knife, notch to represent holly leaves. With needle and thread string alternately a green pepper holly leaf, then three raw cranberries. Form cranberries into clusters by bringing needle back through the first cranberry of group. Repeat until necklace is long enough to extend loosely around the breast of bird—from thigh to thigh. Fasten ends of necklace to bird with toothpicks.

These garnishes, although attractive in themselves need that additional touch of greenery to complete the picture. Sprigs of parsley or green celery tops give color contrast, and remember parsley is edible.

Draped Dinner Dress

By ALICE ALDEN

SKILLFUL DRAPING marks many of the new dinner dresses, clothes that can go nicely through a busy social season and not outwear their welcome. Celanese rayon crepe in a delicate shade of red, is used for this beautifully draped dinner dress. The neckline is square and the sleeves are short. Interest is concentrated on the hips that are draped with a fold that continues to about knee-length in front. Note how the soft folds over the hips cascade into interesting streamers at back. Slight tucking forms a graceful line on the sleeve.

Women's Activities

PHILLIPSON-ZION W.I.

Mrs. J. F. Ketcheson was hostess to the ladies of the Women's Institute for their December meeting. Mrs. R. Cranston presided and opened the meeting with a short paper entitled "Preserving the Christmas Spirit", followed by one verse of "O, Come all ye Faithful", and the reading of "A Mother's Prayer".

Committees were appointed for the pot-luck supper to be held in Bethel Community Hall in January. Twenty-two ladies responded to the roll with stories of "My Earliest Recollections of Christmas". Community singing of Christmas carols was led by Mrs. Roy Sills.

The Story of the "First Christmas Tree" given by Mrs. Murney Simmons, told that the first Christmas tree to shine on an American Christmas, was placed in a Cleveland church by the pastor, Henry Schwan, in 1851. Today the custom has been proven thoroughly Christian, but in 1851 Dr. Schwan discovered that the placing of a Christmas tree in his church was considered an idolatrous sacrilegious act. His flock was divided and he was forced to leave his pastorate.

The first unlighted but decorated Christmas tree on record was introduced in Strausburg, Germany, in 1646, 300 years ago. In 1841, ten years previous to the date of the first American tree, Prince Albert, Consort of Queen Victoria, introduced the custom in England.

A reading entitled "Home, Sweet Home at Christmas", was given by Mrs. Lee Ketcheson and Christmas poems were read by Mrs. Gordon Ray, Mrs. Earle Ray, Mrs. Clarence Ketcheson and Mrs. J. F. Ketcheson.

An interesting feature of the program was the exchange of Christmas gifts with Mrs. Carl Clarke, ably pinch hitting in the absence of Santa.

The singing of "Joy to the World", closed the meeting and afternoon tea was served by Mrs. Ketcheson and her assistants.

FRANKFORD W. A.

Frankford.— The W.A. of the Frankford United Church held its annual meeting in "Rose Lowery Hall" on Thursday. Several Christmas carols were played by Mrs. Martin prior to the program. In the absence of the President, Mrs. J. A. Warren, vice-president, was in the chair and opened the meeting by reading a poem "The Shepherds Guiding Star". Rev. H. H. Lackey led in prayer. The Scripture lesson, Luke 2: verses 12 to 20, was read by Mrs. Walter Morrow. A meditation on Jesus' Way of Life was given by Mrs. Warren. The annual reports of the various officers were then received showing that the organization had enjoyed a very successful year.

A Christmas program followed consisting of readings by Mrs. H. Terry, Mrs. B. Patrick, Mrs. W. Morrow and Mrs. J. Finnegan.

.. .. BETA SIGMA PHI .. ..

The last few weeks have been busy ones for the girls of the Ontario Alpha Lambda Chapter of the Beta Sigma Phi Sorority. Six new members were initiated into the International Sorority at an impressive candlelight ceremony held at the Kiwanis Centre. Mrs. R. Boyce officiated at the ceremony and was assisted by members of the executive. Following the Initiation Ceremony, the Pledges were entertained at a formal dance and supper party also held at the Kiwanis Centre.

Last week a telephone bridge party was held under the direction of Miss Barbara Ruttledge to raise money to carry on the philanthropic endeavors of the sorority. Each Sorority Sister had at least one table at her home, and then telephoned in her results to Miss Ruttledge. The high honors for the evening went to Mr. James Truaisch.

This Fall the girls have featured a "Big Sister" movement in Belleville under the direction of Mr. Stephens of the Kiwanis Centre. Each of the members has charge of a little girl to whom she acts as a big sister. It is her objective to help her little sister solve some of her difficulties.

On Monday night, the "Big Sisters" entertained the "Little Sisters" at a Christmas supper party held at the Kiwanis Centre under the guidance of Mr. Stephens, who has given fully of his time to help the girls get the movement under way.

Telephone Girls Hold Party

On Tuesday evening, the rest rooms of the local telephone office, girls of the Bell Telephone Co., held their annual Christmas party around an attractively decorated tree, with Miss Joe Dowe taking the part of a very capable "Santa" who presented gifts to all.

A piano had been graciously loaned for the occasion, and some real talent was displayed in both vocal and instrumental numbers. During the short program, the outstanding feature was a "Barber Shop Quartette" composed of Misses Barbara Kyle, Leta Kelly, Agnes Elaind, and Shirley Hill.

Buffet supper delicacies were displayed on a table covered with a Christmas cloth and centred with a bowl of red roses and small white 'mums, flanked by tall red tapers. The refreshments were served under the direction of Miss Pauline Kerr.

Winter Sports Clothes Featured In Paris Displays

By JOAN SLOCOMBE

Paris, Dec. 19. (Reuters) — With Winter sports threatening to break all records this year in the Alps, skiing and skating clothes are finding a predominant place in Paris fashion displays.

While the French style setters wonder what sports wear visitors abroad will bring with them, foreigners will notice many changes in the French outfits.

It is obvious France has accepted as the smartest and most practical skiing trousers, the full length type which tapers into the wearers boots. In jackets, the popularity wavers between the full length shape and the short belted blouse or battledress variety.

"The secret of an athlete's grace," said Jacques Falk, "lies in the economy of movement".

Falk, a regular Winter sportsgoer himself, says bright colors are the recognized thing for the snow slopes this year.

Borrowing the idea from Winston Churchill's wartime siren suit, another well-known designer shows a steel grey battledress complete with zipper fastenings and flap pockets.

Fur promises to play an important role in ski wear this year.

For skating, knitted woollen tights in bright red or bright green match sweaters generally knitted with white in the design. Brief circular skirts of corduroy or woollen material go with these suits.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

40 Isn't Too Old to Revamp Your Life, "Mrs. G. R."

Regardless of how the teen-ager may feel about it, a woman of 40 still has a lot of time ahead of her. Far too much, it seems to me, if all she can see in the years to come is hardship and sorrow.

No matter what tragedy may have brought a woman to such a viewpoint, however, she's still young enough, at 40, to revamp her life and find satisfaction—yes, even happiness—in the years left to her, if she has the intelligence and the determination to do it.

Even the woman in the heart-breaking situation described in the following letter can, if she will, take hold of herself and come through her bitter experiences to better things.

This is her story:

"Dear Miss Fairfax:

"I am a married woman of 40, the mother of seven children, the youngest 22 months and the oldest nearly 20, who is married and living away from home. My husband, also 40, seems to have forgotten that he is a married man and at present is living with a man friend in a furnished apartment. He doesn't want us to go near where he is staying or near his job. He just doesn't seem to want us at all.

"Our marriage has never been a very happy one over the period of 22 years. He had three or four different affairs, the last one eleven years ago. I forgave him, and for about eight years he was a good husband and father. Then, when I was expecting my last baby, he started again. I couldn't prove there was another woman, but in a dozen ways I knew it. In two and a half years, he has spent only one weekend in his own home, and he gives me just enough money so the law can't touch him.

"Strange as it may seem, I can't hate my husband. I love my children dearly, but he always comes first. I can't go to a show but I remember what it was like to go with him. I can't enjoy my baby because he isn't here to see her, too. A home like this isn't a happy place for children.

"Miss Fairfax, what shall I do? Do men like that ever pay for the heartache they cause their loved ones? Do they ever change as time goes on?

"Mrs. G. R."

You have a heavy load indeed to carry, "Mrs. G. R." and it is no wonder that you are worn out and sick with worry and discouragement.

But, as I say, you have many years ahead of you still, and the only thing you can do is to make up your mind, in spite of everything that you will get something out of those years besides trouble.

The best way to begin doing this, I think, is to make a definite break with your husband, either through a legal separation or divorce. You certainly have grounds for legal action of some kind, when your husband has lived apart from you for over two years. I suggest that you consult a lawyer to find out just where you stand in this matter and how you might proceed.

It seems foolish to me to live along in the hope that this man will ever undergo such a transformation as to become a stable, dependable person. But if you prefer to do that, rather than to break away from him completely, then I suggest that you try to regard him, for the time being anyhow, as someone you merely know casually, who has no real connection with your everyday life, and plan, as though there were only yourself and your children to consider, in the same manner a widow would do.

You say that your home isn't a happy place for your children. Don't you think your first duty is to make it so? Children adjust quite easily to the absence of anyone leaving the family circle, and if you make a real effort to be cheerful yourself, and not remind them in any way of their missing father, I'm certain they will get along very happily. Plan good times for them, see that they invite playmates to their home, and you yourself ask your own friends in for an afternoon or evening whenever you can.

If you act as though nothing were the matter—hard as that will be for awhile—and never allow yourself to brood, but instead fill your time with activities and thoughts and plans that leave your husband out just as definitely as though he were no longer living, you will find, in time, that he matters very little to you any more, and that you get along without him very well indeed.

Women's Activities

EVENING AUXILIARY

Frankford.—The Evening Auxiliary held its December meeting at the home of Mrs. Arnold Stickle. After the opening hymn Mrs. Stickle led in prayer and The Lord's Prayer in unison. Miss Edith Henry had charge of the worship service which consisted of the singing of several Christmas carols. Scripture lesson from Isaiah was read by Mrs. Stickle. A hymn was read as a prayer and a candle lighting service based on the church's work in India followed. Mrs. Ketcheson, Mrs. Warren, Mrs. Slingerland and Mrs. Coutts (in costume) depicted the part of women in India at Christmas time. Mrs. R. Osterhout, Mrs. P. Chase, Mrs. R. Kemp and Mrs. R. Rowe took the part of the women of Canada. Miss E. Henry closed this service with prayer. The offering was received and dedicated.

A Christmas program followed with "The Maiden's Gift" read by Mrs. Warren. Barbara Stickle contributed a piano solo "Silent Night". Mrs. Finnigan told the story of "The First Christmas Wreath". Mrs. G. Montgomery read a poem, "This Is Christmas". Mrs. Dickson and Mrs. Rowe were winners in a contest conducted by Miss Henry.

The meeting closed with the Mizpah benediction and a pot-luck supper was served.

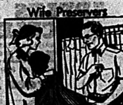
Coat of herringbone tweed

By GRACE THORNCLIFFE

JUST when one thinks that there's nothing new in the short coat line-up, along comes another vivacious variation. Shown here, is a new short top coat, a distinctive little double-breasted model in brown and green mixture herringbone tweed. It has a deep, rounded shawl collar, double breasted closing, and a rounded edge to the slit in back. It is nice worn over brown or green and easily dressed up or down with the right accessories.

Wife Preservers



When you take or send clothes to the dry cleaner's, whenever possible tell the cleaner the origin of the spot, so he may know what removers to use.

Complexion Care Important

Be sure that the rouge and lipstick you use are of a harmonious tone.

By HELEN FOLLETT

EVEN the best behaved complexion has its off days. Sometimes it shows up fresh, clear, soft of texture. Again it appears to have taken a slump. It is a barometer that registers health—good and bad. Hence the need of eating wisely, getting plenty of sleep washing your lungs with fresh air at every opportunity, keeping sweet and good natured.

At the same time use your beauty aids faithfully. The stop-and-go system doesn't work. Many of those demon shoppers who stampede cosmetic counters, lug home toilet table goodies that just stand around and aren't used often enough to get in their good work. No matter what kind of a skin you have, it will be benefited by keeping it scrupulously clean, by applying a cream after the bed-time face washing. No matter how late the hour, no matter how tired you may be, don't fail to remove make up. Give your skin a chance to rest while you are resting in your bed. It will feast on oil cosmetics.

The complexion suffers a certain amount of wear and tear by contact with atmospheric dust and harsh winds, aided by old meanie Time who doesn't seem to care what he does to human faces. It is the well lubricated skin that defies his marks and blemishes.

Select cosmetics with discrimination. There are creams especially compounded for extra dry skins, and light cleansing agents for the oily ones. There are astringents made for the purpose of contracting enlarged pores and to give tone to tissues that seem about to go into a state of dissolution.

Be fussy about powder. Be careful not to get a tint that is lighter than your natural coloring. See that rouge and lipstick are harmonious of tone.

GOOD MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Introduction of Her Son's Wife

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Our son and his wife, whom he married just before he went overseas and whom we have not met, are now planning to come to visit us in our home here. We are delighted at the thought of their being with us, delighted that at last we are to meet our new "daughter". We were not able to go to their wedding, which was on the other coast from where we live but she and I have corresponded constantly ever since our son told us of his engagement and through her letters we have all become deeply devoted to her.

What is perplexing me now is how I should introduce our relatives and friends to her. Must I always say "my daughter-in-law?" That "in-law" always sounds so cold to me and particularly as applied to my son's wife, whom I have come to think of as our "daughter" and whom I have called by that name in my letters to her. Are there any other forms proper?

Mother

I know how you feel about that word "in-law". It isn't too easy to get into it the degree of warmth of voice and manner that will really convey our devotion. You could use "my daughter-in-law" when you are introducing your son's wife to a casual acquaintance, when this information as to relationship may be necessary. But when you introduce your relatives and friends to her, you'll have the perfect opportunity to put into your introductions the devotion and pride you have for her. For example, to a relative who has undoubtedly heard much about your son's wife, say, affectionately, "Aunt Mary.... this is Sally!" Or to a friend, "This is Sally, Bob's wife." Or a very charming form, "This is our Sally, Bob's wife."

May She Take Back Her First Husband's Name?

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Will you please give me your advice on a problem that means very much to me? Five years ago my first husband, whom I loved very dearly, died. A year ago I remarried, I suppose because I felt so bereft and lonely and I thought this second husband would be a splendid companion to me and my two children. I was terribly mistaken and I am bitterly unhappy. We have separated and I am about to apply for a divorce. Would it, Mrs. Beeckman, be proper for me to apply to the judge for his permission for me to take back my first husband's name? I want to so much, so very much!

K.C.D.

Yes, it is proper and permissible for you to make this request, and I am sure that the judge will grant it. Under the circumstances it is indeed natural that you should want to take back the name of your first husband, whom you so dearly loved, and especially since this is also the name that your children bear.

Boys Take Presents to Birthday Party

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

A girl friend of ours is having a Sweet Sixteen party, for boys and girls from about fifteen to seventeen. Is it proper for every boy to bring a present to the hostess? Or should a girl and the boy who is coming with her give a present together?

Two Girls

To a birthday party, especially to one so important as the Sweet Sixteen Party, every guest should bring an individual present to the hostess. Every boy should bring his own present (whether he is invited by the hostess or by the girl with whom he is coming), but this may be a simple inexpensive gift perhaps just a merry gadget from the five-and-ten, if this is more suitable to his pocketbook. Or he may bring her a box of candy or a corsage, one or two dainty handkerchiefs perhaps with her first name on them, or a book or a small bottle of perfume.

BEAUTY

By HELEN JAMESON

Watch The Hips, Lady ETAOI Watch The Hips, Lady

No woman needs a tape measure or weight chart to tell her that she is acquiring spread amidships. When she has to wiggle into last year's frock and notes those spreading seams at the hipline she knows what she's in for. The hateful moment has come when something must be done in the way of dieting and exercising.

Dr. Charlotte C. West, in her interesting book, "Ageless Youth," gives a new slant on the subject. She says "Indolent habits must be overcome, and motion from the hips must be encouraged. Will as well as thought regard against a tendency which is ruinous to the slender effect that is so artistic and so sought after today, the will must be directed by powerful thought to these structures; they must be awakened from their lazy inclinations and made to work. Persons with this tendency have an inate dislike for locomotion."

Weight charts are deceiving. The width as well as the height must be taken into consideration. After all it is the hips that count Unless the width of the body is normal, weight calculations don't mean a thing.

Those poor dears who tramp several miles a day in the hope that they can get rid off hippiness would do better to take up strenuous exercise that will discourage fat cells. We offer some exercises, recommended by reducing specialists.

Lie flat on your back on the floor. Raise the right leg, cross it over the left and stretch it as far as you can, touching the floor with your toes. Then roll over on your hips. Ten times with the right leg, then with the left and repeat. The pressure of the fleshy hips on the floor, together with the stretching of the hip and thigh muscles, will lessen measurements in the course of time.

Here's an active one that may make you pant a bit, so don't do it to the point of fatigue. It's good fun and the family will love to gather round and watch you do it.

Clench the fists. Stand tall. Bend your elbows in at the sides. Raise the knees high, first one then the other. Increase this motion to running speed, remaining in a nearly stationary position. You're running fast while standing still, as it were.

The back-roll will reduce the rear, lower portions of the anatomy as well as the hips. Lie on your back on the floor. Lift your legs, see how far you can send them up and over your head. Slender women of athletic tendencies can do this stunt easily, touching the floor beyond the head with their toes.

The wood-chopper's exercise has a slenderizing effect on abdomen, as well as hips. Clasp the hands above the head, bring them down between the knees. The feet should be placed ten inches apart.

Thousands have been overjoyed at the results a little perking up with Dr. Williams Pink Pills accomplish. Little People of Santa Claus Land

"Oh, please let me help you, Santa, dear!" said the Wee Tiny Fairy.

EDITOR'S NOTE — These stories, written for the children, will find a place in the hearts of their elders—who, like adults around the world, enjoy reliving the fantasy that Santa Claus and his land of "little people" spells.

By JANE NILES, Central Press Staff Writer

EPISODE ONE

ONCE upon a time—when the world was very young and when there were only a few little children—things were not very busy up at the North Pole.

There Santa Claus lived all by himself. He did his own cooking and his own cleaning, and he spent every day at his workbench. There he made the toys for the few little children in the world who wrote him letters.

Santa would gather all these toys together on Christmas Eve. Then he would climb down the chimneys and fill the stockings that were hanging on the mantels. And the bigger toys that he could not fit into the stockings, he would place by the decorated Christmas trees.

But that was long, long ago when the world was very young. One day the world began to grow. Bigger and bigger it grew and, of course, more little boys and more little girls started writing letters to Santa.

Pretty soon so many letters came to the North Pole asking for toys, that Santa did not even have time to go to sleep. He had to stay at his workbench all day and all night—for all the toys had to be finished by Christmas.

Santa Loses His Smile.

Now, it wasn't long before Santa could not keep up with all the letters he was receiving. And the thought of some little boy or little girl having to go without a toy on Christmas made him very, very sad. And the worst thing of all happened. Santa lost his smile.

As the good, old Saint workrd at his bench in his little house at the North Pole, tears ran down his cheeks. He was so unhappy, because he knew he couldn't finish all the toys the children wanted by Christmas. But what could he do?—what could he do?

Just as a great big tear splashed from his cheek onto his work table, Santa heard a very peculiar noise outside his window.

"What was that?" Santa said to himself. "Could someone be coming all the way up to the North Pole to see me?"

Then as he wiped up the big tear that had splashed onto his worktable, Santa heard the very peculiar noise again. And it wasn't outside the window this time. It was right in his own little house.

Just as he turned around to see what the very peculiar noise could be, he heard a silvery little voice say, "How do you do, Santa, dear!" And who do you suppose it was?

Well, Santa took one good look. He couldn't believe it—but there was a very wee, tiny fairy!

"I have come to help you, Santa, dear," said the Wee Tiny Fairy.

And before Santa could catch his breath, the Wee Tiny Fairy was chirping in her silvery voice:

"You see, Santa, dear, I have been watching all the wonderful things you have been doing for the little children in the world. And because I think there could be nothing worse than an unhappy child, I want to help you finish all the toys by Christmas.

"Oh, please let me help you, Santa, dear! Please let me help!" the Wee Tiny Fairy said. Can you imagine what happened then?

A great big, wonderful, happy smile broke out all over Santa's face, and he said, "My dear Wee Tiny Fairy, I appreciate your offer to help me with my big job of finishing toys, but there are far, too many for even you and I to have ready by Christmas."

The Wee Tiny Fairy was jumping up and down with excitement for she could hardly wait for Santa to stop talking. She wanted to tell him about all her friends—the Little People—who wanted to help, too. There were the Gay Little Elves, the Merry Little Muncheons, the Happy Little Dwarves and, of course, all her own relations—just dozens and dozens of Wee Tiny Fairies.

When she told Santa about all the "Little People" who were her friends and relations, and who were just waiting for her special call to come up to the North Pole, do you know what Santa did?

Why, Santa hopped up from his workbench and held his sides he was chuckling so hard. Santa was so happy! And as he stood there holding his sides because he was chuckling so hard, the Wee Tiny Fairy went to the window and called in her silvery voice.

Before Santa could see it happen, his little house was brimming over with Wee Tiny Fairies and Gay Little Elves and Merry Little Muncheons and Happy Little Dwarves. All the Little People cheered and cheered to see Santa happy once more.

However, right in the middle of a great big cheer, the Wee Tiny Fairy hopped to Santa's shoulder and called out: "There is much to be done if we are going to get all Santa's toys ready by Christmas. So let's get to work!"

They All Go To Werk.

Well, right then and there, all the Little People went to work. The Merry Little Muncheons built a long, long row of tiny buildings for toy factories. There was a factory where dolls and teddy bears would be made; one for doll buggies and beds; one for toy soldiers and tanks; one for sleds and skates; one for bicycles, scooters and wagons; one for fire engines and trains—why, there was a factory for every toy a little child might want.

The Gay Little Elves came along and painted the factories, and the Happy Little Dwarves swept them up and put them in order. In no time at all, the long, long row of toy factories was finished.

And at the very end of Toy Factory Row, the Wee Tiny Fairies were tacking up a sign on a little house that was to be their headquarters. They flew over to Santa's house to put a sign on his door, and then all the Little People got together to tack up the largest sign of all—it hung over the whole North Pole—and it said:

"THIS IS THE HOME OF SANTA CLAUS AND HIS LITTLE PEOPLE"

"Can't Praise Syntona Too Highly," Says This Woman

"Has Been a Great Help to Me in Relieving Gas, Upset Stomach and Dizzy Feelings. Nerves Became More Relaxed, Sleep More Restful.

No person can feel well when the stomach is continually upset and out of order. Gas, indigestion, sick, nauseated feeling and sour acid risings after meals accompanied by loss of appetite, nervous irritability and fatigued feeling are among the most common symptoms experienced by men and women everywhere. Many people suffer this way for years thinking there is nothing that can be done about it. Many others have found prompt, gratifying relief by taking a short treatment of Syntona Herbal compound.

For example, here is the experience of Mrs. Charles Farris, 53 St. George Street, St. Thomas, Ontario, who said:

"I was feeling miserable before I found Syntona. I had awful gas after my meals, felt sick, nauseated and so dizzy at times. All foods just seemed to sour in my stomach. I became extremely nervous, couldn't sleep well at night and I would arise feeling as though I hadn't rested at all."

"I cannot praise Syntona too highly. It has been a great help to me in relieving the gas, sourness and sick feeling in my stomach. Now can eat my meals once more an enjoy them and I don't get thos dizzy feelings or the headaches fro which I suffered before. My nerv are relaxed and my sleep is mor sound and restful. I advise anyon with the troubles I had to begi taking Syntona without delay."

By WILF GRUSON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Dec. 19 (CP)—Eight men—seven of whom were classified as football "experts"—sat around a table of the Toronto Men's Press Club last night for a "post-mortem" on the 1946 gridiron season and all seven of the experts expressed a different opinion on what they considered the highlight of the season.

On two other questions the discussion, carried over a local radio station (CJBC) and directed by Bing Whittaker revealed that the seven were in unanimous agreement. These pertained to the 10-yard interference rule and the penalty for having a kick blocked on a third down.

They said the blocked kick rule is unfair to them blocking a punt since the chances of recovering the ball was only 50-50. The club should be rewarded for its effort by being given possession of the ball even though they may not recover it. At present the team which has the kick blocked can take the down over if they recover the ball.

The experts agreed the interference distance increase from five to 10 yards had improved the game and all favored retention of it. They warned, however, against any further increase as any further distance might tend to cut down on the number of end runs.

Considered Highlights

Teddy Morris, Coach of the Dominion champion Toronto Argonauts: Argos' game against Ottawa Rough Riders in Toronto when the Scullers blocked "six" kicks to beat the Riders.

Brian Timmis, Coach of Toronto Indians of the Ontario Rugby Football Union: The spectacular playing of Joe Krol throughout the Big Four season and the Dominion playdowns.

Bobby Coulter, Coach of the University of Toronto Blues of the Intercollegiate Union: The return of the pre-war calibre of football.

Hee Crighton, top-ranking referee: Argos' 12-6 victory over Montreal Alouettes in the Big Four sudden-death playoff after having been beaten 18-6 the previous week by the same club in the final game of the regular schedule.

Hal Walker, Toronto Globe and Mail sports writer: The coaching of Morris. "He had only 18 good players but he made them into champions."

Ted Reeve, Toronto Evening Telegram sports writer and former star coach and player: The revival of football in Montreal by Lew Hayman.

Ralph Allen, former war correspondent and sports writer, who spoke as the "Voice of the West." The first-quarter stand by Winnipeg Blue Bombers in their Grey Cup final defeat by Argos.

Four experts—Morris, Timmis, Coulter and Crighton, said they were against participation of Americans in the Canadian game.

Two of the three others—Walker and Reeve—said the rule needs tightening because as it stands now the imports could remain in Canada after the end of the season and be classified as Canadian residents for the next season. This would permit their clubs to import five more players.

Walker and Reeve suggested no more than five Americans be imported over a three-year period.

Plane Lands After Smashing Into Flock of Ducks

Polson, Mont., Dec. 19 — (AP) — Student pilot Orris Larson, on his second solo flight, ran into a flock of ducks. The impact smashed one wing and caused lesser damage to the plane, but Larson wobbled in for a perfect landing. The instructor gave him a grade of "A."

Blood and tears would cease to flow when the most terrible war in the history of the world was over. That is what the world hoped. But blood and tears still flow in tortured Greece, where guerrillas battle Greek government forces in the mountains of northern Macedonia and along the Yugoslav border. These Greek women are weeping over the body of a dear one who died in this post-war war.

Ottawa Forum Obtains Injunction Against Bisons

Ottawa, Dec. 19 — (CP) — A temporary injunction restraining the Buffalo Bisons and its Houston farm club and "other hockey clubs in professional company" from raiding Ottawa Senators for players has been obtained here as the result of two players jumping the capital team for United States berths, it was announced today.

At the same time, officials of the Ottawa Auditorium Company said they planned similar action against one more pro club and would demand damages from the Buffalo club.

A second injunction already has been granted, it was disclosed, against Happy Emms, scout of the Buffalo Bisons of the American League. The Ottawa club charges Emms offered contracts to Jimmy McFadden and Les Hickey who left the Senators this week.

The second injunction also names president Lou Jacobs of the Houston club, farm team of the Bisons in the United States Hockey League.

Held up at Border

Meanwhile, the twin centres of the controversy were stalled at Fort Erie, Ont. The two players, who left for Buffalo unexpectedly Monday night, were held up by United States immigration authorities because they did not have Canadian labor exit permits.

The injunctions, issued here by Judge J. P. Madden, are returnable Monday. Some question arose as to whether they would be enforceable, since they must be served in Ontario. It was not known whether coach Emms, who was here a few days ago, was still in Ontario.

Basis of the action is the claim of the Ottawa club — leader in the Quebec Senior Hockey League — that Canadian Amateur Hockey Association certificates signed by the players at the opening of the season are valid and binding, despite the procedure under which pro clubs have been allowed to pick up amateur players until Jan. 15.

Tommy Gorman, noted sportsman and general manager of the Auditorium here, says it was making the move "to assist hockey players in all parts of Canada."

While the battle raged in the courts and in the newspaper columns, the future of the two seceding players remained beclouded.

Mohawk Reserve

Mohawk Reserve — Mrs. R. H. Hill was hostess to the Central Homemakers' Club Wednesday.

The Guild met at the home of Mrs. Clarence Brant Thursday. A pleasing feature of the occasion was the exchange of Christmas gifts among the members, and the presentation of a china fruit dish to Mrs. R. H. Hill, who has been president of the Guild for forty-six years, and a wooden sandwich tray to Mrs. Laverne Thompson, the treasurer.

Mr. Claude Hill is recovering from pneumonia.

The demolition of the local airport has begun. Twenty-five men are employed. Some of the buildings will be left in their present position.

HAMPERED BY SHORTAGES

Windsor, Dec. 19 — (CP)—Industrial expansion in this border city is being hampered by shortages of suitable locations and of building materials, Harry L. Lasaline, secretary-manager of the Chamber of Commerce, said yesterday. He was commenting on a city council discussion Tuesday night in which Alderman John F. Martin urged the city to spend at least $5,000 next year to advertise Windsor as an industrial site. He said Chatham was attracting many industries as a result of an advertising budget of about $6,500.

GIVEN SUSPENDED SENTENCE

Niagara Falls, Ont., Dec. 19 — (CP) — Mary E. Delaney, 19-year-old waitress who was rescued after plunging 100 feet into the Niagara Gorge Dec. 7, pleaded guilty to a charge of attempting to commit suicide and was given suspended sentence yesterday and was turned over to her mother, Mrs. Eva Delaney, to return to her home in Timmins. Niagara Falls police and firemen rescued the girl, pulling her up the steep slope in an undertaker's basket.

WINDSORS AT DANCE

Attractive dancing partners as they circled the floor at the Hotel Plaza, New York City, are the Duke and Duchess of Windsor. The occasion was a benefit for disabled war veterans.

These girls, members of the sect of Jehovah Witnesses, smile happily after their release on bail in Montreal following arrest brought about because of their religious views. A storm of protest has been raised in Montreal against the Quebec government and police for action taken against Jehovah Witnesses. There are in Quebec almost 1,000 cases against Jehovah Witnesses who await trial on charges of distributing pamphlets. BERSERK SUSPECT

Six persons were wounded when Toby Haynes, a Negro, went berserk in the Murfreesboro, Tenn., jail, pulled a gun and started firing. He was subsequently wounded critically in the gun battle that followed his break from jail. He was recaptured after a one-hour siege. He had been arrested for questioning in connection with a series of thefts. Here Haynes sprints from the Rutherford county jail under protection of State Commissioner of Public Safety Lynn Bomar. He was taken to Nashville, Tenn., to avoid mob violence.

RATIONING MAY CEASE

Toronto, Dec. 19 — (CP)—The Evening Telegram said yesterday in a front page story that the end of liquor rationing in Ontario "or at least a further relaxation of the quota restrictions," is expected Jan. 1 when the new Liquor Licence Act comes into effect. The paper said Liquor Commissioner William Griesinger was "non-committal" when asked about the possible lifting of rationing and said an announcement would be made "when the time comes."

KISS FOR FRENCH PRESIDENT—PREMIER

The 74-year-old Socialist succeeded in forming a cabinet which has been approved by the National Assembly.

23-Year-Old Girl Becomes Mexican Vice-Consul

By MARY E. PRIM

Wellesley, Mass., Dec. 19 (AP)—The Mexican Vice-Consul at Boston is a 23-year-old Wellesley College graduate student who wears sweaters, tweeds, socks and saddle oxfords.

Miss Gloria Gonzalez-Garza Y Vasquez-Tagle won the consular post early this year by writing a month-long series of examinations.

She competed against 50 men—all lawyers—and won one of five vacancies in the Mexican ministry of foreign relations.

"It makes me laugh when I hear the girls moaning about mid-year exams," she said today.

After serving six months in the diplomatic department of the ministry in Mexico City, she was assigned here so that she could combine official duties with graduate study in political science at Kellesley where she held one of two Latin American scholarships.

She is a niece of former Mexico President Roque Gonzalez-Garza.

"I wanted to be a diplomat from the time I was a little girl," Miss Gonzalez-Garza confessed, "and got my first chance when Mrs. Obregen opened the university just as I finished what you would call my high school education."

Her father, former governor of the Federal District, including Mexico City, was delighted with Gloria's career choice, but—

"It took a lot of diplomacy to persuade mother to let me enter the consular service," she recalled. "Now I'll have to become an ambassador as rapidly as possible so she won't think I've disgraced the family."

Battle of Writs Develops in Cases Against Witnesses

Quebec, Dec. 19 (CP)—A battle of writs developed today in the legal fight of Jehovah's Witnesses to keep out of jail and continue their pamphlet-passing activities in the ancient capital.

John Maynard How, twice convicted in as many days, went into superior court late yesterday and won a writ of prohibition from Judge Oscar Boulanger in connection with a third charge.

The writ brings before the higher court the Witnesses' contention that the recorder's court—where How yesterday was fined $100 or three months in jail—lacks jurisdiction in the third case. The court will either uphold How's contention and free him, or send him back to recorder's court for completion of the case.

How has also applied for a writ of certiorari in connection with a conviction Tuesday when the sentence was $40 fine or two months in jail. This writ would have the effect of giving How recourse to a higher court.

Two other sect members, Laurier Saumur and Gerald Barry, also entered writs of prohibition in Superior Court, but these were denied on the ground their counsel had failed to complete the case.

Still pending in Superior Court are applications for writs of certiorari and habeas corpus by Saumur, Berry and a third convicted sect member, Amedee Dufour.

Meanwhile, Recorder Jean Mercier, who in sentencing How Tuesday said he would, if permitted, hand out life imprisonment to every member of the sect convicted, yesterday in an interview told reporters that "these individuals are only looking for headlines to publicize their cause."

"have no authority to dictate", he said, "but I ask you that in future you do not attach any more importance to these cases than ordinary cases. If we keep their activities quiet, they will despair of their cause."

Papers Comment On Transport Bill After 2nd Reading

London, Dec. 19 — (CP Cable)—A three-day fight in the House of Commons over the transport bill today was renewed in the editorial columns of morning newspapers a few hours after the bill passed its second reading by a vote of 362 to 204.

The Daily Herald, Labor, seconded the description given to the bill to nationalize British railways yesterday in the House by Herbert Morrison, Lord President of the council. Mr. Morrison called it a "bold and considered program of transport development."

The Daily Herald said: "If we postponed these measures, we should be postponing prosperity—perhaps forever. We have tried the old ways. They resulted in under production and mass unemployment. The nation has voted for new ways and before the next general election comes it will have solid proof of their worth."

Mr. Morrison told the Commons, canals, long distance haulage and London transport all would be unified to prevent over-departmentalization of transportation facilities.

He declared: "We are not going to socialize the railways and then leave them to be victims of cut-throat competition."

Support Anthony Eden

Meanwhile Conservative newspapers took up the arguments Anthony Eden, deputy Conservative leader, presented against the bill in Commons.

"Ring your bells now. You will soon be ringing your hands," the Daily Express told the government adding, "Not a minister shows how road and railway arteries of industry will work more cheaply or more efficiently under government ownership."

The Daily Mail commented: — "The people who are losing £17,000,000 ($68,000,000) a year will not find it so funny as these £1,000 a year M.P.'s."

Mr. Eden had said that the bill amounted to "confiscation" of the incomes of many "who can ill afford it" and declared that the bill's supporters could not show how it would make British railways more efficient.

Adopted by a straight party line vote, the bill now will go to a 50-member standing committee of all parties. Then it will go back to Commons for final approval before going on to the House of Lords.

Iranians Accused Of Instituting Reign of Terror

London, Dec. 19. (AP)—The Moscow radio accused Iranian Central Government troops today of shooting hundreds of persons in Azerbaijan Province and of attacking Russian institutions and citizens there.

"In the course of the last few days over 600 Azerbaijan Democrats have been murdered and about 300 arrested in Tabriz," the broadcast said, quoting a Tass dispatch, which in turn quoted the Tehran Newspaper Dad.

"Bandit elements and detachments under Col. Hashemi in Tabriz have for several days past been brutally suppressing democratic elements, arresting hundreds of people and shooting them on the spot," the broadcast said a Tass special correspondent in Tabriz reported in a second dispatch.

The so-called "Democratic Party" of Azerbaijan was a moving force in the province's regime, now collapsed. Some leaders reportedly fled across the border into Russia when Central Government troops arrived last week. Premier Ahmed Qavam said yesterday in Tehran he was undecided whether to seek their return.

"Unbridled bandits instigated by anti-Soviet elements" and "with the connivance" of the Iranian Central Government commander "are also raiding Russian institutions and attacking Russian citizens," the Tass Correspondent's account from Tabriz said.

It was the first major charge to be made by Moscow against the Central Government of Iran since the Soviet-supported semi-autonomous provincial government in Azerbaijan agreed last week to permit Central Government troops to enter the province—after a short-lived "civil war"—to supervising elections.

Premier Qavam said in Tehran yesterday he hoped the parliamentary elections could begin Sunday. He intended to keep his promise to Russia to submit to parliament a proposal for Russian oil concessions in Iran's five northern provinces, including Azerbaijan.

Noted Chemist Reported Missing

Elkton, Va., Dec. 19 — (AP) — Dr. J. M. Wait, internationally-known chemist, is reported missing on an automobile trip en route from Harrisonburg, Va., to Metuchen, N.J., and is thought to be the victim of foul play.

The scientist has been conducting research on streptomycin at the Stonewall plant of Merck Pharmaceutical plant here and departed from Harrisonburg Monday at 11 a.m. bound for the New Jersey town.

A general alarm went out to Virginia police last night asking a search for the 50-year-old, five foot eleven, gray-haired man who was wearing a blue suit when starting his journey. He was driving a large sedan.

It was reported that Dr. Wait usually carried large sums of money on his person.

REDUCE DISPLAY LIGHTING TO SAVE ELECTRICITY

Shortage of electricity IN SOUTHERN ONTARIO is extremely critical during the present winter period. In order that all users may not be seriously deprived of electricity, it is urgently necessary for every merchant, as well as every home, farm, theatre and industry in the southern part of the province, to save electricity by every possible means.

SAVINGS ARE MOST NECESSARY DURING THE DAILY PERIOD BETWEEN 8 A.M. AND 8 P.M., AND ESPECIALLY URGENT BETWEEN 4 P.M. AND 7 P.M.

Stores can help most effectively by rigidly observing the following suggestions:

- Eliminate use of electricity for signs and windows between 8 a.m. and 8 p.m.
- Eliminate all Christmas decorative lighting before December 21st, 1946, and again after January 1st.
- Turn off all lights when not required.
- Avoid all exterior lighting.
- Use electrically heated water sparingly and check leaking hot water taps.
- Do not use electric air heaters.

Europe Unsettled as Voters Choose Forms of Government

By ROSS MUNRO
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Paris, — (CP) — A series of post-war elections, new governments and upsets such as the continent has seldom seen in a 12-month period kept the political life of Europe, 1946, in ferment with little settled by the end of the year.

Through western Europe there was a fierce ideological clash between the Communists, much stronger than before the war, and middle and right-wing groups — a clash demonstrated as clearly in France as anywhere.

During the year French electors went to the polls five times. First they rejected a proposed new constitution for their country and followed that up by choosing a new provisional government. This government prepared another constitution which was adopted in October, and the first general assembly of the Fourth Republic was elected Nov. tenth.

The Communists emerged as the largest party, followed by the Popular Republican Movement, a centre group. The surprise of the general election was the defeat suffered by the Socialists.

Finally France elected the Council of the Republic — the second chamber. Early in 1947 the new parliament meets to strike out on the new political highway with prospects that it will be rough.

German Problems

In Germany, democratic political parties were organized during the year in the four occupation zones and local elections took place, with the Social Democrats, a left-wing but non-communist group, leading the way in the British zone and the Christian Democrats, a centre party, in the United States area.

The Russians in their zone sponsored a fusion of the Social Democrats and Communists in a new Communist-dominated Social Unity party. High hopes were held for it by the Communists, but in Berlin municipal elections Social Unity took a beating from the Social Democrats in one of the biggest political surprises of 1946 Europe.

In Austria, where the Communists are very weak, a coalition government worked steadily through 1946, but it was hamstrung by the over-riding Four-Power Control machinery.

Italy rejected the monarchy and a coalition government was formed, with the Christian Democrats the strongest party. There is great political instability as the country awaits the final peace terms.

Greece saw King George II of Hellenes go back to Athens after a plebiscite favoring his return, but outbursts of violence along the northern frontier, claimed by the administration to be Communist-inspired; failure to broaden the Athens government with the inclusion of middle and moderate left parties; and a Communist boycott of elections and parliament left the country in a state of jitters.

The situation was unsettled in Belgium, one coalition government going under and another being formed with the Christian Democrats in opposition. King Leopold II remained in exile but the future of his throne was still unsettled.

In the Netherlands' first post-war election, the moderate Catholic Peoples' Party won, with Labor close behind. Through the Scandinavian countries there was a general trend toward the moderate left.

The Communists in Czechoslovakia won seats in the largest group of the general election but a coalition government was formed. In Poland the Communists dominate the new government.

Among other countries in the Soviet orbit, Yugoslavia, Romania and Bulgaria went Communist but Hungary still retained more western-style democracy in her coalition government than any of the other Balkan nations.

General Franco remained in the saddle in Madrid, unaffected by the many verbal broadsides fired at him during the year.

FUTURE FUEHRER?

In England as a guest of the British Labor party, Kurt Schumacher, ABOVE, leader of the Social Democratic party in Germany's western zones, is the target of a blast by Pravda, Moscow newspaper, which says that Schumacher has been singled out as the new fuehrer, and is now being received in London as a "victor and a conqueror." The Communist newspaper also accused "reactionary forces" in Britain of attempting to groom Schumacher as a successor to Adolf Hitler. The Pravda article was written by David Zaslavsky, a Soviet political commentator.

R. McCABE ELECTED

Peterborough, Dec. 18 — (CP) — Robert McCabe was elected president of the Peterborough Fish and Game Association at its annual meeting last night.

Resort owners at the meeting favored retention of the 30-inch maskinonge law and called for closer scrutiny by the game warden on illegal fishing.

Atrocities Committed by Japs As Hong Kong Fell Told Court

Tokyo, Dec. 19 — (CP) — Fresh details of Japanese atrocities upon the fall of Hong Kong Dec. 25, 1941, including slaying and mutilation of hospital patients and the raping of nurses, were presented today to the Allied War Crimes Tribunal by Capt. James Barnett of Quebec.

Capt. Barnett was chaplain of the Royal Canadian Rifles, a Quebec unit which formed part of the Canadian battalion which fought during the three-week siege of the British Far East outpost. The other Canadian unit was the Winnipeg Rifles.

The chaplain said Japanese soldiers came to St. Stevens College hospital on Christmas Day and began to bayonet all wounded soldiers who were unable to get out of bed.

Four nurses told him they were raped repeatedly during the night. He said he found the bodies of 180 soldiers in the hospital, many mutilated and several "whose ears, noses and tongues had been cut away."

Canadian casualties in the ill-fated defence of Hong Kong by a British, Indian and Dominion garrison were 1,689 prison camps.

Brutal beatings and tortures of prisoners of war were a daily occurrence during Japanese occupation of Hong Kong, charge more than a score of affidavits introduced today at the trial. They also said rations and medicines were scarce.

Japanese in charge of camps at Hong Kong rifled Red Cross packages and stole supplies intended for starving British, other affidavits declared.

CHILD BRIDE WEEPS IN COURT

Grand Rapids, Mich., Dec. 19 (CP) — Thirteen-year-old Marjorie Baker, child bride of Martin H. Baker, 23, wept in court here as her husband was ordered held for trial on a statutory charge arising from the marriage.

Marjorie told the court Baker had treated her "swell" and she wanted to continue the marriage. The mother recently was convicted of contributing to a child's delinquency by giving permission for the marriage.

Polly the Parrot Fails to Co-operate

Kirkland Lake, Dec. 19 (CP) — Firemen here are accusing their mascot, the parrot, of lack of co-operation. For a week they have tried to teach Polly to sing Christmas carols instead of swearing but it's no go. When the firefighters told her she couldn't sing anyway, Polly, left at the firehall when her former owner moved to Toronto in 1937 squawked a couple of cuss words and let it go at that.

HORNETS ARE NEW CHALLENGER FOR BARONS' PLACE

Pittsburgh Displaces Caps in Second Place by Defeating Cleveland

Hershey and Cleveland continue to dominate the American Hockey League but there's a new challenger contesting Cleveland's Western Division leadership.

Pittsburgh's Hornets last night turned back Cleveland Barons 4-3 at Pittsburgh and displaced Indianapolis Capitals as second place team in the Western Division.

Until midway through the second period the Barons held a 3-0 lead on counts by Bobby Carse, Bobby Walton and Pete Leswick. Then the Hornets, determined not to go down to defeat before the Barons as they have in three previous encounters, tallied three times in eight minutes as Smith crashed the net twice and Pete Langelle once. With two minutes playing time left, Larry Archambault made it 4-3 for the Hornets.

Springfield Indians notched their sixth straight win downing the hometeam Philadelphia Rockets 5-2 in a bottom-of-the-ladder fight between the respective next-to-last and last-place teams in the Eastern Division.

While Woody Woodward and Eldy Kobussen marked up two goals apiece and Johnny Quilty notched a fifth to bring home the Indians' scores, Hazen McAndrews of the Indians and Lofendahl of the Rockets swung wildly at each other and then locked like bulldogs before thumping to the ice and receiving major penalties. Lofendahl and Phil Hergesheimer chalked up the Rockets' tallies.

Buffalo Bisons lost an early 2-game lead but came back to defeat the visiting Providence Reds 4-3 with Jerry Brown, Fred Hunt, Mike McMahon and George Pargeter counting for the Bisons and Tommy Burlington and Ronnie Wilson for the Reds.

Campbell Replies To Criticism Of Ottawa Manager

Montreal, Dec. 19 —(CP)— Replying to criticism of the National Hockey League - Canadian Amateur Hockey Association player agreement by James McCaffrey, manager of the Quebec Senior Hockey League Ottawa Senators, N.H.L. President Clarence Campbell said here Wednesday that the agreement was "not designed to provide special protection for clubs operating 'professional' teams in amateur leagues and so the Ottawa Senators suffer all the weaknesses inherent in such a situation."

Mr. McCaffrey said in Ottawa Tuesday that two star Senator forwards, Jimmy McFadden and Les Hickey, had deserted the team to play for a professional club in the United States, and charged that amateur hockey in Canada "is being ruined by the present scramble of professional scouts for amateur talent."

McFadden and Hickey arrived in Buffalo yesterday.

Mr. Campbell's statement said in part:

"No doubt the loss of two players at this stage of the season is a severe blow to any club, but it is surprising to hear such a complaint from a team which at the beginning of the season was able to outbid the minor professional teams and in some instances the National Hockey League teams for the services of several players.

"One Ottawa player was so generously dealt with that he was able to spurn a contract with the pros for $5,000 a year for two years plus a bonus of $1,000 for signing."

Mr. Campbell added that the player in question was neither McFadden nor Hickey, but similar treatment would probably have resulted in their remaining in Ottawa as the tremendous support of the team by the Ottawa fans at the box office seems to have justified such an arrangement.

Ottawa, Dec. 19—(CP)—James P. McCaffrey, manager of Ottawa Senators of the Quebec Senior Hockey League, said Wednesday a suggestion by Clarence Campbell, N.H.L. president, that Ottawa was a professional team "is entirely out of order."

"The Senators form part of the Quebec Senior Hockey League, a member of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association, which recognizes that certain payments are made to senior players for their services," McCaffrey said in an interview.

"It is no concern of his what we pay our players. This system is permitted by the C.A.H.A., of which our league is a valued member."

McCaffrey said the N.H.L. president's statement was "just another instance of the N.H.L. and its affiliates trying to dominate the C.A.H.A."

He added:

"And while he is on the subject of professional clubs, what about the junior amateur clubs that are sponsored by the professional teams? Those boys are certainly not in the business for their health. They are as much a professional team as any other . . .

"We realize that the N.H.L.-C.A.H.A. agreement is not designed for the advantage of one team in particular. What we would like is something that is not as one-sided as the present agreement.

"Prior to 1930, we had no agreement. Now we are paid $500 for a player who joins an N.H.L. club and $250 for one who joins a minor league. This is to cover the amateur club's investment during the time it developed the player.

"Two recent graduates from the Senators went up to the professional circuits. So far we have received no remuneration whatsoever."

Referring to a remark by Campbell that an Ottawa player spurned a professional contract for $5,000, McCaffrey said the president "doesn't mention the fact that the contract which N.H.L. clubs offer to amateurs can be terminated in one day's time."

Bruce Woodcock Weds Hometown Sweetheart in Feb.

(By The Canadian Press)

Bruce Woodcock, Britain's heavyweight boxing champion, who a year ago was working for $20 a week in a Doncaster Railroad roundhouse and now has amassed a fair-sized fortune through numerous top flight matches, will take time off from training for his February match with Big Joe Baski, leading American heavyweight, to marry his hometown sweetheart during the Christmas season. When he and Miss Nora Speiget will marry is a secret but friends say it will be very soon.

An indication of the progress Woodcock has made since he started up the fistic ladder about a year ago was yesterday's statement by Promoter Jack Solomons that Woodcock would probably be offered a chance to meet World Champion Joe Louis if he wins from Baski.

At Chicago, Maurice J. Walsh, Assistant United States Attorney, said he believed a country-wide gambling syndicate issuing "parlay cards" for public betting on football games, may have made as much as $25,000,000 in profits last season.

Latest development in the alleged attempt to "fix" last Saturday's game between Chicago Bears and New York Giants for the professional football title, was arrest yesterday of Jerome Zarowitz, 22, in New York, as a material witness. He was the second person arrested.

At Buffalo, N.Y., the stage was all set yesterday for a major hockey row as the American Hockey League attempted to untangle a technicality which stalled jumping of two star Ottawa Senators players to Buffalo Bisons. The players, Jimmy McFadden, 27, and Les Hickey, 22, were refused entry by U.S. Immigration authorities after Canadian authorities had requested that they be asked to present exit labor permits.

Eddie Dyer's St. Louis Cardinals were yesterday named team-of-the-year for 1946 in the annual Associated Press Sports Editors' Poll. The World champs' ingenuity in stopping Boston slugger Ted Williams in the World Series, their spirited team play and opportunism, earned them the nod.

Sports Roundup

By AL COLLETTI
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New York, Dec. 19 —(CP)— Only a comparative handful of the 24,859,500 fans who bet $1,830,287,000-odd at United States race tracks this year really know anything about the machinery and the system by which this nearly $2,000,000,000 was handled. . . . for years Fred Buck who served as director of pari-mutuel revenue for the state of New York, had been trying to find an authoritative book on mutuels, and then he found that the only way he could get the book was to write it himself, he did. . . .simply calling it "Horse race Betting" Buck has done a fine job in explaining the history and operation of the pari-mutuel machine. . . .Bucks tells how Pierre and Oller, a Parisian chemist and perfume vendor who ran lotteries and a handboook on the side, originated the pari-mutuel system in the 1860's.

Bookies Unfair:

Monsieur Oller, an honest horse player, decided one day that he would not have anything to do with the bookmakers on Paris tracks because they were unfair to the bettor. . . .so he devised the pool system and began operating it in his store. . . .he called it "Pari-Mutuel" (the possible translation "wagering between ourselves." . . . .perhaps the dreamy sweetness of M. Oller's perfumery lulled the bettors into a relaxing spending mood. . anyway, the pool idea was immediate success and sounded the death knell off the Parisian bookmakers. . . .a few years later pari-mutuels became the legal form of wagering on French tracks.

Birth of a Flop in U.S.

Some of the French machines were brought to the United States in the 1870's and pari-mutuel betting had a feeble trial on New York tracks as early as 1873. . but the New York bookmakers killed the idea, Buck said. . . Churchill Downs, home of the Kentucky Derby, tried using the machines in 1878 but 11 years later they were discarded as "unpopular." . . . .However, Col. Matt Winn, father of the Kentucky Derby, found himself in a spot one day before the 1908 derby when Louisville authorities ruled out bookmakers. . since some system was needed to take care of the betting public's money Col. Winn took off for New York, gathered up several of the old rusted French machines, and had them in operation for the 1908 derby. . . the bookmakers never came back and the machine wagering became so popular it has remained at the Downs ever since, speaking throughout the United States and Canada.

Telephone Type Totalizer

Buck discusses the troubles Henry L. Strauss of Baltimore, modern tycoon of the mutuels in the U.S., ran into perfecting the totalizer. . . it seems the bets used to pile up too fast for the machine to handle them. . . he solved that by incorporating some of the principles of the automatic dial telephone in the mutuel machines.

EASTERN SENIOR, JUNIOR CHAMPS WELL IN LEAD

St. Mikes a Little Stronger Than Last Year and Tigers Have More Experience

Toronto, Dec. 19. (CP)—Two teams good enough to win the Eastern Canada Hockey Championships last Spring look good enough to represent their league, if not all Ontario, in intersectional competition again this year.

The two clubs, Hamilton Tigers, and Toronto St. Michael's College majors of the Ontario Hockey Association's Senior and Junior A divisions respectively lead their leagues by a wide margin, having lost one game between them in a total of 26 played. They've beaten every team in their leagues at least once. They lead their leagues in goals scored and in low total of goals scored against them.

The St. Michael's team is, if anything, a bit stronger than the outfit which lost that hard-fought series to Winnipeg Monarchs last Spring, with added strength in goal and up front and plenty of hold-overs from last season.

The Tigers, on the other hand, are virtually the same band of "dirty old men" which nudged several younger and apparently stronger clubs out of the Allan Cup running before Calgary Stampeders knocked them off in the final. They've changed their tattered uniforms for natty new livery and they've dropped a few of their younger men for even hoarier and more hockey-wise veterans. And they're still unbeatable in league competition with only 20 goals scored against them in 12 games.

Elsewhere in Ontario where schedules are not as far advanced, two Junior "A" teams are playing in Senior Company in an effort to keep in shape for Memorial Cup playdowns and both are holding their own with their elders.

Porcupine Junior Combines currently share a three-way tie of the lead in the Porcupine Mines Senior group with Kirkland Lake Legionnaires and Dome Porkies. A point behind are Hollinger Greenshirts, with the cellar-dwelling McIntyre Club in last place, just a game behind the leaders.

Sudbury Wolves and Copper Cliff Junior Redmen appear to be the pick of the Nickel District League, running one-two in the standings thus far. North Bay District Clubs have not yet seen action with an all-star Senior Club and Ontario Northland Railway Juniors eligible for the Allan and Memorial Cups respectively.

In the Ottawa District five Junior A Clubs are closely-bunched in their quest for league honors with four teams tied at the top of the group. The only Ottawa Senior Derby—The Senators—currently lead the Quebec Senior Hockey League race.

Many Tests Ahead Seen In Politics for Coming Year

By GEORGE KITCHEN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa —(CP)—A confident Canada comes to the threshold of 1947 after a year of vital developments and decisions which left a historic mark on the Dominion's 1946 political scene.

In the wake of the old year lies the still-unfinished story of Soviet espionage, the collapse of the Dominion-Provincial conference, government defeat in three federal by-elections, steps to select a distictive Canadian flag and passage by parliament of Canadian citizenship bill and a heavy slate of other important government legislation.

Ahead, the new year promises another lengthy and decisive parliamentary session, new tests off the government's post-war programs and increasing Canadian activity in the international sphere.

For 1946, the most stunning development of all was the Russian spy quiry which echoed within the walls of parliament itself when it resulted in the arrest and convoction off the lone Labor-Progressive member Fred Rose, and touched off through its other ramifications long, and at times bitter, debates.

Important Legislation

In all, parliament sat 5 1-2 months—from March to August—and its debates covered a wide range of subjects in the national and international fields. Included among the most important bills passed by the Commons and the Senate were those which did these things:

Clearly defined Canadian Citizenship; extended a $1,250,000,000 loan to Britain; provided for a redistribution which will boost the Commons membership from 245 to 255; approved Canadian participation in several international organizations; established an atomic energy control board; approved trade treaties with Mexico and Colombia, and strengthened the Combines Investigations Act.

In addition, a parliamentary committee recommended the adoption of a revamped version of the Canadian ensign as a distinctive Canadian flag but its report was not acted upon before prorogation. Another committee tussled unsuccessfully with the disturbing problem of industrial unrest.

Outside parliament, the government took drastic action to protect the nation's economy against external inflationary tendencies by adjusting the Canadian dollar to parity with the United States dollar.

There were three by-elections, caused by deaths and retirement. Progressive Conservative candidates were victorious in Portage la Prairie, former Liberal seat, and Toronto Parkdale, formerly Progressive Conservative, while a Social Credit adherent won Pontiac, which had been in the Liberal column.

Prepare For By-Election

As the year-end approached, political parties were preparing for the Dec. 23 by-election in Richelieu-Vercheres, vatated by the death of Hon. J.A. Cardin, an independent.

Death off Mr. Cardin, whose service in the Commons spanned 35 years, left Prime Minister Mackenzie King, who has sat in the house 29 years, the member with the longest service. Mr. King, now 72, in 1946 also entered his 20th year as prime minister, breaking the record of tenure for all commonweath prime ministers over the last two centuries.

Federal cabinet changes in the last month of the year saw Justice Minister St. Laurent, who had been also administering the department of external affairs since Sept. 4, resign from the jjustice ministery and take on the external affairs post on a full time basis.

James L. Ilsley transferred from finance to the ministry of Justice and Douglas C. Abbott became minister of finance. Mr. Abbott retained the joint army-navy-defence post on a temporary basis.

The old year saw a worsening of Dominion-Provincial relations with bread-down of the Domion-Provincial conference, at which the federal government sought a realignment of financial responsibility between the Dominion and the provinces.

This was followed by the federal budget offer of individual agreements with the provinces, which took the form of new financial agreements with several provinces toward the close of the year.

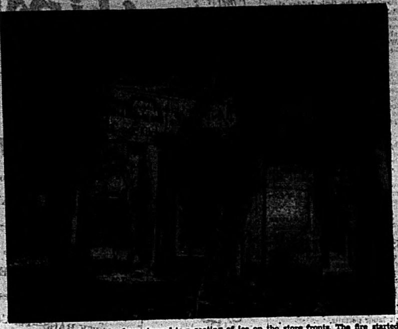
Zero temperature handicapped the Smiths Falls fire department during the blaze which destroyed the Kerfoot corner block on Monday. Help from near-by communities and Smiths Falls citizens aided Fire Chief Jack Miller (right) and his 23 volunteers. At the height of the day-long fire (left) billowing smoke hindered efforts to rescue 32 persons, including 11 children, all of whom were carried to safety.



Streams of water from fire hoses turned to a coating of ice on the store fronts. The fire started in the Candy Kitchen and flashed through the stores and 14 apartments in the block. Firemen managed to save adjoining buildings.

Favors Commission To Study Conditions On Greek Frontier

Lake Success, N.Y., Dec. 18 — (AP)—The United States proposed yesterday that the United Nations Security Council send a commission to the Balkans to investigate conditions on both sides of the Greek frontier, and urged the council to withhold judgment on Greece's complaints against her neighbor states until a report was at hand.

Herschel V. Johnson, chairman and American delegate to the council, said the United States believed such an investigation "is an essential first step" in the council's deliberations on the Greek charges.

"I shall, myself, avoid making any comments on the merits of the various allegations and counter-allegations unless forced to do so by the statements of other members," Johnson said.

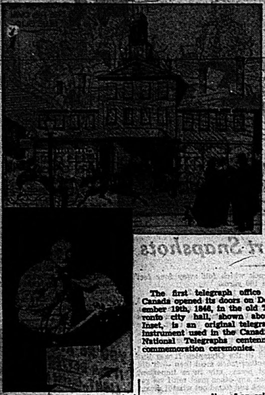
BELLEVILLE

Winged Words Over a Century: First Telegram in Canada Was Sent One Hundred Years Ago Today



The first telegraph office in Canada opened its doors on December 19th, 1846, in the old Toronto city hall, shown above. Inset, is an original telegraph instrument used in the Canadian National Telegraphs centennial commemoration ceremonies.

Toronto, Dec. 19 — It was just a century ago, today, that Canadians heard the click of the telegraph key for the first time. At noon, December 19th, 1846, Mayor W. H. Boulton, M.P.P., and a distinguished crowd of citizens, gathered in the office of the Toronto, Hamilton, Niagara and St. Catharines Electro - Magnetic Telegraph and watched with amazement Manager Samuel Porter tap out in Morse code the mayor's message of greeting to the mayor of Hamilton. Where one day before, it would have taken the stage coach some 10 hours to carry a letter from Toronto to Hamilton, old news reports said that the reply from Hamilton was received before the ink on the Toronto message was dry. Similar messages afterwards were sent to St. Catharines and Niagara. Such was the beginning of the telegraph industry in Canada.

Scene Reproduced.

One hundred years later, history repeated itself. The old city hall has gone and a plaque marks the telegraph office site. An old instrument a century old stood on a table before the plaque, its ancient lines in strong contrast with a modern teletype machine. Another distinguished gathering was grouped on the sidewalk, including Mayor R. H. Saunders, members of the Ontario Government, the Toronto board of control, the directorate and officials of the Canadian National System, and many other prominent figures in business and professional circles. The mayor wrote his message on a replica of an original telegraph blank and an operator, with messenger boy watching, tapped out the Morse code to Hamilton's Mayor Sam Lawrence. Both operator and messenger were dressed in old-time costume, and beside them stood a woman teletype operator and a messengerette attired in the old-time flounced skirts, with poke bonnet. The modern girl operator was seen at the teletype machine demonstrating the new high-speed keyboard.

The years had not impaired the old machine that carried Mayor Saunders' greeting. Its message was received in Hamilton and delivered to Mayor Lawrence written out by hand on the old-time blanks. Messages from Mayor Saunders also were sent to St. Catharines and Niagara-on-the-Lake, as was done a century ago.

New Part of C.N.R. System.

W. M. Armstrong, general manager, Canadian National Telegraphs, explained that the pioneer telegraph company is now a part of the Canadian National System and pointed out some of the vast strides made in a hundred years by the telegraph industry. He said that where the original telegraph line was a mere 89 miles, the Canadian National Telegraphs alone had a physical wire mileage of 177,000 miles, enough to gird the equator seven times and leave a trailer of 2,000 miles. In addition to this expansion of services, the telegraph industry operates cables, telephone systems, stock exchange ticker services, radio circuits for broadcasting and industrial installations beyond the widest dreams of the pioneer telegraphers of a century ago.

Even time itself has advanced. When the first message was sent, life in Upper Canada was regulated by sun time. The Standard Time zone has superseded it. To synchronize the exact minute of sending the original message, it was necessary to allow for the lapse of time between the two systems. This was 17 minutes and 35 seconds. Promptly on that second the old telegraph key started to click. The telegraph industry had bridged a century of achievement in Canada.

HAMILTON TIGERS RUN THE STRING TO 12 STRAIGHT

Defeat Hamilton Pats 5-1 While Oshawa Generals Take Stratford 4-2

(By The Canadian Press)

For the fourth time this season the younger Hamilton Pats tried to tame the Tigers and for the fourth time their intra-city rivals finished on top in an O.H.A. Senior A contest last night, to stretch their unbeaten string to 12 games at the season's half-way mark.

Lacking finish around the nets, Pats managed to keep the Tigers' high-scoring Shillington-Brady-Johnny Conick line to a single goal, only to have the allegedly second-string combination of Polly Miocinovich, Pert Peer and Ab Conick skate them dizzy. Miocinovich scored two Tiger goals and Peer one, with Doug. Runions adding the final tally. Desroches scored for the losers.

The loss left Pats in third place in the five-team group, two points behind Toronto Staffords and all of 14 behind the leading Tigers.

The lively second - place scramble in the 10-team Junior A loop took a new turn last night as Oshawa Generals took over sole occupancy with a 4-2 victory over Stratford Kroehlers in the Classic City.

Close behind were the idle Galt Red Wings and Toronto Marlboros, who jumped back into the contention with a four-point victory over the Flyers in Barrie by a 7-3 score. Both clubs trail the Generals by a single game. St. Michael's Majors still lead the group with an eight-point margin over Oshawa.

Hildebrand Scores Winner.

Kroehlers, with Tommy McGrattan making his debut in goal, made it interesting for the powerful Generals and Ike Hildebrand's goal with four minutes left broke up a tight battle. Ray Ceresino made sure with another counter two minutes' later.

Earlier, Bill Flick had put the home club in front in the second period after a scoreless opening frame. Leo Curik and Charlie Blair promptly rattled two home to give Generals the lead but the losers fought back with a counter by Mickey Roth midway through the third stanza.

Ten penalties were imposed including majors to Stratford defenceman Len Wharton and Oshawa forward Johnny Milliard for a second period scrap.

Two goals by Marlboro forward Billy Ford in the first four minutes of play gave the Dukes a lead they never lost in the Barrie encounter. Ford later made it three for the evening, with Cox, Church, Hazzard and Timgren getting the others. LaFrance, Zeidel and Aikens were the Barrie scorers.

BETTORS POUR NEARLY 2 BILLION INTO MACHINES

Indications Are the Goose May be Getting Tired of Laying Golden Eggs

By SID FEDER

New York, Dec. 19 —(AP)— Horse-race betting moved up close to the two-billion dollar business bracket in the United States this year, but indications were the goose may be getting tired laying golden eggs and is on the way back to producing just the usual, or garden, variety.

The annual Associated Press racing roundup showed 24,659,305 fans tossed a total of $1,830,287,-455 into the mutuel machines in 19 of the 20 states where the horses run, compared to $1,325,-619,356 bet by 18,433,721 customers in 1945, and that the state and a few city treasuries benefited by $113,506,325.30 in revenue, as against $85,265,405.48 a year ago.

The chief reason for the long jump was that racing got back on a full peacetime schedule of 2,433 operating days after its war-rationed 1,788 in 1945.

In New York, because of a brand new extra five per cent bite from every dollar bet, bringing to 15 per cent the total city, state and track take, wagering fell off from $450,653,190 in 1945 to $407,105,748 this year.

The California customers shovelled $400,026,946 into the iron men on a peace-time schedule of 287 racing days, compared to $152,394,493 on 110 afternoons in '45.

The longest leap in average betting was made by Florida, where the daily handle skyrocketed from $385,855 to $901,445.

Flop of Year Title Goes To Billy Conn

New York, Dec. 19 — (AP) — Billy Conn's dismal showing against heavyweight king Joe Louis from the opening bell of their championship fight to the very second he was clouted out in the eighth round last June today earned the Pittsburgh pretty boy another title — "Flop of the Year."

Almost five years from the night when he captured the United States fancy by his heroic stand against Louis in their first contest, Conn exiled himself to fistic oblivion by his puny, punchless efforts before 45,266 cash customers.

In that initial bout Conn nearly lifted Louis' crown until he got careless in the 13th round and the champion knocked him out.

Conn's inglorious performance in June was named by 35 writers out of 73 throughout the country as their first pick for the sports disappointment of the year in the Associated Press' annual year-end poll. The writers had been asked to name the top three disappointments of 1946.

Conn's "landslide" overshadowed the fall "flop's" of Ted Williams individually and the Boston Red Sox in general for their defeat by St. Louis' Cardinals in the World Series. Slugger Williams' weak hitting in the series was rated the second greatest disappointment.

The Red Sox wound up in a tie for third with the baseball New York Yankees, each team receiving first place ballots and a total of 38 points. The Yanks finished third behind Boston and Detroit and never had much of a chance.

Jolting Joe DiMaggio, who was expected to lead his team's attack, was ranked as the fifth biggest disappointment for his less than .300 hitting performance.

LAST NIGHT'S STARS

(By The Canadian Press)

Bill Mosienko, Chicago, whose two goals and two assists placed Black Hawks to a 5-2 victory over Detroit Red Wings.

Max Bentley, Chicago, high-scoring forward who scored once and figured in two other Black Hawk tallies.

Milt Schmidt, Boston, with a goal and two assists as Bruins edged New York Rangers 3-2.

AUSTRALIA WINS AGAIN

Sydney, Australia, Dec. 19 — (Reuters)—Australia today registered her second straight victory over England in the renewed test cricket series and needed to capture but one more match in the best-of-five series to win possession of the mythical "Ashes."

Australia won the six-day second match by an innings and 33 runs. Thus the Down-Under team achieved its second victory in the quest for the "Ashes," mythical symbol of cricket supremacy by better than an innings.

The first match, at Brisbane three weeks ago, ended with Australia the victors by an innings and 332 runs.

MUST SIT ON JURY

Chips Off The Sports Block

By George H. Carver, Sports Editor

It appears there is a gentleman in Peterborough who signs himself "James Rupert Brady," has a hockey team of junior calibre. M'sieu Brady in a somewhat illegible communication to this desk asserts, and we believe him, that there is no ice in the hamlet of liftlocks and Quaker Oats. Nor is there any immediate possibility of there being any.

Now M'sieu Brady, being anxious as to the well-being of his junior puckists whom he calls "Dit Clapper's Bruins," is desirous of crossing shinny rapiers with the beardless lads of this town, who likewise have done all their hockey playing to date on paper or blackboards.

Mr. Brady asserts he is willing to split the gate with the moguls of the Belleville junior squad if and when a game can be arranged which we doubt very much until Jack Frost sweeps down on us with more or less eclat, and gives Walt Gerow and his Hume Arena ice-making fraternity an assist.

Furthermore this "Dit Clapper's Bruins" junior squad is a smart team, afraid of nothing and are quite liable to win some sort of a junior championship. (Mr. Brady omits to tell us what calibre the Bruins are). In fact they're red hot and rarin' to go and no doubt will throw the fear of Mike into the St. Mike's, Oshawa Generals and other notable squads before the dew worms poke speculative snouts through the green grass next spring.

Who gave us that info? None other than Mr. Brady.

So there you are Messrs. Bill Dennis, Wally Berry et al. There's an opportunity to work out the Belleville Bears come ice time. Mr. Brady can be reached at his home at 177 Dow (Where's Joe?) or is it Downs Street, or is it Doris Street, Peterborough? Or mebbe 'tis Douro Street. Then again the experts claim it is Louis Street, which is probably right.

Things may bounce to a head regarding the artificial ice plant in the Hume Arena tonight if the City Hall grapevine is correct. It seems an ardent councillor is going to put somebody on the spot and if things go according to plan, some surprises may be published in the G.F.J. by the City Hall beat man tomorrow. In the meantime Walt. Gerow is patiently spraying the hockey surface in the arena with an eye on the weather and a prayer in his heart.

Many are the colorful stories being written by baseball experts about the late Walter Johnson, beloved pitching idol of baseball fandom and the man reputed to have the fastest throwing arm in the world of baseball. Johnson, or the "Big Train" as he was known because of his terrific speed, died in a Washington hospital a few days ago.

Johnson's 413 victories were surpassed only by the magic total of 510 compiled by the late Cy Young. Yet for years he pitched for a weak-hitting second division club and it wasn't until 1924 and '25 his 18th and 19th years in the major leagues that he finally landed on a winner. Even then at the age of 36 he was good enough to win the American League's Most Valuable Player prize of 1924 when his 20 victories out of 27 starts were a big factor in bringing the first pennant to the Washington Senators.

Johnson is believed to have pitched the greatest fast ball of any pitcher in the history of the game. The nearest approaches to him for speed were the modern Bob Feller, Amos Rusie of the Giants of the past century, and Rube Waddell, the great Athletic left-hander. For much of his career, Johnson was so fast that all he had to do was to throw the ball past the hitter. It was only in his later years that he developed a good curve, a change of pace and some of the other tricks of a crafty pitcher. "It took the years to make a pitcher out of me," Johnson once admitted. "Before that I was a thrower." But what a magnificent thrower.

From 1910 to 1919, inclusive, he never went under 20 victories, reaching 32 in 1912 and 36 in 1913. In the latter season he had the remarkable earned-run record of 1.14.

Baseball men of Johnson's day said he could have been even more effective had he possessed the slightest trait of meanness or guile in his nature. But he knew the explosive power behind his delivery, and never tried to drive a batter back from the plate. It was rare that he ever hit a batter, and then did no more than nudge his sleeve. And only one year did he hand out more than 100 bases on balls.

Joe Williams, of the New York World Telegram recalls the day he saw an umpire cry —the day Walter Johnson won his first World's Series game. October, 1924 was the date and John McGraw's New York Giants were the victims.

Johnson had been around 18 years and this was his first world's series. Over the years he had written pitching history with the majestic sweep of his iron arm — he had the most shutouts, the most strikeouts and it had been long agreed, the most speed.

Twice during the series, Joe recalls, Johnson had tried to turn back the Men of McGraw — and twice he had failed. "The old guy hasn't got it any more", the baseball writers concluded and the umpire who was also covering the series for a syndicate nodded unhappily.

Then came the game, the 7th and deciding contest of the series. Johnson didn't start it. He had had only one day's rest. He didn't come in until the 9th, or after the Senators had tied the score at 3-all.

When Johnson was announced as the relief pitcher, a noisy fan sitting in a section adjoining the press box yelled: "What are you guys trying to do; throw the series. That bum couldn't get me out."

The umpire leaped angrily to his feet and started in the direction of the noisy customer but was restrained by friends. The customer had seen him start, noted his size and physical trimness and lapsed into a discretionary silence.

The game was destined to go 12 innings and each inning was to be a challenge to what remained of Johnson's skill and stamina. In each of these last four innings the Giants had either the tying or winning run on the lines. But there was to be no tying or winning run for them. As the pressure mounted so did Johnson's resolution. In some mystic manner he was able to recapture his youth. He fanned five Giants in key spots.

Then came the historic climax. An easy Washington grounder struck a pebble and bounced over Freddie Lindstrom's head at third and Muddy Ruel came home with the winning run in the 12th. Bill Evans the umpire-reporter, took a large handkerchief from his pocket, wiped away large, authentic tears, and murmured: "This is the biggest kick I have ever got out of baseball."

One of the best tributes ever paid to a truly great hurler is the comparison of subsequent great pitchers to the "Big Train." And if that isn't a tribute to greatness, then pray, what is?

ADVICE TO HUSBANDS

Melbourne, Australia, (CP) — On his diamond wedding anniversary, George Thomas Newham, 83, told reporters that husbands shouldn't give their wives too much attention in the early days of marriage. "It encourages wives to become lazy and possessive," he said.

Canadian Sport Snapshots

By BRUCE LEAVITT
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Vancouver, Dec. 19 — (CP) — His acclaim as an Olympic sport hero is 18 years back in the record books, but Percy Williams, the one-time "world's fastest human" hasn't changed much personally—except that he 'breathes running upstairs now.'

He still lives in Vancouver, where he rode through the streets with the Premier of the day and was cheered by 30,000 pre-modern bobby soxers released from school when he returned from the 1928 Olympics. He had won the 100 and 200 metres for Canada at Amsterdam.

Percy is an insurance salesman now, 38, and only 11 pounds heavier than he was when his flying feet carried him to headlines all over the world.

Even the experts couldn't explain Percy's style in those days. The one who came closest was Charlie Paddock, the man he succeeded as the "world's fastest."

"He was a pull runner who could change into a drive runner," Charlie wrote at the time.

Referring to his style, Percy recalls the way Bob Granger, his trainer once told him: "You violate every principle known to the running game."

He describes his best race as one he ran in 1926 against Wally Scott, Granger's protege at the time. It was over a high-school track which fell away four feet in 100 yards.

Percy ran it in 9.2.

"People always ask me what I remember as the greatest race, but at the time one seemed just as important as the next. We were just kids who liked to run.

"I guess I tried as hard to win my first high school sprint as I did in the Olympics. It was just another track meet then — it did not seem any more important than any other meet until we got home and found out what it meant to people."

What it did mean to people was shown in the brand - new sports roadster with which a grateful city presented him—the $14,500 trust fund subscribed by citizens, and the cheering mobs waiting for the slight, 19-year-old youth at the train.

Most of those tangible links with this glory are gone now — the car, the trust fund which was finally closed in 1943.

His mother, Mrs. "Dot" Williams, received $750 annually until 1935 when 80 per cent of the balance was turned over outright.

Percy, still a bachelor, shares an apartment with his mother, who has a steady job looking after the trophies.

Still kept too is a cable, now yellowed with age which Percy received at Amsterdam from Mayor Malkin of Vancouver. It said simply: "Bravo Percy."

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

Now and then one of my young friends gives me an uplift. Not the kind advertised in fashion pages. It is the mental stimulation one gets from a welcome visit and mutual interests.

On a two day furlough, Bob thumbed his way in from camp. He popped into my hideout and cried: "Grab your shoes and let's play in the tournament. We can just make it in time." We did.

There were 29 tables composed mostly of experts in that area. Such contests are played in duplicate. That is where the same hands are played at all the tables.

Even in such a match, an element of luck crops up here and there. You get breaks, good and bad. Or make them. You must know when to take advantage of opportunities.

When you and your partner are tuned to the same bidding, each has confidence in the other. Then is when it is dangerous for any opponent to stick his neck out even a little bit.

As an example, we ran into this deal:

NORTH
♠K J 10 9 8 3
♥A 5

WEST
♠A Q 7 6 5
♣10 6 2

♥9 8 6 2
♣Q J 9 8

♥K Q J 4 3
♣A K 7 4

We were sitting south and north at the time. My opening with the south hand was one heart. With what my partner held, we could have made a game in something.

Being vulnerable at the time, our score for the game would have been 600 points or more. My partner was confident of this as soon as he heard my opening bid.

But over my opening one heart bid, our opponent in the west stuck in a bid of one spade. Maybe he did it for tactical reasons.

At any rate, my partner doubled the one spade bid. They took only two tricks; their two aces. We got a score of 900 for it.

An opponent may fool you by looking intelligent.

The Movie Column

By HELEN BANNERMAN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Hollywood has finally vowed to join the long-hairs and produce yarns with "significance" in a break from the frothy confections it has been turning out for some time. Just what the results of the new policy will be remain to be seen and there is the unhappy prospect that Hollywood may mangle real people's everyday problems the same way they did psychology in the spate of recent films which we, for one, hope has ended.

With the change of pace timed so closely to the beating Hollywood has been taking at the hands and tongues of various important persons in the industry—Samuel Goldwyn, Sir Alexander Korda, and others—it looks as though the public's real thoughts about its entertainment may at last have penetrated beyond the yes-man.

Two of the "significant yarns" at present in production or being written with the movies in mind are by Canadians. Toronto-born Gwethalyn Graham's "Earth and High Heaven" about the thorny problem of anti-semitism, is owned by Mr. Goldwyn and will go into production in the spring.

"Sealed Verdict," a novel being written by Lionel S. B. Shapiro around the Nazi war crime trials, is under option to Paramount. Mr. Shapiro, a former Montreal Gazette reporter, is in New York finishing the book before he returns to his foreign correspondent's job in Germany.

"Stool Pigeon," first work by criminal lawyer Lawrence Blaine, is planned by Twentieth Century-Fox. The story is unusual in that it probes sympathetically into the central character's background to find out how he got started in his life work by the sociological influences to which he was subjected.

"Anna Zenger," a story revolving around freedom of the press, written by Kent Cooper, general manager of the Associated Press, is reported to have been sold to an unidentified independent producer.

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop was smoking to himself in his private chair and I was counting my Chrissmas fund money, saying, Heck, pop, I've only got enough to do my share in the club.

What the dooce is the Club? pop said, and I said, Its 6 of us fellows and we made a sacred agreement to buy each other a Chrissmas present no matter what it costs as long as it dont cost less than 20 cents. That's the principal rule, nothing can cost less than 20 cents. They can cost more if you want, but I guess most of them won't, I said.

Well, you certainly cant let the Club down, that's a dett of honor, pop said, and I said, Sure, that's what's worrying me. I mean how about ma's present for instance? I said.

How indeed? pop said. It would never do to disappoint your mother, she's probably been looking fallward to it for weeks. It's a notty problem, but you think it can be solved by a doller bill? he said, and I said, Sure, pop, G, some of the best presents for ladies only cost a doller.

Good, nothing but the best is good enough for your mother, pop said.

And he handed me a doller out of his wallet, saying, Now dont worry your head as far as I'm concerned, because if you wish me a heartfelt Merry Chrissmas I'll be amply sattisfied.

Well jimminy pop, you wont need to be, because ma gave me a doller to buy you a present when I explained about the Club to her, and she claimed she'd be sattisfied perconly if I wished her a Merry Chrissmas, but now you're both going to get swell doller prescents and I'll wish you each a perfect Merry Chrissmas just a same, I said, and pop said, By gollies it looks like a big Christmas all around.

Which it does, me having saw the outside of a lot of packages already.

AT THE BELLE

"Follow That Woman"

"Follow That Woman", Paramount's newest comedy-thriller, with the accent on thrills, is now entertaining audiences at the Belle Theatre. This is another Pine-Thomas production and one that is in keeping with the high standards established in their action films.

William Gargan and Nancy Kelly are co-starred. The supporting cast includes Regis Toomey, Byron Barr, Ed Gargan and Don Costello.

"Swamp Fire", Blazing Romance

A rivalry which began in pre-war Olympic swimming pools is being continued on movie film. The principals, who have competed in many races, are Johnny Weissmuller and Buster Crabbe, both of whom are seen in the thrilling Paramount picture, "Swamp Fire," the second feature attraction on the same program.

The two huskies forsake trophies and rules to stage in this picture, a knock 'em down, drag 'em out fracas for the romantic interests of Virginia Grey and Carol Thurston, which ends up with both scrappers falling into the bayou.

Popular Science in Technicolor completes the program.

WORKER KEEPS BEARD

Toronto, Dec. 19.— (CP) — There's a 62-year-old construction worker in this city named Kuczma with a long white beard — but he can work as long and as hard as the next man. The whiskers are a reminder of the "hungry thirties" when he tramped the roads looking for work. Work came and Kuczma found plenty of jobs, but the beard stayed. Despite his patriarchal appearance, foremen have discovered that he is not an old man.

OMAHA, DALLAS HEAD RESPECTIVE GROUPS IN LOOP

Knights Defeat Kansas City and Texans Take St. Paul

(By The Canadian Press)

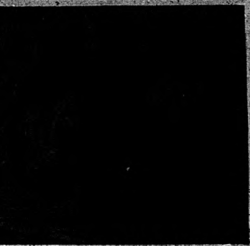
The United States Hockey League had undisputed leaders in both divisions today. With Omaha topping the northern teams and Dallas heading the southern group.

Dallas Texans broke a deadlock for first place with Tulsa by trimming St. Paul, 7-3, last night and Omaha Knights scored a 4-2 win over Kansas City to break a first place tie with Minneapolis Millers in the northern division. Both Tulsa and Minneapolis were idle.

Minneapolis will have a chance to regain a tie for the lead tonight when they play Fort Worth. Tonight's only other game will be between St. Paul and Houston.

Omaha maintained its jinx over the Plamores last night as Frank Porteous tallied twice and Berple Strongman and Joe Iannarelli once each for Omaha while Ray Powell and Olmstead scored for Kansas City.

Dallas went scoreless for the first period of its game with St. Paul but in the second and third frames Laurie Peterson counted twice and Lloyd Finkbeiner, Joe Lund, Squee Allen, Gerry Belemarre and Gord Petrie each tallied once. Bob Dill chalked up 2 of the loser goals and Nakina Smith added the other.



McCARTHY THEATRE—The most savage-with-excitement race battle ever filmed is to be seen in 'Silver Devil,' adapted from Peter B. Kyne's Cosmopolitan Magazine story opening tomorrow at the McCarthy Theatre along with Rudyard Kipling's "Jungle Book" in technicolor with "Sabu" and a cast of thousands.

AT THE CAPITOL — Ruth Nelson and Dorinda Clifton, as mother and daughter, have many tensely dramatic scenes in Columbia Pictures' screen presentation of the famed Gene Stratton Porter best-seller, "The Girl of the Limberlost," now playing at the Capitol Theatre. On the same program "Frontier Feud," starring Johnny Mack Brown and Raymond Hatton.

Schmidt, Bauer and Dumart, Kitchener Kids, Lead Bruins' Advance in the National Loop

Boston Defeats Rangers 3-2 and Black Hawks Take Red Wings 5-2

By JACK MITCHELL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

If sharing makes Buddies, then the name selected in a Boston contest for the favorite forward line of their National Hockey League Bruins looked considerably sharper today.

Headline writers generally dropped the tag like a hot-cake right after the rechristening ceremonies last season. The "Kitchener Kids" label seemed better to describe the rugged trio it denoted.

But the Bruins' big three of Milt Schmidt, Bobby Bauer and Woody Dumart showed the spirit of buddies last night in dividing the Boston goals one apiece as the Bruins came through with a 3-2 victory over New York Rangers.

That division continued the same pace the trio has set all season in keeping the Bruins in a contending spot. The scoring statistics show both Schmidt and Bauer with 11 goals each and Dumart with one less.

Schmidt, the lanky centre of the trio who returned from the RCAF part way through last season, stole the headlines at Boston last night by scoring his goal with but 17 seconds to play.

Besides avoiding the eighth tie for the Bruins in 22 games, that tally enabled the team to lessen their margin behind the second place Montreal Canadiens, idle last night along with the leading Toronto Maple Leafs.

No Change in Standing

The loss caused no change in New York's standing as Detroit Red Wings, tied with the Rangers for fourth place, took a 5-2 pasting from the cellar-dwelling Chicago Black Hawks in the only other match.

For the Hawks, the victory marked the first since Nov. 27. In that eight-game stretch, the only other point they picked up was in a scoreless draw with the same Red Wings.

The Hawks finally looked like a big league team as they opened up a two-goal lead in the first period, held it when each scored once in the second session, and outscored the Red Wings 2-1 in the final period.

Bill Mosienko was the leading Chicago sharpshooter with two goals. Defenceman Johnny Mariucci, forward Max Bentley and rookie Ralph Mattrass each got one.

For Detroit Pete Horeck and Eddie Bruneteau did the scoring.

Besides his own tally, Schmidt participated in both his linemates' goals at Boston to climb into fourth place among the league's individual marksmen with his 11 goals and 13 assists.

Bauer started the Bruins off with a tally, but veteran Bryan Hextall gave the New Yorkers this one back in the first period.

Grey-haired Neil Colville shot New York into a 2-1 lead in the second but Dumart made it 2-2 at 7:10 of the third period.

With 17 seconds to go, Schmidt whacked home Bauer's pass for the victory.

SPORT SHORTS FROM BRITAIN

By JACK SULLIVAN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Dec. 18 — (CP) — Somebody had better make a decision fast or a lot of punters — (betters to you) will raise a mighty yelp. The issue is: when is a horse race not a race; and if a race is declared a "no race," what becomes of the bets?

The poser was set for the National Hunt Club committee when Vitement, an eight-year-old grey, galloped home in front at Wolverhampton in a race that was not officially started. Bill Newham, who assists Official Starter Capt. P. Vivian, found himself with three runners for the Shifnal Optional Selling Steeplechase but no Capt. Vivian.

"I looked around for Vivian, but as I couldn't see him I took the liberty of starting the race myself," he said. One minute after the start of the race, Starter Vivian, astride his pony, was hurrying toward the starting gate.

Immediately the race was over, Vitement's rider weighed in and bets were settled, but a loud squawk was registered by people who wagered on the odds-on favorite Comique. The stewards couldn't find anything in the rules covering the point.

The question now is under discussion by the N. H. C. committee.

Munro Donald, son of the late Jim Donald who was known through Australia as "The Prince of Strokes," stroked a Richmond, Victoria, quartet to a two-length victory in the Victorian Rowing Association regatta here. Munro is blind.

"Good winner, that Bruce Woodcock," said Heavyweight Georges Martin into a microphone. His statement told thousands of radio listeners that Britain's champion Bruce Woodcock had won his bout at Manchester against the French boxer.

Martin was knocked out in the third round and the radio announcer, David Southwood, broke off his B.B.C. description of a fierce assault by Bruce. Listeners then heard a continuous roar of applause.

After a moment or so the commentator indicated he was going into the ring to interview the two men. Woodcock said: "I am glad to pull it off again." Martin followed with his line. Announcer Southwood never did say who won.

New French Government Policy

BURNED FINGERS

By Kathleen Norris

CHAPTER 28

She sat at the mirror one winter night looking at this self, taking stock analysing the things that Jennifer Richie was and was not. She was a pretty woman of twenty-three; but then all girls were pretty nowadays! The woman had deep-set, black-lashed eyes full of dance and fire and soft lights and laughter; they had been soaked and swollen with tears often enough in the old days, but they had forgotten the tears now; they were happy eyes now. Swept down over the woman's wide forehead was a wing of gold-brown hair; a ruffled cap of it framed her face; the mouth was wide and red; the cheeks lean; the nose short and just a trifle uptipped. "Just the way every girl wants her nose to be," said the girls at the shop. The one real beauty of the face was a clear, transparent, almost colorless skin—a skin that had odd mauve lights in it under the eyes and at the temples, and that habitually delicate pallor, a skin that could sometimes flush with the warmth of a pear's flushed cheek.

But of course all this categorical signified nothing. The real question was, was this an attractive face, an attractive woman? Jennifer took stock of herself dispassionately. Yes, she thought, she must be attractive; she was no professional beauty, she wasn't conspicuous as she slipped through the early morning streets on her way to work. But when she modeled Vogelsang's beautiful evening gowns—yes, and at other times too, she knew people thought she was—well nice. Once when they were all walking at night she had slipped her small hand into Jim's big one; he had caught it and held it warmly, liking to have it in his. And once dismounting from her horse at Fallen Leaf, he had put both hands under her arms and jumped her down, and had given her a look of affectionate admiration. "Aren't you a little [illegible]-tocking side?" he had asked. He must have found her likable at least. And if he did it didn't matter much what anyone else thought of her.

That was the way it stood. She loved Jim Lippincott with all of her—heart and mind and soul and body. She was as much his as if they had been married for years. There simply could not be thought of any other man now; there was no other man. The slow half smile with which Jim listened to any confidence, the tones of his voice, the rough waves of his thick hair and the long lines of his tall, slightly stooped body, were all quite different from those of any other human being in the world. Just to think of him thrilled Jennifer through all her being; she took the thought of him out from the secret recesses of her soul and feasted on it at odd times during the day, and when she was drifting off to sleep at night and sometimes when she was walking home alone in the early winter dusk she said his name aloud: "Jim Lippincott. Jim. Jim."

All the miracle that is married life seemed to inclose her in a shimmering globe of dreams. The honeymoon—why, she had been taking talk of honeymoons for granted! She had known girls to get married and to say later, "We went to Pebble Beach," "We went to Coronado," or even, "We went to Honolulu, or New York." It had all sounded quite commonplace—pleasant enough, with new clothes and a new name, but not too exciting. But now, to think of going off with Jim as his wife, going off in a flutter of flowers and good wishes and laughter and tears, being alone with him looking to him for plans, trusting him with all her heart, and always to trust him....

No, she couldn't think of that; ecstacy suffocated her. She would belong to Jim, and in even more breath-taking sense he would belong to her. "Jim darling, your tired," she could say when he came back from the hospital after a hard day's work. "Let's not go out. I'll fix some eggs; there's half the pie left."

They would house-hunt together. House-hunting with Jim Lippincott! This house was a little ingle for breakfasts; that house with a brick fireplace. A garden here; their garden. "In case, someday...."

Yes children someday. Jennifer shuddered through every fiber of her body, but there was joy as well as pain in the anticipation. "The Lippincotts have a little girl." No old fairy tale ever held magic like that. A breathing little living creature in her arms, Jim looking down at both of them. How did women live through the joy of it!

She would rouse herself from these reveries with a sharp, half-amused and half-wistful reminder that Jim had never yet shown for her anything more than liking, anything more than the kindliness he extended to every person, old and young, with whom he in contact. He was always gentle, always kind, and if he was silent much of the time that was only because he was overworking like almost all young doctors, and was deeply absorbed in his work, again like most young doctors.

He had shown no special attention to Jennifer, he had not indicated in any way what he liked her above any of the others but how much had she shown him? On that last day at the lake she had been melting toward him with every look she gave him, with every word she said. The horse she had been riding had somehow been guided up next to his horse; at the picnic lunch Jennifer had hardly been able to speak because her eyes had been so constantly fixed on Jim; she had been quivering with eagerness to listen to him, to laugh, to be the first to see that he might take another deviled egg, another square of gingerbread. That night, too, when they had all been on the steps at the cabin, tired, happy, fed, watching the moon rise over the lake—oh, he must have been a fool not to have seen, or rather to have sensed, the wave upon wave of emotion that was carrying her far out to sea!

If he was coming up at Christmas time, then she would see him at the Evanses'. If he wasn't coming up, what could she send him that would remind him that she was alive? Christmas was still weeks away; she would wait for some inspiration on that point.

Meanwhile she must make herself a more and more perfect woman, more and more worthy of him. In speech, in manner, in gentleness and wisdom she must gain something every day. Jennifer gathered together in her mind all the composite little elegancies and refinements of the women she saw; she picked up word, that one's attitude, toward music, a third one's fashion of speech of holding her shoulders. said of her in surprise on the first evening of his stay at the lake: "Why, this young lady knows something about everything, Jim. Where do you find schools that teach them this way?" and Jim had returned smilingly, "Yes, Jennifer knows everything."

Monty, with his satrical notebooks filled with odds and ends of information had been right one didn't need a great deal of erudition in this world to impress people. Just a few words—but they might be the right words, said at the right moment—could give an impression of learning that carried a long way. One might feel secretly a little ashamed of the simplicity of the process, but that didn't matter. The effect was there.

"And of course," she thought, tabloid bits of information. You go on; one thing leads to another. Perhaps Monty knew that, perhaps he was just fooling when he said a few phrases were enough; perhaps he knew that if I got interested at all I'd have to know more."

She had to have Jim Lippincott's imagined aproval of everything she studied or planned. It must be suitable to the position of a doctor's wife. When she got a fall suit it was with Jim's taste in mind; he had liked the the dark blue coat, therefore he would like the plain dark blue suit with the pique collar. Now and then she had a momentary chill at the thought that he might be falling in love with some girl in Pasadena; she dismissed it resolutely.

And meanwhile the world had been plunging steadily toward its blackest and saddest hour. Eight or nine members of Jennifer's group had been together on the bright winter Sunday when the horror of Pearl Harbor had shaken the radio waves. They had been hilariously huddled into the Flood kitchen, putting together the thick steaks, the buttered buns, the old black coffeepot that were to be carried down to Halfmoon Bay.

The picnic plan had suddenly collapsed. Striken young faces had looked at each other in blank bewilderment. There had finally been a sort of barbecue meal in the Floods' back yard in the shdow of the windmill with the radio going full blast. Afterward the men scattered to get in touch with authorities at the hospital, at the office downtown. Jennifer had gone with Joe and some of the others to the Evanses'; she was like a beloved daughter of the house now, taken into their shocked and troubled counsel as a matter of course.

Mollie had been there, frightened and tearful, clinging to Dan. Dan was going into the Air Force. Joe was for the Marines. The older men of the family had talked of the first great war; they were good for service still. Most of the women ate that night's supper silently, in tears, and a week or two later Jennifer was giving up every third afternoon and night to the interceptor command. Blackouts were still observed, though the worst of that scare was over. But the scare had been, and they were all the soberer and wiser for it.

Jim had come up at Christmas; he did not send her any word, as she had steadily hoped he would; he was simply there at the Evanses' one afternoon when she went to ask about holiday plans.

It was a dark, rainy afternoon. Jennifer shed her overcoat and umbrella in the hall, ran down the steps to the drawing room, from whence came a murmur of voices. Lamps were lighted here and a dozen persons were scattered about in a half circle around the big fireplace.

Oh, this, she thought, was exactly what an afternoon in the holidays ought to be! Firelight and lamplight and people all calling out welcomes and herself coming in, rosy with rain and laughter, and finding a place near Mollie at the tea table. Tea was so pleasant—real tea, not cocktails—and bread and butter and big sugar cookies and nothing else! There was something infinitely heatening in the sight of it and the smell of it and the taste of the first cup. And just before she sat down Jim Lippincott was standing beside her, looking down with a smile of real pleasure.

"Jennifer how well you look!"

Was he as excited as she was was he excited at all? She could not guess. She found it hard to murmur even the briefest of replies. Then she was deep in the low chair beside Mollie to listen to the others and presently contribute her own voice to the chorus. Jim could not see; he was behind her with one long lean arm resting on the back of her chair. Now and then she turned and gave him an oblique glance, but for the most part she was content to stare at the fire and present to him only the curve of her cheek and the dampened rings of her drying hair.

It was the eve of Christmas Eve. They were all going downtown to dinner. Tomorrow night would be the regular home night with a big dinner at the Evanses' and games afterward and the finishing of the tree and piling of packages about it. Marg'ret or Delia or one of the younger cousins would play the Christmas songs before they all went off to midnight mass, and Mollie might bring a staring, dewy-eyed baby downstairs to blink at the lights and the laughing faces and be properly worshiped and passed from hand to hand.

Jennifer was going home to the Flood house and would be picked up there later. It was still raining. Joe Evans took her home in his car. She had only one word alone with Jim.

"I was asking about you," he said. It was not much to treasure, but it was something and she had to make the most of it, for he did not join them at Raciiotti's. Jennifer felt her heart sink and the whole evening go blank. She checked her coat with the others, took her place at the bare long table with its limp white cloth and coarse glasses, tried for a not too desolated tone.

"Oh, why not? Why couldn't Jim come?"

"Some doctor out at the city and County—Keith, go in there next to Jennifer," Mollie answered, busily arranging the seating, "and you on the other side, Martin. Some doctor telephoned him and asked him to come out to the hospital," she said. "It seems it was an unusal case and Jim's eyes lighted up the way they do, you know, and off he went! He said he'd come as soon as he could."

Novelty Gifts Have Had Big Vogue This Year

Christmas shoppers who lean toward novelties and such trinkets as gifts for relatives and friends, and who have yet to do their Christmas shopping, need have no fear as to sell-outs.

A quick survey of novelty shops today revealed a large variety of odd and useful gifts, and there are plenty left for those who have yet to get that present for the big day.

At that, this kind of Yuletide merchandise has been moving well, as has costume jewelry, despite a decided upsurge in prices.

But there are novelty gifts for all and at attractive prices. You can pay high prices or low ones and still get what you want.

But with only four more shopping days left until St. Nick does his annual job of breaking and entering next Tuesday night, shoppers are urged to do their buying as quickly as possible, and that applies to all lines of holiday merchandise.

U.N.E.S.C.O. Teaches Theme Of Tolerance, Understanding Friendship States Delegate

By ROSS MUNRO
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Paris, Dec. 19—(CP Cable)—The program planned by representatives of 44 nations at the United Nations Economic, Social and Cultural Organization meeting just concluded, a program "to make the peoples of the world live and think in terms of one world," may bring immediate results in Canada and other countries, Herman Voaden of Toronto, member of the Canadian delegation, told The Canadian Press in an interview.

Voaden, president of the Canadian Arts Council pointed to the education program of U.N.E.S.C.O. which calls for immediate efforts by teachers, departments of education, and adult education leaders, to work for international understanding and seek to revise text books developing narrow nationalism.

On the eve of his departure for Canada, Voaden said that he was confident that Canadians would begin to "feel and think in terms of U.N.E.S.C.O.'s ideas."

"War is made in the minds of men" (Prime Minister) Attlee declared and he added "it is in the minds of men defences for peace must be built. U.N.E.S.C.O. teaches the age-old theme of tolerance, understanding and friendship," the Canadian delegate said.

No Interference With Art.

Voaden declared it is important to remember that U.N.E.S.C.O. does not seek to interfere with the art and culture of member countries.

"It seeks one world of the mind and heart, enriched by varied lives and culture of many nations and regions."

"The unique thing about U.N.E.S.C.O. is that it requires each state to seek the co-operation of that nation's bodies of educators, artists, scientists. In one way or another many of these organizations were represented here at U.N.E.S.C.O. Hence, the unusual character of the conference.

"Everywhere here, there is a deep conviction U.N.E.S.C.O. will have the most far-reaching influence of any U. N. organization. Politicians and businessmen were unsuccessful in preventing the Second World War. They have not been doing too well since the end of that war.

Throws New Challenge.

"U.N.E.S.C.O. is important because it throws the whole challenge to a new body of men and women — to teachers, scientists, artists, librarians, and scholars. These are the men and women in every country who mold the thoughts and feelings of the people. In U.N.E.S.C.O., for the first time in the world's history, they have their chance to build the one-world outlook.

"In Canada — I can speak, I am sure for the teachers and artists of our country — they have eagerly seized this opportunity. Because of their enthusiasm and devotion to U.N.E.S.C.O. ideals I am sure in Canada as elsewhere U.N.E.S.C.O. will succeed. I am sure U.N.E.S.C.O. is a sign and portent for a peaceful and better world of the future."

Held High Priority.

Among the 150 projects approved at the conference, education held a high priority with the goal of teaching a one-world ideal Voaden said. U.N.E.S.C.O. proposes to develop a world-wide program in fundamental education and establish minimum educational standards in the fight against illiteracy.

Revision of textbooks is high on the list of the experts endeavoring to cull out distortions in the truth.

Dramatic plans were made here for the study of the possibility of a world-wide radio network. Another important program is the survey of the press, films, telecommunications, and postal services as to adequacy. The plans are all part of the free flow of information thesis of U.N.E.S.C.O. which, although it has no power to enforce its conclusions, believes that the study and airing of problems constitutes action for world good.

Radio Forum.

There is a proposal for creation of an international radio forum and a world university of the air within the framework of existing facilities.

U.N.E.S.C.O. will exert immediate influence probably in educational relief and rehabilitation with plans to launch a $100,000,000 fund-raising campaign to rebuild schools and obtain educational equipment for the war-devastated countries.

Other results of the conference include projects for an international library book loan system, for aid to scientific development and the exchange of scientists. U.N.E.S.C.O. also intends to bring together philosophers, psychologists, teachers, economists and scientists to study the "tensions conducive to war."

Composed of Experts

Responsibilities of U.N.E.S.C.O. in this field and the bearing of copyright matters including the rights of authors in literary artistic and scientific work will be on its program.

The committee will be composed of experts on copyright representative of U.N.E.S.C.O.'s artistic literary and scientific endeavor—and they will work under legal guidance and in consultation with experts of the several copyright systems and organizations.

This work will go forward in preparation for an international copyright conference to be held in Brussels, in October, 1947, to amend the Berne Copyright convention.

Canada will be asked to send by March 1, 1947, its views on copyright matters relating to U.N.E.S.C.O.'s program.

U.N.E.S.C.O. seeks the free flow of ideas and information but artists, writers and musicians still must be protected and these two opposing aspects of the program have to be reconciled, Voaden said.

He cautioned that the conference would cause U.N.E.S.C.O. to suffer irreparably if artists, writers, and musicians felt that U.N.E.S.C.O., in its efforts to break down the barriers to the free flow of ideas, was prepared to prejudice the rights of creative workers.

Miss Elizabeth Wyn Wood, Toronto sculptor and president of the committee on foreign relations for the Canadian arts council pointed out to the conference the importance of copyright to sculptors, painters, industrial artists and musicians.

Break Down Barriers

In arts, Voaden said, U.N.E.S.C.O. aims at the "use of art education to broaden sympathy and understanding. U.N.E.S.C.O. wants to break down those barriers which prevent art and art influences from moving around the world. It wants to let the streams flow and by exchanges of exhibits and artists see the pattern of art reachings into even the small communities."

He envisaged seeing foreign art exhibits in small Canadian Prairie towns. U.N.E.S.C.O. will study the rôle of education in creative arts at all levels and plans the organization of information services in these arts. Defence of the freedom of artists will be the responsibility of U.N.E.S.C.O.

Study Promotion Means

The organization will encourage world-wide circulation of the products of creative artists; study the best means of promoting movement of art exhibitions from country to country and survey obstacles such as transport charges, customs and duties in the literary field.

U.N.E.S.C.O. decided to create an international literary pool to supply magazines and newspapers with material.

The convention accepted a Canadian proposal that U.N.E.S.C.O. should not normally publish literary works although it was decided U.N.E.S.C.O. should encourage, and if necessary, assist certain publications. The exception to the publication rule was the lone decision that in 1947 U.N.E.S.C.O. will publish an anthology of suffering and resistance.

The organization will establish its own translation office which will encourage a bibliography of translation and compile a list of top translators and works suitable for translation.

The Canadian view was accepted that representative nation bodies be consulted in the selection of translators and the books.

The Canadian delegation was assured by the secretariat that in the overall program of circulating exhibitions U.N.E.S.C.O. would be interested in facilitating the circulation of book displays and holding book fairs.

The conference resolved that the theatre including the ballet and opera, be placed on equal footing with other creative arts in U.N.E.S.C.O. This idea was advanced by the Canadian and rapidly won approval.

U.N.E.S.C.O. intends to call an international meeting of theatre experts to establish an international theatre institute which will be independent of U.N.E.S.C.O. and supported by private or national branches or centres.

Technical Assistance

The new theatre division will give technical assistance with such aids as photographs, models, and designs but even assistance in this form will be given to theatres only after consultation with national drama bodies. Canadians strongly emphasized this point and definite assurance from the secretariat. The Canadians also pointed out the importance of regional and international drama festivals in promoting U.N.E.S.C.O. activities.

U.N.E.S.C.O. stressed collaboration with other organizations. The Food and Agriculture Organization, World Health Organization, and the International Labor Organization, were the well as the institute of intellectual Co-operation a former league of Nations agency which U.N.O. is taking over. Also mentioned were the International Council for Scientific Union and the International Bureau of Education.

U.S. Renews Fight For Final Vote On A-Energy Plan

11-Member Commission Will Investigate Greek Charges

By MAX HARRELSON

Lake Success, N. Y., Dec. 20 — (AP) — The United States today accepted a Canadian compromise proposal providing that the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission approve the principles of the American atomic control plan without deciding on the final wording.

The Canadian compromise was offered after Soviet delegate Andrei A. Gromyko demanded another postponement of a final vote on the American proposals which call for veto-free punishment for violators of atomic energy controls.

United States representative Bernard M. Baruch, who had indicated earlier that he would press for an immediate vote on his plan, said he was gratified at the Canadian proposal and would accept it.

British delegate Sir Alexander Cadogan and Australian delegate Paul Hashick also supported the Canadian plan.

Gromyko had asked that a vote be delayed for "six or seven days."

Not Time to Study

Gromyko said he had not had time to study the United States resolution in relation to the measure adopted by the General Assembly last week laying down the basic principles for a general arms reduction.

Gen. McNaughton of Canada took the floor immediately and supported Gromyko's demand for a delay. He said he supported the American resolution, but felt that it should be sent to a committee to be studied along with the Assembly's arms-limitation resolution and a special report on safeguards.

He proposed that the commission approve the principles of the American proposals, but leave the final wording to the committee, which would integrate the resolution with other committee reports.

Gen. McNaughton pleaded for a unanimous report to the Security Council.

British delegate Sir Alexander Cadogan was said to have received new instructions only this morning, advising him not to take any action which would break the unanimity of the Big Five powers on the atomic question.

The United States is demanding prompt action. As long ago as Nov. 12, largely because of American insistence, Dec. 31 was set as a target date for a commission report on all phases of its work—proceedings, findings and recommendations — to the Security Council.

In the Security Council last night, the Soviet Union, which three months ago vetoed an American proposal for an on-the-spot investigation of complaints against Greece, made a number of concessions.

In two sessions totalling almost nine hours, Gromyko dropped a demand to extend the investigation to cover all Greece's internal affairs in favor of a less extensive investigation, and did not insist upon curtailment of the commission's staff.

Rose Loses Appeal Against Sentence Of Six Years

Montreal, Dec. 20 (CP) — Appeals by Fred Rose against conviction of an espionge conspiracy charge and against sentence of six years imprisonment on the charge were rejected unanimously today by the Appeals Court.

Mr. Justice J. Arthur Gagne delivered the judgment rejecting the appeals on all counts.

Rose, Polish-born Labor-Progressive member of parliment for Montreal-Cartier, was convicted and sentenced last June after a Court of King's Bench trial in which the Crown sought to link him with a ring of espionage agents supplying information to Russia.

The 39-year-old M.P. was charged with conspiring to communicate information to Russia. Another charge, of communicating information to the Soviet Union, has not yet been heard and there have been unofficial reports it would be dropped if his appeal was rejected.

Since his conviction, Rose has been detained without bail at the Montreal jail at nearby Bordeaux.

Rio Mobs Attack RedPartyHdqtrs., Burn Russ Flag

Rio de Janeiro, Dec. 20—(AP)—Anti-Communist mobs, apparently incensed at an incident involving a Brazilian diplomatic official in Moscow, attacked and stoned headquarters of the Brazilian Communist party last night, beat a guardsman on duty, wrecked Communist election billboards and burned a Russian flag.

The demonstrations occurred several hours after Foreign Minister Paul Fernandes said Brazil would withdraw her second secretary of the Embassy at Moscow, Joao Batista Soares De Pina, at the request of Russia.

Despite the violence in downtown streets, no casualties were reported.

Fernandes said Brazil's Ambassador in Moscow had agreed to release Soares de Pina but had felt the secretary was not responsible for a street scuffle in which the secretary was reported involved.

The foreign minister said the diplomat "may have been imprisoned and mistrated." He added he was seeking official information from the Embassy in Moscow, headed by Ambassador Pimentel Brandao.

90,000 Workers Will Halt Work Until January 2

Detroit, Dec. 20 (CP) — The Ford Motor Company announced today that all but a few operations will stop Tuesday afternoon and remain halted until Jan. 2. The shutdown will affect an estimated 90,000 Ford workers throughout the United States.

D. S. Harder, Vice-President of operations, said the work stoppage was attributed to a serious shortage of steel nd malleable and grey iron castings.

Although we are producing steel at record capacity in our own plant we are going behind daily at our present level of car and truck production," he said.

Only four days' production will be lost. The company normally closes Saturday and Sunday, Christmas Day and New Year's Day. Salaried workers will not be affected by the shut-down.

38 WINTER AT KINGSTON

Kingston, Dec. 20 — (CP) — Delayed by storms on its trip from the lakehead, the Canada Steamship Lines freighter Battleford today started to unload grain at the Kingston elevator. When it moves into winter berth, it will bring to 38 the number of ships wintering here.

Helping Children as Santa Claus Part of Work For Former Marine

By WILL GRIMSLEY

Memphis, Tenn., Dec. 20 (AP)—A shabbily-dressed youngster edged up to Santa Claus in an uptown department store.

"What do you want for Christmas, honey?" Santa asked perfunctorily.

The girl raised a pinched, sallow face and looked at Santa with her one good eye.

"I don't want anything," she replied. "A doctor is going to fix my eye—and that's my Christmas."

Santa's eyes welled up a bit and he said, "just a minute, honey." Then he went over and picked out the prettiest doll in toyland.

"Take this home," he said, "and Merry Christmas."

That cost Bill Henson nine bucks. But it was just part of a day's work for the 23-year-old former marine who takes his role of St. Nick seriously.

"I just can't stand to see the poor kids want for things, I guess," Bill said. "That's why I took this job."

Then it came out.

Bill has been wearing the white foliage and rocking the store's kindergarten patrons on his knee for four weeks now.

He makes $22 a week. But so far all of it has gone to buy playthings and clothes for the unfortunates who have appeared before him—and he's $70 in the hole besides.

And young Henson hasn't the money to throw way. He is a sophomore at Memphis State College. He was in the marines three years, fought on Saipan, Tinian and on other Pacific battle grounds.

While on the west coast he visited a store during the Christmas season, he said, and "didn't like the way the Santa Clauses did their job"

"They were too cold and business-like," he said, "and I didn't like the way they brushed off the poor youngsters."

That prompted Bill to apply for a Santa Claus job downtown.

He's "the best Santa Claus we've ever had," commented store superintendent Walter Smith. "Has a wonderful way with children."

Bill is married. His bride of a year works in the same store—third floor, millinery.

TWO AIRLINERS COLLIDE BUT 85 PASSENGERS SAFE

Split-Second Reactions Of Two Pilots Avert Terrible Catastrophe Near Aberdeen, Md.

Aberdeen, Md., Dec. 20—(AP)—Split-second reactions by two pilots were credited today with saving the lives of 85 passengers and crew members of two Miami-bound airliners which collided 2,000 feet in the air near here in an accident unprecedented in commercial air travel in the United States.

None of the passengers suffered so much as a scratch, although both planes were damaged in the collision, which occurred in clear weather shortly after dark last night.

The co-pilot of one, a big, four-engined DC-4 Eastern Airlines craft carrying 58 passengers, said he saw the other, a two-engined Universal Airlines C-47, approaching from the left three or four miles north of Aberdeen. He pulled his ship up at the last instant and scraped over the top of the Universal plane, Eastern officials said.

The co-pilot, R. Brown, said he had "just a second or two" in which to avert disaster. The pilot of this plane, J. B. Kuhn, told a reporter, "Brown saved the day."

Both Planes Damaged

A three-by-five foot hole was ripped in the tail section of the larger plane, while the Universal liner, carrying 22 passengers and a crew of three on a charter flight, had a hole driven into the upper portion of the fuselage, its escape hatch wrenched free and its radio and hydraulic system knocked out of commission.

Despite the damage, Henry Norris, pilot of the Universal ship, brought it down safely at the Aberdeen proving ground field, while the Eastern plane was landed uneventfully by Kuhn before waiting crash-wagons and fire-engines at National Airport, Washington.

The four-engined ship, cruising at about 230 miles an hour, apparently had overtaken the slower aircraft. It had started from New York, while the Universal plane had taken off at Newark, N.J.

Occupants of both planes reported little if any confusion at the time of their narrow escape, and most said they had been unaware of the extent of their danger. All, however, had lavish praises for crew members.

One grateful survivor of the Eastern plane, Ben J. Slutzky, of Ellenville, N.J., announced he was presenting $500 to the crew and invited other passengers to a "survivors' party" at a Miami night club.

TWO-PANT BAN LIFTED

Washington, Dec. 20 — (AP)—The United States Office of Temporary Controls yesterday lifted the four-year-old ban on manufacture of two-pants suits as well as the prohibition on vests for double breasted suits. The action is effective today. O. T. C. said the restrictions, imposed in wartime, are no longer necessary because of increased production of men's and boys' clothing.

Churchill Fights Burma Freedom Charging Govt. Will Scuttle Empire

London, Dec. 20 — (AP) — Prime Minister Attlee announced today that discussions would be held with Burmese leaders soon to speed Burma's progress toward self-government and Winston Churchill immediately assailed the decision as a step toward dissolution of the British Empire.

In a fighting speech in the House of Commons cut short by the speaker's ruling that he was out of order, Churchill declared:

"It was said in the days of the great administrator, Lord Chatham, that you had to get up very early in the morning in order not to miss some acquisition of territory which was then characteristic of our fortunes.

"The not less memorable administration of the present government is distinguished for the opposite set of experiences. I must say the British Empire seems to be running off almost as fast as the American loan.

"The steady and remorseless process of divesting ourselves of what has been gained by so many generations of toil, administration and sacrifice continues."

Free To Choose

Mr. Attlee said Britain hoped Burma would remain in the Empire but she was free to choose independence.

"We do not desire to retain within the Commonwealth and Empire any unwilling peoples," the Prime Minister said.

Mr. Churchill denounced "this appalling haste" in offering Burma freedom without an intermediate stage as a British Dominion.

"Scuttled is the word, and the only word that can be applied," he declared. Mr. Churchill likened the Burmese situation to the independence turmoil in India—"this evil process, which has been attended by disasters of which we are at present only on the threshold."

"Just as we see in home affairs the unseemly rush of legislation, disorganizing our national life and impending our recovery. . . Just so we see the same haste—which, I suppose, will be paraded as vigor —in divesting ourselves of the great possessions of the British Crown, and freeing ourselves from all responsibility for the populations, primitive and even divided, who have hitherto looked to British justice and administration for the means of leading their ordinary lives in peace.

"We are getting accustomed and inurated to the process of the decline and fall of the British Empire".

Mr. Attlee declared it was necessary to "keep up with movements of public opinion" in dependent countries.

"The government of this country has not been too fast—it has been too slow," he said.

CANADA AND U.K. REACHAGREEMENT ON FREER TRADE

On January 1st Exporters and Importers Will Deal on Sterling Basis

By D'ARCY O'DONNELL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Dec. 20 (CP)—Progressively freer trade is expected to develop between Canada and countries in the sterling bloc as a result of arrangements concluded between Canada and the United Kingdom and announced last night by Finance Minister Abbott.

Under changes, to become effective Jan. 1, Canadian exporters and importers will be able to deal on a sterling basis with countries which heretofore had to be dealt with on a United States dollar basis.

The change—considered the main one—is expected to do away with the necessity of countries in the sterling bloc discriminating against Canada in matters of trade because of a shortage of dollars.

The Canadian Foreign Exchange Control Board will readily convert into United States or Canadian dollars any sterling obtained in transactions by Canadian traders.

Another major change will permit the governments of France, Belgium, Holland, Norway and Czechoslovakia to use loans from Canada to finance purchases by private firms in Canada.

Increase Authority

Still another revision of regulations will increase the authority of Canadian banks to make United States funds available for travel purposes without reference to the Exchange Control Board. The banks' authority to approve the sale of United States funds without reference to the Exchange Control Board will be increased in the case of travel applications from $250 to $500.

Permits no longer will be required for the purchase of United States cash in amounts up to $100 and no form will be required on sales to Canadian banks of United States dollars or other foreign exchange in amounts up to $1,000 rising from sources other than exports.

It was learned authoritatively that an Order-in-Council had been passed during the day fixing the Canadian dollar at its present value of parity with the United States dollar until further notice.

Countries Named

Mr. Abbott said that for the time being, the countries with which Canadian exporters and importers will be able to switch from a dollar to a sterling basis of trading, are:—

Countries of the British Commonwealth; Anglo Egyptian Sudan; Argentina; Columbia; Costa Rica; Cuba; Dominican Republic; Ecuador; Egypt; Faroe Islands; Guatemala; Haiti; Honduras; Iceland; Iraq; Mexico; Nicaragua; Panama, Philippine Islands; Salvador; Transjordan; United States and Territories, and Evewzula.

Other countries will be added to the list as the United Kingdom completes the necessary arrangements with them.

PREMIER OF N.S. URGES OTTAWA TO CALL PARLEY

Angus Macdonald Releases Text of Letter Sent to Prime Minister King

Halifax, Dec. 20 — (CP)—The Nova Scotia government today awaited the next move from the federal administration after Premier Angus L. Macdonald urged Prime Minister Mackenzie King to call another Dominion-Provincial conference and make the provinces another offer.

Nova Scotia's stand was made known last night when Premier Macdonald released the text of his latest communication with Ottawa since the federal financial offer to the provinces was made in the budget last June.

The letter followed three days of study by the Nova Scotia cabinet of the Dec. 14 letter in which Mr. King expressed the Dominion's attitude and disagreed with Mr. Macdonald on the question of holding Dominion-Provincial conferences at fixed dates every year.

Premier Macdonald said in effect that much water has flowed under the bridge since the Dominion proposals were first presented in August, 1945.

The greatest departure had been in the June 27 budget speech when "the social security measures of the original proposals were abandoned for the time being and the principle of dealing with individual provinces, instead of with all the provinces in a general conference, was adopted."

Since the budget speech there had been still further departures.

Without naming the provinces, Mr. Macdonald said arrangements or offers had been made to certain ones which had the effect of making "basic changes in the plans advanced by the Dominion government to the provinces as a whole and which put certain provinces in a position more favorable than is likely to result for other provinces."

The Nova Scotia government had only unofficial knowledge of these arrangements or offers and it was most important that their full content be disclosed "to all provinces."

"In view of the changes that have developed in the whole position since August, 1945, and of the varying character of the offers made to and the suggestions made by different provinces, it has occurred to me that the Dominion might now be prepared to put forward revised proposals, it being the only government that now has all the facts of the matter before it," said Mr. Macdonald.

Japs Made Overtures After Hiroshima Blasted

London, Dec. 20 — (Reuters) — Japan's war leaders considered asking for peace terms more favorable than unconditional surrender before the first atomic bomb was dropped on Hiroshima, Prime Minister Attlee told the House of Commons yesterday. No overtures, however, were received by powers at war with Japan until Aug. 10, 1945 — four days after Hiroshima and 15 days after the Allied surrender call issued at Potsdam, he added.

BRACKEN CALLS FOR WIDER TRADE; PARLEY URGED

Conservative Leaders Lay Before Meeting Two Main Proposals Of the Party

Toronto, Dec. 20. (CP)—John Bracken, Federal Party leader, and Premier Drew of Ontario laid before the Ontario Progressive Conservative Party Convention last night two main proposals —that Canada must co-operate in cutting restrictions on International trade, and that a new Dominion-Provincial Conference should be convened.

Mr. Bracken talked of trade, and Premier Drew of Dominion-Provincial relations.

The Federal Party leader said that Canada must lessen rather than increase its restrictions on import of overseas goods. He called for multi-lateral trade agreements.

Of the wheat agreement with Britain, Mr. Bracken said: "Aside altogether from putting Canada out of step with the constructive work of the United Nations, it is a bad deal for Canada For 13 years prior to the war 84 per cent of Canada's wheat exports went to countries other than Great Britain."

Canada should aim at restoring multi-lateral trade, for a world economy in which the economic advantages of international trade "may be enjoyed by all nations for the general progress of humanity."

Premier Drew, in urging reconvening of the Dominion-Provincial conferences, said it was absolutely necessary that the conference meet again "not only to discuss the financial measures, but also to lay the basis for those wider examinations of the various health and social security proposals which have been put forward by all the governments, so that the necessary statistical information may be available to proceed with the examination of possible arrangements in those fields."

Ontario will relinquish personal income tax and corporation income tax fields for the duration of any new agreement provided the Dominion gets out of the minor direct tax fields, Premier Drew said.

But in the war years the Dominion also had entered fields of minor direct taxation—such as gasoline tax and amusement taxes—for the first time and without consulting the provinces. "The Dominion Government," he said, "is in honor bound to vacate those minor fields of direct taxation."

Premier Drew said he would like to remind "The Sifton Press out West" and the Toronto Daily Star that Ontario asks for a system which would allocate taxes from national organization many of whose head offices are in Ontario, on the basis of business done in the various provinces.

Ontario also asked that special funds be made available for benefit of those provinces which do not possess the same sources of revenue as the central provinces so that a satisfactory standard of education, health and social security might be established across Canada.

Premier Drew added:

"I am not so confident of Mr. King's absolute safety in any concentration of power. You may recall I was charged under the Defence of Canada regulations because I exposed the Hong Kong expedition as ill-equipped and untrained. I mention this only because neither the government nor Mr. King have had the decency nor the courage to withdraw that improper charge."

There were those who liked to hold up Mr. King as a great liberal but Premier Drew said he considered him "the least liberal man in public life today. He has shown by his conduct in recent months how he will use power if he gets it, and it is the Ontario Government's purpose to make sure that a check is maintained on a man of that kind."

Hypnotism by Television So Perfect Will Not Be Tried in Broadcasting

London, Dec. 20 —(AP)— The BBC announced today that it had so successfully experimented with hypnotism by television that the feat would not be tried on a general broadcast.

The experiment was carried out on a closed circuit—not publicly televised—this week by Peter Casson. In the first test a dozen volunteers from the BBC staff subjected themselves to the hypnotist and five of them went into a hypnotic sleep, BBC said. In a second test, Casson made a direct attempt to hypnotize six persons watching the screen in a darkened room. Four went to sleep and of these, two had to be awakened.

"But the most interesting point," said the BBC, "was that one person in a party watching a television screen in a darkened room across the corridor (at the time of the first test) also fell under the hypnotic influence although Mr. Casson was not then addressing the viewing audience.

"Because of the success of this experiment, and the consequent danger of hypnotizing viewers who might not have anyone at hand to wake them, it has now been decided that a hypnotic television broadcast would not be advisable."

No German POW Will be Permitted To Stay in Canada

Govt. Reverses Earlier Order Owing to Complaints

Ottawa, Dec. 20 (CP)—No German prisoners of war are to be retained in Canada, Arthur MacNamara Deputy Minister of Labor, announced today.

Decision of the Federal government to ship all captives back to Europe before the end of the year, it was understood, was a reversal of an earlier order that some of them were to be kept in Canada as laborers.

Reports that some of the remaining 2,200 in the country were to be retained, it was learned, had evoked complaints from some quarters against this step. In view of the opposition, it was reported the number of men involved in the government's earlier decision —200—was not considerable enough to make an issue of the matter.

The Deputy Minister's announcement said that "all prisoners of war now in Canada will have been returned to Europe by the end of the month."

A "considerable group" will leave by ship Dec. 22 from Halifax, while the few remaining after that date will all have left by New Year's.

Mr. MacNamara added:-

The Labor Department has been asked by employers who had engaged the services of some of the prisoners to allow some of them to remain on in Canada after the main body went home. However, the decision of the government is not to comply with these requests but to dispatch all prisoners of war to Europe."

Originally, Canada had a total of 35,000 prisoners of war in this country, in custody for the United Kingdom. The bulk of these were moved to their homeland this year, with the latest contingent leaving from Halifax late in November.

Most of the 2,200 still in the Dominion had been engaged in farm work in western Canada, and it was from that section of the country that most of the requests to retain the prisoners had been received.

Besides those sought for farm work, there had been some anticipation that some who had professed anti-Nazi sentiments might be allowed to stay in Canada. This applied particularly to a few who testified at the murder trial of three Nazis at Medicine Hat, Alta., and who had been reported as fearing to go back to the Reich because of possible reprisals.

Phantom Limb Pains Prevented By Operation

By HOWARD W. BLAKESLEE

Cleveland, Dec. 20 —(AP)— A new operation to get rid of phantom limbs, the imaginary arms and legs of amputees, which nevertheless are really painful, was reported to the American College of Surgeons today.

These phantom limbs last for weeks or months and occasionally for years. A man with one leg gone will have the sensation perhaps that it is doubled under him, and he is sitting on it and it hurts. Or he has the sensation that a missing arm is stretching rigidly aloft with the fingers cramping.

The best reason surgeons can give is the fact that after the nerves are cut at the amputation point, their ends afterward grow a little. They grow into the scar at the end of the stump limb. The nerve tendrils curl around, seeking to make unions with other nerves in the lost stump. This in theory is why the amputees have the phantom leg sensations.

THREE NEGROES ELECTROCUTED FOR MURDERS

Execution of Third Delayed, Then Carried Out After Final Appeal Rejected

Washington, Dec. 20 — (AP)—Joseph D. Medley, 45, whose affinity for red-headed women carried him to the death house, died in the electric chair today.

Medley was pronounced dead at 12:49 p.m. E.S.T. after a last-minute attempt by his lawyer to win a delay.

The last flicker of hope was extinguished by the United States Supreme Court less than half an hour before the suave gambler-killer went to his death.

The High Tribunal for the second time in as many days refused to stay the electrocution for a lunacy hearing.

Medley, who died for the murder of a 50-year-old redhaired Washington divorcee, was claimed by his lawyer to be a victim of chronic alcoholic paranoia.

Thin and haggard, he paid with his life for the fatal shooting of Mrs. Nancy Boyer in her fashionable apartment here in March, 1945.

He and others had played poker at the apartment the previous night.

More than two hours after the original time fixed for the electrocution of the suave, 45-year-old murderer, the High Tribunal rejected a last-minute appeal by his lawyer, James J. Laughlin.

Earlier, the United States Court of Appeals had turned down a petition asking that the execution be stayed pending a lunacy hearing.

Delay For Several Hours

Medley's execution had been delayed for several hours while Laughlin's appeals were pending.

The petition was filed shortly after 11 a.m. E.S.T. and the court considered it in closed session until noon.

At that hour the justices entered the court room, presumably to hold a regular session. But they left again immediately and continued their conference on the Medley request in Chambers.

At 12.25 p.m. the justices resumed their places on the bench and began hearing argument.

No announcement was made in the court room, but an attache told newspapermen the Medley appeal was denied.

A similar petition by Laughlin had been rejected yesterday, and on two previous occasions the high tribunal had refused to review the case.

Two Negro murderers who were to have been executed with Medley won half an hour of life because of his brief stay. They went to the chair shortly after 10 a.m.

William Copeland, 38, convicted of the fatal shooting of his sister-in-law, and Julius Fisher, 32, the so-called Washington cathedral murderer, died at 10:39 a.m. E.S.T. and 10:46 a.m. respectively.

The Public Utilities Commission were also authorized to prepare necessary lights at the open air rinks.

DID NOT MAKE APPEARANCE

Brantford, Dec. 20 — (CP) — Santa Claus did not make a scheduled appearance last night at a Christmas party for children of Steel Company of Canada employees here and his youthful admirers went home disappointed.

But sponsors of the party knew that a fire had kept Santa away. In some manner the red Santa suit worn by William H. Waite of Brantford burst into flames and Waite suffered extensive burns to the chest and arms. He went to hospital and doctors said he may be there for Christmas.

Graphic Story Of Salvation Army In War is Told

Members of The Belleville Lodge No. 123 A. F. and A. M. and visiting brethren of other lodges heard an impressive address on Thursday evening at the Masonic Temple by Adjutant Arnold Brown, assistant editor of the War Cry, official publication of the Salvation Army. Adjutant Brown, a former resident of Belleville, the son of Mr. B. W. Brown of this city, spoke on the Salvation Army war service as "an army of peace in a world at war", and gave interesting sidelights on the problems officers and members of the Salvation Army had to contend with during the war in non-Allied countries, the Salvation Army being an international organization. How they met the natural antipathy of the people of thos lands, how they were persecuted in Holland and France under Nazi occupation and in China by the Japanese was related by Adjutant Brown with stories on conditions. He gave an impressive account of a Chinese Salvation Army officer, a recent convert to the Army, who endured persecution because he would not deny the existence of God and would not bow to Japanese superstition.

Bro. William Harte of the local corps of the Army introduced Adjutant Brown. Wor. Bro. Gordon Anderson, master, presided.

92 Per Cent Of City Taxes Collected

Ninety-two per cent of the taxes represented on the 1946 tax roll have currently been collected, members of the local city council were told Thursday evening by Alderman H. J. Clarke, chairman of finance. Total collection of taxes this year, including tax arrears, amounts to more than the 1946 tax roll.

Reference to taxes collected this year was made as the result of Mr. Clarke's announcement that there was a slight over-draft by the city at the bank. On question by Mayor Follwell, however, council was assured that the eight per cent of taxes still uncollected would amount to considerably more than the overdraft.

Council Takes Prompt Action On Incinerator, Money By-laws

Taking prompt action on the approval voiced by ratepayers for the construction of an incinerator, members of city council at their last meeting of the year Thursday evening passed the necessary by-law and the matter as soon as possible will be presented to the Municipal Board.

On a second money by-law passed, council gave third reading to the by-law for the purchase of the Ponton property west of the city for use as a flying field.

Recommends Action

Recommendation for prompt action regarding the construction of the incinerator was made by Alderman Claude Tice who placed the motion calling for an agreement being entered into by council with the firm Meadows and Critoph authorizing the preparation of plans, calling of tenders and appearing before the Municipal Board with respect to approval for the construction of the incinerator, and for issuing of debentures to complete the financing of the project.

Location of the incinerator will be as recommended by the engineers on a site on Zwick's Island. Following passing of recommendation, the by-law relative to the construction of the incinerator was given its first, second and third readings.

Two Oppose Purchase

Passing of the by-law for the purchase of the Ponton property for use as a flying field, saw opposition by two of the council members on the ground that the current council should not obligate the incoming council for the amount of money involved in the purchase.

"This council has no right to bind next year's council for the amount of money involved in the purchase of this property," objected Alderman Chas. Hyde as the by-law came up for passing. Alderman Clarke was of the same opinion and moved that the matter be referred to the incoming council.

When the yeas and nays were taken on the matter Mayor Frank S. Follwell and Aldermen Allin, Armstrong, Butler, Chamberlain, Follwell, Harvey, McDougall, Thompson, Tice and Wilbur voted in favor, while Aldermen Clarke and Hyde voted against passing of the by-law.

Permission on Trial Basis.

A Hamilton food caterer desirous of taking up residence in Belleville was given temporary permission to set up a mobile kitchen in the city to serve employees of local factories.

Following considerable discussion on the part of members a recommendation presented by Alderman Follwell passed in council authorizing the applicant to operate on a trial basis until the next meeting of council at which the matter of granting a permanent licence could be considered.

Objecting to the idea of factory employees being served by a mobile kitchen (Alderman) Allin declared that the majority of factories in the city have their own canteens and stated that during working hours permission would not be granted employees to leave the premises to patronize such a kitchen.

"I am opposed to passing recommendations in this council without proper discussion and then later having to rescind them," stated Alderman Allin.

Mayor Follwell objected strongly to this statement declaring that recommendations always were given adequate discussion before they were put to a vote.

Mrs. Kerr to be Retained.

Council voted to retain Mrs. Myra Kerr as rooms registry supervisor until June 30 and also adopted a special committee report calling for the removal of curbside trees and hydro poles on Dundas Street, West, in the vicinity of what is known as the "Devil's Elbow."

Contrary to the procedure last year, there will be no collection of garbage on Christmas Day, but there will be a collection on New Year's Day, it was decided by council members.

Result of a motion on the part of Alderman Wilbur, chairman of fire, that the local department equipment be brought up to a proper standard, a special committee of Aldermen Wilbur, Chamberlain, Butler, Mayor Follwell, Comptroller Harold Bateman and Fire Chief William Lynch was appointed to look into the matter and report to council on requirements.

No Work Done on Wall.

Under inquiries Alderman Allin again asked regarding the progress of rebuilding the retaining wall at Victoria Park and was informed by Mayor Follwell that absolutely "nothing" had been done. On a further inquiry by Mr. Allin as to where money would go if the project were not completed this year, he was informed by Aldeman Chamberlain that according to regulations it would necessarily have to revert to the city.

Under general business Alderman Thompson expressed his appreciation for the opportunity of sitting on the local city council for the past two years. It was Mr. Thompson's last meeting prior to his retirement from council. He would always be willing to assist in the business of the city in any way possible, he said.

"I appreciate those words very much," replied Mayor Follwell. "Alderman Thompson's counsel has been invaluable to me and to this council."

The Mayor also expressed his regret that Aldermen McDougall and Woodley would not be with the council next year and hoped that both would again offer themselves for public service in the city.

So Near and Yet So Far

It was late 1945. In a British seaport the huge liner "Queen Mary" lay at anchor. Aboard was a large contingent of war brides destined for Canada.

Came the rush and bustle of sailing activity. Tugs nudged the huge liner from her berth and the First Lady of the Atlantic moved slowly out into the stream.

Her war-bride passengers lined the rails. Handkerchiefs fluttered in final farewell to relatives lining the docks.

But even as the stentorian notes of the liner's whistle roared the "cast-off", another ship loomed up out of the mist. She slid in gently alongside the "Queen" her passengers looking upward in awe at the mighty leviathan of the sea-lanes. For it was the first time that the majority of them had seen such a ship or England for that matter since the beginning of Pacific hostilities.

The ship had come from the Far East bringing repatriated prisoners of war to their homes in Britain and the continent.

Waves to Passengers

Aboard the Queen Mary stood a tall blonde girl, striking in appearance. Her handkerchief waved hail and farewell to the other ship's passengers and to the people on shore. She looked wistfully at the dock in silent good-bye then turned to greet the passengers on the incoming ship.

She was the former Miss Elizabeth Ryks, now Mrs. James Sexsmith of this city, and was leaving England to join her husband in Belleville. She had left Java in 1939 when the first threats of war hung heavily over the Orient, and sailed for Europe. She reached The Hague, Holland, a few months later leaving her father behind her. He was later taken prisoner by the Japanese and placed in a concentration camp.

Miss Ryks remained in Holland for the duration of hostilities, and it was there that she met and married her husband.

After the war she returned to England, and later sailed on the Queen Mary for Canada.

In the meantime her father had been repatriated and returned to Britain.

But little did Mrs. Sexsmith know, as she stood on board the mighty liner pushing its way into the stream, that her father was one of the passengers of the incoming ship. Unknowingly she was waving a welcome to the parent she had not seen in seven years, and in all probability her father was saying farewell again, to the daughter he had missed over the same period of time.

Pound Keeper Seeks Wretch Who Left Starved Dogs at Door

City Pound Keeper Thomas Thorne does not mind disposing of unwanted dogs when he is properly requested to do so, but he does object to animals being dumped unceremoniously at his doorstep.

Just such an incident occurred on Wednesday when a mongrel collie dog and three small puppies were left in bags at Mr. Thorne's doorstep. The dogs were in extremely poor condition, so much so much so that one of the puppies died overnight. Information as to who left the dogs on his doorstep would be appreciated by Mr. Thorne.

Turner Sentenced To Two Years In Penitentiary

Appearing before Judge W. S. Lane of Picton for sentence on Thursday afternoon following conviction on two charges of gross indecency, Ralph Turner, 35, former Coe Hill continuation school principal, was sentenced to two years in Kingston penitentiary and 18 months definite and 9 months indeterminate at the Ontario reformatory.

The above reformatory sentence will be concurrent with and in addition to a nine months definite and nine months indeterminate term given last week by Judge J. C. Reynolds of Kingston, following conviction on a gross indecency charge previously heard.

In pleading for his client a sentence concurrent with the one imposed by Judge Reynolds, Defense Counsel Malcolm Robb pointed to the previous clean record of Turner and brought attention to the fact that during the trial no evidence had been given of offenses having taken place within the year prior to his arrest last July.

Counsel claimed the accused had already suffered terrible punishment through disgrace and publicity of his trial and maintained a long sentence was no cure for a homsexual tendency such as shown by the accused.

Mere of Disease

In reply Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan pointed out that Turner had been school principal at Coe Hill, and had been superintendent of the Sunday School, but through his action many young boys had learned unnatural acts.

In passing sentence Judge Lane said that the guilt of Turner was possibly more of a disease than a criminal act. He appreciated the fact that Turner had suffered through the disgrace of being brought to trial on such a charge, and that his family would also suffer.

When asked if he had anything to say as to why the penalty of the court should not be imposed Turner replied "Nothing at this time, Sir."

The two year penitentiary term was imposed by Judge Lane on the Whitmore charge, while the

Reckless Driving Charge Upheld

A charge of reckless driving against Gerald Whalen of Sharps' Corners took up most of the time at the county magistrate's court Thursday morning with the case not being finished until nearly one o'clock.

Whalen was found guilty on the charge by Magistrate T. Y. Wills who assessed a fine of $5 plus costs of $19.50. The accused was represented by A. B. Collins, local solicitor, while Assistant Crown Attorney S. Gordon Robertson acted for the Crown.

The charge against Whalen resulted from an accident which occurred at Marysville on December 4th; when the car operated by Whalen was alleged to have collided with the rear of a transport truck.

Giving judgment on a charge of reckless driving against John Wellman, Belleville, which had been heard the week previous, Magistrate Wills dismissed the action on lack of sufficient evidence. An L.C.A. charge against the accused was enlarged, however. R. D. Arnott acted as defense counsel at the hearing of the reckless driving count.

Wins First Place In Merit Corps Of London Life

Mr. J. P. Moore, son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Moore, Front Street, has won first place among the salesmen of the Industrial Branch of the London Life Insurance Company for the year just ended. Among the 561 representatives from coast to coast who qualified for membership in the Company's Merit Corps in this period, he had the highest standing.

In achieving this honor, Mr. Moore set a new sales record for this organization — a remarkable feat in view of the fact that only seven months of the Merit Corps year remained when he returned to the London Life staff from service in the Canadian Army.

Announcement is also made by the London Life of Mr. Moore's promotion to the position of Superintendent. He will continue to work in Kingston, in association with Mr. H. T. Foy, City Manager, Industrial Branch.

Mr. Moore was born in Belleville 31 years ago and attended the Queen Mary School, later graduating from the Belleville Collegiate Institute. He joined the London Life Insurance Company at the age of 19. He is married and has one young son.

A brother, Burton, is the proprietor of a hardware and electrical business in Uxbridge, Ont. His father operates the Peter Moore Candy Store, on Upper Front Street.

Emmanuel Bible School Holds Christmas Tree

Emmanuel Bible School on Victoria Avenue recently held its 1946 Christmas Festival with every member of the school having some part in the program.

The program was opened with a word of welcome and prayer by the Rector, the Rev. Telford S. Russell, and the reading of the Scripture Lesson by Mr. Wilbur W. Wright, the Rector's Warden of Emmanuel Church.

The beginner and primary departments' contribution to the program were under the direction of Mrs. Telford S. Russell and consisted of a number of well-spoken recitations by the children of the departments together with several choral numbers by the children.

The Junior Boys' presentation consisted in a choral number entitled "Hark the Bells", and a recitation by a junior boy. These are the boys of Mrs. John Rigby's class.

Biblical Story

The intermediate girls presented a play depicting the Biblical Story of Christmas. This was very well done and was very much enjoyed by all present. A group of the intermediate girls sang a beautifully harmonized rendition of "Silent Night, Holy Night." These numbers were under the direction of Mrs. Mason Rigby.

A special contribution was brought to the program by a group composed of the girls of the Bishop Marshall Memorial Bible Class who sang in choral style the carol, "The First Noel."

The above named teachers put forth a great deal of time and effort toward the success of this program, and the members of the school who took part deserve the appreciation of all who attended for their good work.

Immediately after the pronouncement of the Benediction by the Rev. Telford S. Russell, candy and gifts were distributed to all members of the school who were present.

The platform scenery was drawn by Russell Vandervoort and Ronald Buskard and thanks are expressed to them for their fine piece of work.

Two Prizes Presented.

At this event, Mrs. John Rigby presented two prizes to two of members of the school for excellence in attendance during the period from Easter to Christmas 1946. The first prize went to Billy Jones a junior boy and the second prize went to Calvin Gannon a primary boy.

All who attended this event were convinced that they had spent a joyous and profitable evening.

Foreign Ministers' Council

In New York the Council of Foreign Ministers had the full results of the Peace Conference before it, and it was, in the light of the Peace Conference recommendations that the five peace treaties with Italy, Romania, Hungary, Bulgaria and Finland have been agreed on. They will be signed on Feb. 10 in Paris.

The keystone of the arch was the agreement on the future status and structure of the International Territory of Trieste, which conforms to the Peace Conference recommendations.

There is much satisfaction in London that at last there is a definite early prospect of the resumption of normal relations with Italy and the ex-satellites which will enable these countries to play their proper part in the general process of reconstruction in the spirit of the United Nations.

Now the Council of Foreign Ministers can harness itself to the Moscow meeting in March for the supreme task of preparing the peace Treaty with Germany and a settlement with Austria. Here Mr. Molotov has agreed to a point to which Britain, the U.S.A. and France attach the highest importance, namely the appointment of depputies as in the case of the five minor treaties to prepare the ground for the Council's March meeting.

Nobody in Britain would underrate the difficulties with which the Foreign Ministers' coming discussions on Germany and Austria are certain to be beset. Apart from the differences of views known to be held by the different powers, the German problem bristles with intrinsic difficulties. The best that can be hoped is that the spirit of compromise which finally prevailed in New York will be continued in Moscow.

The United Kingdom Government does not consider that the zone merger in Germany in any way prejudices the development of a federal Germany. United Kingdom policy indeed aims at achieving a federal Germany. But a federal Germany has never been envisaged as a federation of zones but as a federation of Laender.

While the reasons for the French attitude as expressed by M. Couve de Murville are appreciated, account must be taken of the very heavy burden which the occupation of Germany places on the United Kingdom, and the fact that the French have no comparable burden to support in the administration of their zone, which represents no corresponding drain on French resources, for example, of foreign exchange.

Christmas Cards

The annual flood of Christmas cards has begun in earnest and is off to an early start. Thousands upon thousands of these messengers of good will have already been posted and delivered and thousands upon thousands are to follow and be delivered before Christmas Eve, which once seemed some distance away and is now just a few days away.

The Christmas card has a history. The industry is one hundred years old and it has become in that time one of the biggest industries before whose works all classes now appear to make their selections to be sent as gifts to friends near and far. A whole world of the pictorial and descriptive has gone into this business with the result that there are cards which satisfy every taste, which the receiver is delighted to treasure and the sender to choose as a means of remembering a friend at the time when everyone is remembering some one.

These cards have invaded the realms of art and the cards now portray scenes of nature, not only scenes of wintry cast but also scenes of spring, summer and autumn. First of all there are reproductions of sacred paintings and the artists have done much to recreate the associations of Christmas which marks the anniversary of the birth of Christ. Paintings of the greatest masters of all time and great modern artists are reproduced and artists' conceptions are conveyed to the surface of the card by art of color printing. Besides these are countless other subjects on the cards. A great many of them mark the spirit of Yuletide and Christmas down the ages. With these cards go messages in verse and prose to suit every person.

Such a flood of expressed remembrances and good will should go far to make for happiness whether the sender and the remembered friend live in this country, next door, or in another city and on the farm or whether the ocean divides them, the spirit is the same.

These messengers bearing good will, are done in most delicate and lovely colorings virtually cover the round earth. No other communication has been so generally adopted as the card carrying the message of the spirit of Christmas to the farthest ends of the earth.

Canon Kir

Canon Kir, mayor of Dijon, who was recently triumphantly re-elected, is the most celebrated personality in all Burgundy. He can tell at the first sip where a certain wine was produced and, at the second, its vintage year. These are qualifications which weigh heavily in any Burgundian election, says France-Amerique.

Canon Kir is the No. 1 Resistance member of his department. Under the occupation, he managed the escape of some 5,000 condemned Frenchmen and, himself sentenced to death by the Germans, was later attacked by militia and wounded. As a reward for heroic services, he was elected mayor of Dijon after the liberation.

The canon has decided views of tripartism, of which he is a sworn enemy. This is how he described it in a recent campaign speech: "When a Communist makes a speech the Communists applaud, when a Socialist makes a speech the Socialists applaud, and when an M.R.P. speaks the Big Three applaud."

The night he made this assertion, one of his friends in the audience added: "And when the canon speaks everybody laughs."

But Canon Kir's re-election by the Burgundians was foreordained.

Sowing Interest in Affairs

An interesting, commendable effort to broaden and stimulate a more general interest in public affairs, especially in protection of Canada's institutions of democratic freedom, is reflected in the booklet, Know Your Government, recently published by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. In simple, concise and suggestive manner, it provides an elementary basis for an understanding of how the country's machinery of government works and how it can be made to function to the best advantage of every citizen.

The booklet is one of a series of booklets and bulletins by which the Chamber, in conjunction with active field work, is seeking to promote an understanding interest in, and fruitful discussion of, the existing system of government and the political and economic problems facing it. The direct and uncomplicated text provides an excellent approach to the basic facts of government and its operation, not only for the ordinary citizen but for high school or college students.

Royal Chairs for Abbey

The gift of two chairs to Westminster Abbey for the use of the King and Queen was announced at a dinner given by the Canada Club to welcome the new High Commissioner for Canada, Mr. Norman Robertson.

Lord Greenwood, who made the announcement, said there was no record of any such chairs in the history of the Abbey for the use of the Royal Family. The club wished to present the chairs as a perpetual memorial of the Canada Club to commemorate their connection with the Abbey. All that they asked was that the chairs should be as fine as they could possibly be made.

Accepting the gift, the Dean of Westminster pointed out that, although there were certain historic chairs in the Abbey for the use of the King and Queen ,there were no chairs that could be used on ordinary occasions when the King and Queen wished to worship there.

IN TIMES OF DESPAIR

A word and the touch of a hand
Proclaim that a friend is nearby.
They are speech that we all understand.
The last spark of courage they've fanned;
The ship of New Hope they have manned
When vain it seemed further to try.
A word and the touch of a hand
Proclaim that a friend is nearby.
There's nothing so good for the heart
As a word and the touch of a hand.
When doubt and discouragement start,
And the stings of man's losses still smart,
A warmth and a glow 'twill impart
If nearby a friend comes to stand.
There's nothing so good for the heart
As a word and the touch of a hand.

BIG WINNINGS PAID IN ERROR

Capetown (CP)—A punter was paid £1,296.16s ($5,187) instead of £8.4s at the Kenilworth race course recently and the matter is being investigated by the Criminal Investigation Department.

He presented four double tote tickets on Numbers 7 and 2—Cider Cup and Florizel—which were second and first respectively.

For each of these tickets he was entitled to a consolation prize of £2.1s. but on each ticket he was paid the winning prize of £299.4s. —£1,196,16s. in all—which was the dividend on Numbers 10 and 2, Escapade and Florizel.

In addition the man was overpaid another £100 as the Treasury notes were being counted out to him. He therefore got £1,296.-16s. instead of £8.4s.

Dr. J. G. Inkster, Noted Churchman, Toronto, Dies

Toronto, Dec. 20 — (CP)—Rev. Dr. John Gibson Ingster, 79, one-time Moderator of Victoria Presbytery and for 18 years minister of Knox Presbyterian Church in Toronto before his retirement in 1940, died in hospital last night from injuries received Sunday night when struck by an automobile as he ran to catch a street car.

Dr. Ingster suffered a fractured leg and head injuries in the accident. The driver of the automobile was not held by police.

Shortly after his retirement Dr. Inkster spent six months in New Zealand and on his return survived the sinking of the Royal Mail steamer Niagara which was sunk by a mine off the New Zealand coast. In 1943 he crossed Canada on a special evangelistic and financial campaign for the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church.

Born on the island of Rousay in the Orkneys, he received his early education in Canada where he was an honor matriculant of Hamilton Collegiate Institute and an honor graduate of the University of Toronto. He obtained a scholarship at New College, Edinburgh and later taught public school for two years in Ontario before taking his first pastorate in Bristol.

Returning to Canada he served for a year as financial representative of the Presbyterian College at Montreal and later as minister of first Presbyterian Church, London, and First Presbyterian Church in Victoria before coming to Toronto in 1928.

A keen sports enthusiast, he played rugby in his school and college days and was later president of the Rugby Club at London.

Surviving are his widow, the former Alice Gertrude Rowsome, and three daughters, Miss Mary Inkster and Mrs. Miriam Green of Toronto; and Mrs. Ruth Metcalfe of Peterboro. A brother and sister in the Orkney Islands also survive him.

Jury Disagrees In Picketing Trial Of Union Leaders

Windsor, Dec. 20 — (CP) — A case described by defence counsel as an attack on the rights of all workers remained unsettled today following the failure of an Essex County General Sessions jury to agree on a verdict in the trial of three officials of the United Automobile Workers (C.I.O.) charged with "conspiracy to beset."

Forest Bonn, foreman of the jury of 10 farmers, a bookkeeper and an upholsterer, announced their inability to reach a verdict yesterday after five hours and 8 minutes of deliberation. The charge was in connection with picket-line incidents.

Judge E. A. Shaunessy discharged the jury and adjourned the case to the next sittings of the General Sessions in January as bail was continued for the accused — George Burt, Canadian director of the Union; Thomas MacLean, assistant director, and Harry Rooney, Union chairman in the Chrysler Corporation plant in Windsor.

One of the points of controversy in the trial appeared to be testimony of all three accused that they opposed the Union's 122-day strike last summer at the Chrysler plant here and in Chatham.

Return for Instructions

Returning to the courtroom for instructions during their deliberations, the jury asked Judge Shaunessy if the defendants shared responsibility for the strike despite the fact that the union's policy committee had overruled their advice against it.

The judge replied: "If the accused acquiesced in what their policy committee had instructed, in my opinion they are carrying out a common plot and may well be found guilty of conspiracy."

Earlier, in his charge to the jury, Judge Shaunessy said: "If you disagree with me it is your duty to give the accused the benefit of the doubt and acquit them."

Defence counsel had termed the joint charge against the three men "a charge against the rights of the worker" while Crown Attorney E. C. Awrey declared that Union leaders rather than "small men who picketed illegally" should be held responsible for the offence.

INDIAN IRRIGATION PLANS

New Delhi—(CP)—Three irrigation works, which will ultimately raise India's food production by about 2,000,000 tons a year, are to be built on the Mahandi, Damodar and Kosi rivers. They are expected to irrigate about 6,000,000 acres of land and generate 1,500,000 k.w. of hydro-electric power.

BUYS AMERICAN PLANES

Stockholm—(CP)—Sweden has acquired 100 North American Aviation Corporation planes of the AT-16 type. Used by both British and American forces as a trainer, it is easy to fly and yet embodies the more complicated technical equipment of a modern fighting plane.

PERSONAL HEALTH TALKS

By WILLIAM BRADY, M.D.

DEFINITE, EH?

A great word, definite. In everyday chit-chat it impresses your listener so much more if you say definitely instead of yes, don't you think? Of course you do if you are fond of the world. In medicalese, the funny bombastic lingo of the doctor writing or speaking on a medical subject, the word impresses colleagues so much more than simple language does, the doctor who uses it must think, else he wouldn't use the word at all.

For example a doctor writing on a subject that is as indefinite as a medical subject can be — "the common cold"—at least nobody has yet defined it in terms a doctor can understand, utters this familiar banality:

"Colds are most easily transmitted in their early stages. Influence of weather on colds has been difficult to determine accurately. But there is apparently a distinct and definite relationship between the occurrence of colds and . . . temperature."

Mind, the medical author responsible for that was careful NOT to say just what he was talking about—that is, he switched from "the common cold" to "colds" without a word of explanation of the meaning of either term, knowing that few if any medical readers will boggle at such trifles.

This same medical author says no cure has been found and that "all a person can do is keep his resistance up" etcetera.

The author does not define "resistance" either. either does any other physician or health authority. With these eminent dispensers of double-talk "resistance" is whatever the simple layman pleases to think it is, so why should an eminent medical authority tell what he is talking about?, folks, is easy as keeping up your leucocytosis or your nitrogenous metabolism. What you confess you don't know how — why, any old almanac or current radio announcer will tell you it is merely a matter of eating pure, nourishing, easily digestible food, breathing pure, fresh but not too cold air, getting plenty of rest, drinking some water and, of course, taking care you don't get your feet wet. All of these dispensers of double-talk about "resistance" will assent to that. And it will be all right with them if you wish to include wearing whatever you or your Aunt Samantha may consider adequate armor against drafts, dampness or sudden change of weather.

Lest new readers be confused, may I stipulate that although "resistance" is wholly speculative or hypothetical, immunity is a fact that no medical authority or health authority can handle irresponsibility. We not only know that immunity or not—for example, whether a child has immunity or not—for example, whether a child has immunity enough to protect against diphtheria. But always keep in mind this important difference—immunity is specific — that is, immunity to typhoid fever and immunity to diphtheria only against diphtheria and immunity to whooping cough only against whooping cough, so far as we know; whereas this hocus-pocus about "resistance" applies to anything or everything for it means whatever you like.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Useless Report

You asked for reports on potassium chloride. Writer tried it for eczema, lumbago and throat trouble but without results.

(P. E. H.)

Answer—I have never suggested it for lumbago or throat trouble. Your report reminds me of the opinion of a physician who said he had tried the high potency vitamin D treatment for arthritis and found it without effect. On invesigation it was learned that the doctor had prescribed 20,000 units of vitamin D daily for two weeks, in one case. The treatment ordinarily begins with 200,000 units of vitamin D daily for two months, and 300,000 or perhaps 400,000 units daily for another month or two.

Regarding potassium chloride for allergy—it worked like magic for me.

(Mrs. S. S. R.)

Answer—See answer to P. E. H. above. Probably readers assume I will remember them, as a physician would remember a patient. Occasionally something about a particular letter sticks in my mind, but seldom do I recall what the present correspondent may have asked or told me in a previous letter.

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

How did poppies become associated with the First World War?

In Roman mythology the red poppy was the symbol of death and was dedicated to Somnus the god of sleep. This plant, though closely related, is not the same species as the white poppy of the Near East and the Orient from the capsules of which opium and other powerful drugs are extracted in commercial quantities.

For centuries the red poppy, which grows wild in Europe and which is cultivated as an ornamental garden flower and as a field plant for the oil yielded in its seeds, has been associated with the battlefields of western Europe especially Flanders, where it grows as a pest in the wheat and uncultivated fields.

Poppies grew luxuriantly on the battlefields of this region simply because such fields were torn up and then neglected for a season or two.

Superstitious people believed the red flowers symbolized the blood of the slain. Contemporary writers refer to the profusion of poppies that sprang up on the battlefields of Landen, Ramillies, Malplaquet, Fontenoy and Waterloo. In 1693 the French under Marshal Luxembourg defeated the Anglo-Dutch under William III at Landen. Macaulay, in his history of England, wrote of this battlefield:

"During many months the ground was strewn with skulls and bones of men and horses, with fragments of hats and shoes, saddles and holsters. The next summer the soil, fertilized by twenty thousand corpses, broke forth into millions of poppies. The traveller, who, on the road from Saint Tron to Tirlemont, saw that vast sheet of rich scarlet spreading from Landen to Neerwinden, could hardly help fancying that the figurative prediction of the Hebrew prohpet was literally accomplished, and that the earth was disclosing her blood, and refusing to cover the slain."

After the First World War both the British Legion and the American Legion adopted the Flanders poppy as their symbol. The British Legion, the veterans organization in Great Britain corresponding to the American Legion in the United States, began to operate a factory at Richmond for making artificial poppies to be sold on Armistice Day to raise funds for welfare and relief purposes. In the United States the official flower of the American Legion is widely worn on Memorial Day—May 30—which by reason of this fact is sometimes called "Poppy Day." In 1922 the Veterans of Foreign Wars started the custom of selling "Buddy Poppies," artificial flowers made exclusively by disabled veterans.

The peculiar association of the red poppy with the battlefields of the First World War was largely the result of the popular poem by Col. John McCrae, Canadian physician, soldier and poet, who died of pneumonia in France in 1918. "In Flanders Fields" was pencilled on a page torn from a dispatch book by Col. McCrae during lull in the 16 days of fightink known as the Second Battle of Ypres. The poet submitted it anonymously to London "Punch," and the editor, recognizing the beauty and originality of the poem, printed in the issue of December 9, 1915, in a heavily-leaded type reserved for matter of merit and distinction. The original manuscript is owned by the Royal Victoria Hospital in Montreal, where the author practiced medicine before the war.

Commercial Use Atomic Energy Within Five Years

Boston, Dec. 20 (AP).—Commercial use of atomic energy within five years was predicted today by a group of New England experts providing the United States government gives the "green light" to industry.

Atomic generation of electric power, they said, could be accomplished at an original cost comparable to present modern methods and eventually for much less.

These views were expressed in a report by a New England Council Committee headed by Karl T. Compton, president of Massachusetts Institute of Technology and one of the developers of the atom bomb.

Although no atomic power plants have been built, they said, "there now seems to be no question, from the purely technical standpoint, about the possibility of generating large amounts of power from the heat liberated during the operation of atomic piles."

The committee said that it was difficult to predict what the first commercial uses of atomic power would be put but that "it seems likely that it will be for purposes needing heavy and continuous loads of power."

SEA EATING AWAY LAND

Skipsea, Yorkshire, England, Dec. 20 — (Reuters) — George Southwick, who has lost 5½ acres of land in the sea, planned today to get his member of parliament to do something about it.

Coast erosion has eaten away all but a half-acre of his property and put a foot-wide crack in his house. Since the next gale is expected to pull it into the sea, Southwick is tearing it to pieces and selling what he can. He has already sold the doors and yesterday he took down the rafters.

In respect to Southwick's hope for government compensation for the loss, an observer sagely remarked that no legal provision was made for housing people whose homes fall into the sea.

Starling, Pigeon and Train Whistle Nuisances Discussed by Directors

Aftermath of a number of complaints regarding the starling, blackbird and pigeon nuisance in the city, the directors of the Chamber of Commerce at their weekly luncheon yesterday endorsed a recommendation asking the city council if any progress has been made regarding the removal of the nuisances. It was understood, a director pointed out, that the council had had the matter under consideration for some time but no action has been thus far reported.

The directors considered another complaint from a prominent citizen regarding the unnecessary blowing of train-whistles in the city. Locomotives maintain a continuous blast of noise from the time they enter the city limits until they leave, disturbing residents and preventing them from getting their ordinary quota of sleep.

It was pointed out that if whistle-blowing was eliminated the city would be responsible if any accidents occurred. The directors felt that the noise could be reduced at least to within the limits of safety.

Election of officers of the chamber for the ensuing year will begin with the primaries taking place on January 10 and the finals on January 17. The directors received with regret the resignation of Director John McIntosh, and later announced that his position on the board will be taken by Mr. Gus Freeman, for the completion of his term of office.

At a recent meeting the directors complimented Director Jack Trudeau on the excellent work done by him on the new publicity set-up for next year in conjunction with city and county publicity committees. Mr. Trudeau has spent much time and effort on the project and it was due in no small part to his efforts that a successful city and county campaign for next year has been arranged.

Artist Determined To Cross Gorge On Tight Rope

Niagara Falls, N. Y., Dec. 20 — (AP)—Arthur (Arturo the Great) Trostl says he will cross Niagara Gorge on a tight rope "even if I have to buy or lease a piece of land to set up my equipment."

Arturo said yesterday he planned to cross the roaring Niagara River next spring somewhere below the Falls, employing a one-inch steel cable and a 24-foot, 30-pound balancing pole for his high wire act.

"This is not a suicide stunt," Arturo said, in answer to officials who denied him permission to cross at the Falls themselves.

"It has been my ambition to walk across the gorge on a tight rope since my early boyhood in Austria," said Arturo, who spent six years with Ringling Brothers Circus before organizing his own show in 1941.

He said he hoped to find a site for the projected crossing near the Rainbow Bridge, where the gorge is 180 feet deep and about 1,100 feet wide.

Three Sudbury Police Constables Are Reprimanded

Sudbury, Dec. 20 — (CP) — Sudbury police commission yesterday reprimanded three members of the police department for firing revolvers while arresting two men on charges of drunkenness Dec. —.

The commission was told that one of the men broke away from Constable Wilfred Orser outside the police station and Orser fired two shots in his direction as he fled. Later Constable Leo Sancartier and Detective Henry Fournier spotted the man, fired two warning shots in the air and recaptured him. None of the shots struck the man.

Commission members expressed the view that there was no need for firing the shots and that Sudbury police officers sometimes were too free with the use of their firearms.

Sidney Council Adopts Planning Area of District

Members of Sidney council at their December meeting voiced their approval of the suggested planning area for the rural district adjacent to the city of Belleville and requested that an application be drafted asking that the area be set up.

School Inspecter R. H. Macklem interviewed the council regarding school matters in the township, while the report of the school attendance officer and relief officer were received.

Council concurred in a resolution to the petition the minister of Public Works for Ontrio to call a meeting of the municipalities in the Moira River watershed for the purpose of setting up an authority to govern the watershed.

In preparation for forthcoming election, it was recommended that No. 1 Poll at Avondale be subdivided into two polling places.

Attending the meeting were Reeve S. M. Nicholson, Deputy Reeve, Ben Bleecker, and councillors Fred Campbell, H. Morrow and L. Grills.

Returns Home After Trip to Vancouver

Mrs. William Knox has arrived at her Prince Edward County home after spending six weeks as the guest of her nephew, Mr. Charles Crosley and Mrs. Crosley, Quesnelle Drive, Vancouver, British Columbia.

Mrs. Knox had a very enjoyable trip. She found the country beautiful, the people sociable and contented and the stores attractive. She brought home two sprigs of holly, which she picked from shrubs growing in Vancouver.

During her stay she was guest of honor at two dances in the Foresters' Hall, where Mr. Child played the violin accompanied by Mr. C. Crosley at the piano. On her last Sunday there, Mr. and Mrs. Crosley held a reception for their aunt, which was attended by the following people formerly Prince Edward County residents—Mr. and Mrs. Walter Alyea, Mr. and Mrs. Child and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Daniels, (nee Margaret Waterhouse); Mr. and Mrs .Topping, Mrs. Osterhout, Mr. Edward Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. R. War Brides Enjoy Yuletide Party And Dance at St. Thomas Parish Hall

Justifiable pride of achievement shone in the eyes of members of the Belleville Red Cross, the Women's Canadian Club, and the St. John Ambulance Brigade in the St. Thomas' Parish Hall, last night. For before them, with dancing eyes and feet, sheer enjoyment apparent on every fresh young face, whirled sixty-five war brides and their stalwart ex-soldier husbands.

The dance climaxed a grand Christmas entertainment tendered the young women from the Old World by these organizations which started with a highly entertaining Yuletide party in the afternoon for seventy crowing lusty new Canadians, the majority of whom gazed with mixed emotions at their first Santa Claus.

Both functions proved unqualified successes and the light of happiness and appreciation which showed plainly on the faces of these young women in a strange land more than repaid the efforts of the women's organizations responsible.

Many Countries Represented

England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, Belgium, The Netherlands and even far-off Java were represented in national style of beauty. The scene provided not only a passing panorama of Old World pulchritude and Canadian manhood but an intermixing of accent that was pleasing to the ear.

From different places in England came these young women. From the level fields of Kent, the rolling slopes of Cheshire and from Newcastle-on-Tyne. From the Cumberlands and the gentle hills of Devon; from Scarborough and Northampton shire; Suffolk, Norfolk.

"I hail fra Newcastle, lud," smiled one pretty bride, "and I am not trying to be funny when I tell you I married a chap named Cole.

An attractive blonde, blue eyes alight with happiness and enjoyment had been in Canada for four months.

"My home is in Westminster, London," she smiled. "I like Canada very much although it is different to England. I know I am going to like it better but I do miss the Strand Corner House at times."

Jet-black hair framing a ruddy-cheeked face complete with sky-blue eyes, the third item of natural Irish beauty, marked a "colleen" from County Cavan. Her seven-months-old son crowed lustily in her arms during the afternoon. "He's a Canadian and therefore not a Pat or Mike", she said in a delightful Irish brogue. "And I'll let you know, sure, his name is John".

Brimming with the very verve of life, spirits running high and enjoying every minute of the party were four Dutch girls. Blonde hair haloed rosy cheeks. Blue eyes sparkled as they kept up a running fire of conversation, sometimes in Dutch and mostly in English. They were the life of the party."

Scottish lassies exuding the very mist of the moors and the heather, danced in the arms of proud husbands, immaculate in new suits of civvies.

Would Like Own Homes

But the majority of them had one thing in common. They were glad to be in Canada. They were proud of their homes, families and husbands, but there was one thing lacking to fill the cup of their happiness in their adopted country.

Seven of the war-brides chosen at random were asked what they would like best for Christmas. The answer was the same, although the young women were in widely-separated parts of the hall. The answer given without hesitation but with a touch of wistfulness, was, "A house to live in."

It was a grand party. There was not a dull moment from the opening music to the good-night waltz. At eleven-thirty the guests were ushered to the hall basement where they were served coffee, sandwiches and cake by the host organizations.

Receiving as the guests entered the hall were Major and Mrs. Arthur Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Rollins, and Mr. and Mrs. Morley P. Duff.

Members of the Red Cross and assisting organizations were the recipients today of many expressions of appreciation from the war bride guests. In fact so sincere and general was the appreciation that another such function is being considered.

St. Thomas' A.Y.P.A. Hosts to Two Groups

At the regular bi-monthly meeting held Wednesday evening the A.Y.P.A. of St. Thomas' Anglican Church was host to the young people of St. Andrew's Presbyterian and of Christ Church A.Y.P.A.

After a number of piano selections by Bill Navin, the chairman, Austin Watkin, asked Rev. F. A. Smith to welcome the guests. The program, under the direction of Prof. W. Ernest Wheatley, consisted of a musical recital by members of St. Thomas' Church choir with assisting artists. The first part of the program included two trumpet solos by Jack Fenn; vocal solos by Gordon Bankier and Barbara Joan Houston and a piano solo by Jack Howes. The second part consisted of selections from "The Pirates of Penzance", the soloists being Barbara Joan Houston, Bill Bankier, Gordon Bankier, Percy Marcus and Gordon Watkin, with other members of the choir providing the chorus.

Chairman Austin Watkin expressed appreciation to Professor Wheatley, to the choir and to the visiting artists for a delightful entertainment, after which community singing of Christmas carols was enjoyed by all present. The remainder of the evening was spent in dancing, after which refreshments were served, and during the social hour Bob Kidd, president of St. Andrew's young people; Lloyd Gladwell, president of the Senior Branch of Christ Church A.Y.P.A., and Ed. Waterhouse, president of the Junior Branch of Christ Church A.Y.P.A., thanked their hosts for a very enjoyable evening.

Wolf Cubs Hold Christmas Party

On Wednesday evening the 8th Belleville (Queen Mary) Wolf Cubs held their Christmas Party in the Queen Mary School Auditorium. The program consisted of group carol singing by the Cub Pack and "O Come All Ye Faithful", by Cubs John Ashley, Jay Kent and George Sinfield. A solo, "Hark! The Herald Angels Sing", was very sweetly sung by Cub George Sinfield. Little Marie Nash ably played her guitar and sang "White Christmas" and "Give Me Five Minutes More". Everyone enjoyed the bagpipes played by Scoutmaster Doug Burns and F. Fulton and the drums by Assistant Scoutmaster Bill Nichol.

Mr. Len Fozard was on hand with his bag of magic tricks which completely mystified the boys and were enjoyed by all present.

The highlight of the evening was the arrival of Santa Claus (portrayed by the popular Jamie Clarke). After a few words to the boys Santa showed his versatility by playing the bagpipes, then accompanying charming little Marie, dressed in full kiltie regalia, for two Scotch dances. Santa distributed gifts to the Cubs and the leaders were presented with Cub rings. The announcer for the evening was Cub Doug Haley. Mrs. M. B. Button was at the piano. Congratulations to Leaders Akela Gene Button and Bagheera Lorraine Gladwell for a splendid evening of enterment.

Rylestone W. I.

On Wednesday the W. I. members met at the home of Mrs. Will Stewart with an attendance of 24. The vice-president, Mrs. Chas. Stewart, opened the meeting with the Institute Ode and the Lord's Prayer. Members responded to the roll call with helpful hints for Saturday and Monday.

The motto "Let our watchword be co-operation" was the basis for a splendid talk given by Mrs. Ernest Irwin who in conclusion, suggested impromptu discussions on "Co-operation between mother and Child;" "Teacher and child;" "In the community;" 'In the home;" "In the Institute;" by five ladies. This was a new and original idea and very interesting. Mrs. Will Stewart then introduced "the Campbellford Hospital Committee" Messrs A. J. Meyers, R. J. Bale and T. Forsyth who asked for co-operation from the Institute and showed how the women could help such a fine effort and Mr. Forsyth took several pictures before they left. A discussion followed, during which Mrs. S. G. Meiklejohn moved that Mrs. Ernest Irwin and Mrs. Murray Meiklejohn be a committee to meet with the committees of neighboring Institutes and the hospital board, the date to be announced later. It was decided to help the Girls' Club pay for their trip to Peterborough. There was considerable discussion concerning "A rest room for Campbellford."

Christmas reading was given by Marie Meiklejohn. The poem read by Mrs. F. W. Barnum "History of Rylestone Store" and composed by Mrs. W. H. Gibson was very interesting.

The hostesses Mrs. Will Stewart and Leah served refreshments typical of the Christmas season.

Kitchen Shower For Bride-to-Be

On Wednesday evening, Mrs. Robert Simpson and Mrs. Lawrence Brown were co-hostesses at a kitchen shower held in the latter's home, 66 Burton Street, in honor of Miss Florence Kerrigan, when about twenty-five guests were present.

The rooms were tastefully decorated with holly wreaths and a lighted Christmas tree. The evening was spent playing Court Whist: 1st prizes being won by Miss Gladys Van Shiver and Miss Dorothy Brodie while Mrs. Mary Haslip and Miss Florence Kerrigan received the consolation awards.

Opening her gifts Miss Kerrigan thanked her friends, and dainty refreshments were served with Miss Ruth Murray pouring tea at a table attractively arranged in keeping with the Christmas season, with a bride's cake for the centrepiece.

Piano music by Mr. Lawrence Brown brought an enjoyable evening to a close.

Christmas Party Much Enjoyed By War Brides

Sponsored by the Belleville Branch of the Canadian Red Cross, a combined "At Home" and "Christmas Party", for the war brides of Belleville and district and for their children, was held on Thursday afternoon in St. Thomas' Church Parish House, which had been made more than usually attractive with decorative Christmas bells, wreaths and ever-green branches.

The background of the stage, with a silhouette of the "Wisemen" travelling across the desert toward Jerusalem under a star-studded sky of deep blue, served as a reminder of the real reason for Christmas giving. In the foreground, right and left, were brightly lighted, tinsel trimmed trees, a much taller one between them standing on the main floor. This was laden with "stockings" bulging with gifts for the "New Canadians".

Rev. F. A. Smith announced carol singing, concluding with "Jingle Bells", at the opportune moment of Santa's arrival. But it would seem that Santa is not always the popular person he is expected to be, for some of the tots were more frightened than pleased with his appearance.

Below stairs, where afternoon tea was served, decorations were in red and white making a colorful setting for the seasonable arrangement of the tea tables, centred with small trees standing among branches of evergreen; the whole circled with red tapers in crystal holders. Members of the Women's Canadian Club, St. John Ambulance Brigade and of the Canadian Red Cross in Belleville poured tea and served the guests as well as assisting in caring for the very young children during the afternoon, thus helping to make this "party" outstanding for its Spirit of Christmas cheer and good fellowship.

Upwards of fifty war brides and seventy children were guests at the party. Mr. Morley P. Duff, president of the Red Cross here, and Messrs. Harry Rollins and Albert Jones assisted the ladies with the entertainment.

Advice to the Lovelorn

An Unmarried Woman's Affair With An Army Officer

Although war, of course, always multiplies both the opportunities for illicit romances and the number of people who take advantage of those opportunities the type of problem described in a desperate letter just received is the same whether in peace or war.

The writer is a young unmarried woman who prefaces her story saying that except for the usual contributions to war services, the war affected her personal life in no particular.

"It took the peace," she said bitterly, "to alter my way of living. Then I met an officer, and I knew that until he came into my life, everything that had ever happened to me before had been only a period of waiting for him. Within a short time we had become involved in a strange affair; so odd that when I think back to it, I cannot believe it was really myself at all. My love for this man dropped every barrier of reserve and we became intimate.

"He had tried to keep the knowledge of his name and place of living from me, saying how much better it was to keep the mystery of his name to himself so that we would not be disillusioned with each other. He said that the war had dropped all barriers between the sexes, and that everyone did the same thing. For me, it was the first and only time.

"Later, I found out his name, and also where he lived; also that he was married and the father of several children. Wouldn't you think that then I would forget about him? Duty to his family ought to make me forget, but the misery in my heart is so awful. It seems that the war has just begun for me.

"Now what shall I do? Go away? But I like to live where I do. Forget him? No: I love him in spite of all. To spend one year of my life with him, I would gladly give ten. What am I? A moron, perhaps. Or what?

"There is no use going to a doctor or a minister for advice. I would not want to enter into any discussion with them about myself. So because I can remain just a name, I come to you. Don't tell me to look for another man. Don't suggest helping others in order to forget; my life has been spent in that manner too many years.

"Pride goes before a fall. Now this man is ready to continue at home and says he no longer cares what I think as long as his family are kept out of this. Is there any answer to such a problem?

"Margaret?

You ask for an answer to your problem, Margaret, but you forestall any possible answers by saying, in effect, that you don't want them. "Don't tell me to do this," you say. And don't tell me to do that." You are like a sick person who seeks the help of a doctor, but tells him in advance that you don't intend to take the medicine he prescribes. In other words you want to get over the pain of this unhappy experience, but at the same time you don't want to do any of the things that will aid you in getting over it.

I suspect that, possibly without your actually realizing it, you are hanging on desperately to the thought of this man, unwillingly to make a decison to put him entirely out of your life and mind, in the forlorn hope that by some miracle he may come back to you.

But you'll have to be braver than that, Margaret. If you really want an answer to your problem you'll have to be willing to take the same course other women in your situation have followed, and do the same things they have done to get over an experience of this kind.

For there are no new answers to your problem, I'm afraid. If I knew any surer ways to go about solving such a problem, I'd be the most popular adviser in the world.

For people in trouble are always runing around frantically seeking new methods of escape, only to find that there is nothing to do but face the trouble and solve it by the same old ways. And in your case that means, first and most important, resolving to stop making the thought of this man the centre of your life; then to go determinedly about your business, spending time with old friends and making new ones, taking up old interests again and seeking new ones; forcing yourself to hold onto your program no matter how you feel, and finding, in time that the pain grows less and life gradually returns to normal.

That's all you can do, Margaret. There's no other way. But happily it works, if you have the character to try it.

New Soapless VEL
Outcleans, Outlasts Suds

by Frances Thompson
noted homemaking authority

As a result of constant home tests, my enthusiasm for soapless VEL is mounting daily. At first, like you perhaps, I thought VEL was strangely different. But now that I understand it, I think it's wonderful.

MAKES SUDS UNNECESSARY "FROTH"

Soapless VEL is a fine white granulated powder which acts quite differently from soap flakes or soap powders. The big difference is in the suds. VEL makes plenty of frothy suds, even in cool or hard water, but these suds are quite unlike soap suds. Actually suds are unnecessary to Vel's cleaning action. With soap, heavy suds are essential for cleaning, but not so with VEL.

MAKES THE WATER WORK

When VEL'S frothy suds subside it's extraordinary cleaning power continues in the almost clear water. You'll actually see particles of dirt in your clear water which VEL has so ably removed from your clothes or dishes.

VEL IS NEW—MODERN

So let's get away from the old-fashioned idea that lasting suds are necessary. Now that soapless VEL is here, this modern cleanser quickly cuts grease and makes china and glassware sparkle because it leaves no soapy film. VEL is such a gentle cleanser that it can be used with perfect safety for delicate lingerie, woolens, baby clothes and nylons—and it is very kind to the hands.

NOT A SUBSTITUTE FOR SOAP

VEL is not a substitute for soap and should not be compared with soap. It is a so-called "detergent" which is winning widespread popularity with those who use it correctly. 16-V-6D

"VEL" is a registered trademark of the COLGATE-PALMOLIVE-PEET CO. LTD.

The Experts Say

By KAY REX
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Dec. 20—(CP)—Both the color and freshness of frozen fruits and vegetables will do much these days to perk up a mid-winter menu dulled by too many starchy and canned foods.

Bringing memories of summer to the table, these frozen products rapidly are gaining popularity. Fortunate for the housewives who have a supply tucked away in their own freezing lockers. But for those who havent, grocers are seling a wide variety of frozen foods which have been packed commercially.

As for their preparation, home economists of the consumer section, Dominion department of agriculture, point out that all such vegetables require some cooking whether they are to be served hot or in a salad.

However as frozen vegetables have been partially cooked in the blanching process in preparation for freezing, and as freezing softens the tissue still further, they require less cooking than the fresh vegetables.

When packed dry (commercially-packed products usually are so packed) they should be put on to cook while still frozen. Brine-packed vegetables are better if allowed to thaw until the block can be easily broken apart with a fork.

Should be Thawed

One exceptlon to the rule is corn on the cob which is dry packed and should be thawed before cooking. Otherwise the kernels will be over cooked before the cob is cooked.

Cooking time varies from three to eight minutes depending on the variety of vegetables, maturity, and method of preparation. Use a tightly covered saucepan. With dry-packed vegetables use one-half cup of boiling water and one-third teaspoon salt to one pint container of vegetables. Cauliflower requires three-quarters cup of water, and corn on the cob should be completely covered.

With brine-packed vegetables use only from one to two tablespoons boiling water to prevent vegetables from scorching as they begin to thaw. No additional salt is required. To hasten thawing to ensure uniform cooking, break the melting mass apart with a fork. This applies particularly to asparagus, broccoli and spinach.

Bring water or brine to boiling point as quickly as possible after ading vegetable and then reduce heat so liquid boils gently for the rest of the period. Count time of cooking from the moment the waer rearhes the boiling point.

Fashion Flashes

PALE SHADES in millinery, such as the off-white or light toast tones, are giving way to more positive colors. Latest fancy is the hat making use of black with pink. Black beaver felt makes a small sailor trimmed with masses of pink satin roses.

Hold your hats, girls, the procession is on! At every Spring fur showing, it seems that there is at least one white version of a favorite fur. We can remember way back when dark, glossy mink was without peer. Now, there is applause for a sling cape and jacket of fabulous white mink, no less!

An ode to Spring on a sartorial theme, must, of course, include a reference to that traditional Spring favorite, the blue twill suit. The new version is classically tailored, but the jacket is longer, usually well over the hips. Hips pockets slightly aslant, round jacket fronts, and a wide pleat detail in back that reaches to the sides, are features of the new suits.

On the beam with dinner clothes or a plain, slim evening frock is a hip-length casual coat of black woollen scrolled all over in silver sequins in a free, loose design, Plain, notched revers, easy sleeves.

The bright lights gleam on the satin suit. Deep, copper-colored satin is used for a handsome street-length suit. The double-breasted jacket has high-placed, notched revers and slanting flaps on its hip-placed pockets. Soft sleeves are gathered into cuffs. Skirt has a slit on either side of the hem.

It's a big year ahead for the white coat, starting with winter resort acceptance. White fleece makes smart topped detailed with a rounded cutaway front, and a flared, rippled back that hangs in soft folds. Oversized patch pockets are cut in rounded contour to follow the rounded front.

Beautiful Bag

By ALICE ALDEN

APPEARING in the shops, just now, are evening handbags so exquisite that they really rate the description "heirloom possessions." Richard Koret adorns a beautiful series of evening bags with metallic all-over hand embroidery, a sort of golden fantasy. So finely worked as to look like weaving, actually it is embroidery on embroidery with simulated stones and "bouillon" encrusting the all-over pattern. The butterfly shaped bag has a hidden facile frame. This bag would be lovely to give and delightful to own.

GOOD MANNERS

Christmas Gifts Appropriate to Give Him

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I would like to plan on what gifts I can, with propriety, give the man I am "going with", for Christmas and for his birthday, which is shortly after Christmas. The problem arises because we are not officially engaged, but (although I am not sure) I believe I may receive an engagement ring from him for Christmas. However, we will be married sometime in the future. He is attending college now, and will for two years, but this plan of ours is not known by our friends.

I would like to know what you think about my giving him a birthstone ring, with perhaps an inscription on the inside of the ring. Or would you think it better to choose something else? He has several cigarette lighters and a wallet. Also, are all articles of clothing taboo, assuming that we are not engaged? Since he likes sports clothes, I had in mind a nice sweater.

VTM

Since your engagement hasn't been announced, and you're not sure you are to receive your engagement ring at Christmas-time, my advice is that you "play safe" with the gift you give the young man for Christmas, and then if you receive your ring and announce your engagement, you can give him a personal, and if you wish, more consequential gift for his birthday.

About your giving him a ring, birthstone or any other kind, I never approve of a girl's doing this, under any circumstances, unless she is positive he would like to wear a ring, for the majority of men don't. And before your engagement is announced, it would certainly not be proper for you to give him a ring. For Christmas you might give him a fountain pen, initialled, or a pen and pencil set, a writing portfolio for his desk (perhaps equipped with large-sized letter-paper, plain or initialled or with his full name), or a sturdy leather portfolio, of several compartments for carrying books and papers to his classes (it could be stamped with his full name), a desk clock or travelling clock, a fitted travelling case of leather, or one or two pieces of desk-equipment. And yes, you could give him a sweater.

If your engagement is announced before his birthday, you might give him a wristwatch, silver or gold cuff links, silver cigarette case, belt with silver or gold cuff links, silver cigarette case, belt with silver or gold mountings, a typewriter, dress set, collar pin and tie clasp (perhaps matching).

Invitations, Announcements for Altar-Trip Number Two

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I am a widow and am going to marry again soon. Since my relatives all came to my first wedding my parents feel that I should send announcements before the wedding to my relatives, and invitations to my fiance's relatives. I think it is incorrect to send announcements to my fiance's relatives. I can't help what happened before. Is it proper to send invitations to everyone.

B. S.

I am not sure what you are really asking in your question. Of course it is not correct to send announcements to anyone before the wedding. . . . announcements are not mailed until after the ceremony has been performed.

A second wedding is usually a simple, informal occasion; and most often the small number of guests are invited by word of mouth or by informal notes. And, if you wish, your parents may send formal announcements to those who were not invited to the wedding.

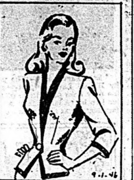
It's About Time



By Dolores Boland

It's about time to remodel a suit for your school girl. Replace the out-of-shape skirt and salvage the jacket. Use contrasting material for a new skirt and to trim old jacket. Bind jacket edges and pockets with skirt material.

Match Your Hat and Hairdo

By HELEN FOLLETT

ONE of the pleasant signs of the times is the co-operative spirit between hair stylists and millinery designers. As soon as a new hairdo comes along there is a new kind of a lid to top it. It wasn't like that when grandmother was a girl. When she blanketed her head with an inside pompadour, a thirty-six-inch braid and enough puffs to fill a biscuit tin, the Merry Widow hat arrived. And was all that a load on the fevered brow? It took an iron woman to stagger along under it. No matter how much home grown hair a woman had, she added the demountable units.

Now all is gaiety and gladness. No matter what kind of a hair-do you decide upon, you can find a top piece that will fit and stay put. There never was a time when millinery was so varied in form, when there was such an array of offerings from which to make a selection. They come big and little, fat and tall.

The wrong hat will turn the prettiest woman into a caricature of her real self. That is why you should use your head in making a choice. Good taste will direct one. If a woman is blessed with good taste she will never make a mistake in make-up, dress or coiffure arrangement.

Some women are hat crazy, and who would blame them? They'll economize in all kinds of ways, then fling money in the wildest manner as soon as they wander into the hat department.

Every woman knows that when she feels low in her mind, the best cure for depressed spirits is a new hat of smart design and engaging color. It does something to her soul, especially if it has a youthful flair.

Hat and hair dress! If both are precisely right they'll prove the making of a woman. The reflection in the mirror will be gratifying.

Liberals' Hold On Quebec Riding To Face Test

Sorel, Que., Dec. 20. (CP)—A Liberal strongpoint that has stood staunchly by the party for over half a century will be challenged Monday in the Federal bye-election in Richelieu-Vercheres.

Three youthful candidates, none of them beyond the early thirties, are waging an intensive and lively campaign for the House of Commons seat that P. J. A. Cardin occupied for 35 years until his death two months ago.

Undismayed by the substantial majorities that Mr. Cardin registered for the Liberals in election after election, Progressive Conservative and Social Credit candidates have fought hard and express confidence as the campaign enters its final phase.

For the Liberals, Gerard Cournoyer, K.C., 34-year-old former law partner of Mr. Cardin, seeks to inherit his late chief's political mantle. Etienne Duhamel, bank accountant well known in the riding, is the Progressive Conservative nominee, while Roland Corbell carries the Union Des Electeurs (Social Credit) banner.

Liberal Since 1891

Not since Sir Hector Langevin carried the riding for the Conservatives in 1891 has the seat been anything but Liberal. The next year A. A. Bruneau scraped through by 72 votes in a bye-election to put the county in the Liberal column and in the Reciprocity election of 1911 Mr. Cardin began his long series of victories.

In the 945 general election, Mr. Cardin, then running as an Independent Liberal since he had resigned from the Mackenzie King Cabinet on the conscription issue, polled 12,873 votes, against 3,080 for the Progressive Conservative and 1,945 for the Social Credit candidate.

There are 25,703 registered voters in the riding at the confluence of the Richelieu and St. Lawrence Rivers, some 40 miles northeast of Montreal, and observers predict a heavy turnout in Monday's polling providing the roads maintain their present freedom from snow.

ONLY CHRISTMAS PARTY

Chicago, Dec. 20 — (AP) — Three police squads raced to the National Security Bank last night in response to a holdup alarm. The policemen heard noises inside and deduced there must be a whole gang of bandits. But a watchman who opened the door said 40 bank employees were having a Christmas party. One of the dancers, he explained, had accidentally stepped on a button connected to the automatic alarm.

Canberra—(CP)— Agriculture Minister Pollard has introduced a bill to provide $3,000,000 to finance a plan to eliminate uneconomic wheat-growing. He said the plan, which will cost $9,000,000 in all, would withdraw more than 3,300,000 acres from wheat production.

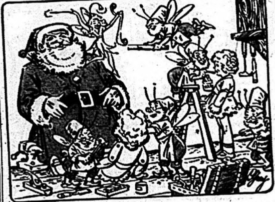
The Little People of Santa Claus Land



Santa, with Tinkle Bell, his tiny secretary, visits the doll workshop.

EDITOR'S NOTE — These stories, written for the children, will find a place in the hearts of their elders—who, like adults around the world, enjoy reliving the fantasy that Santa Claus and his land of "little people" spells.

By JANE NILES, Central Press Staff Writer

EPISODE TWO

WITH CHRISTMAS not so very far away, everything is very exciting in Santa Claus land. Old Mr. North Wind is blowing as hard as he can, but there is no time for sledding or throwing snowballs. For the most important night of the year is coming—Christmas Eve!

And everything must be ready for Santa Claus' big trip over the housetops.

All the Little People of Santa Claus land—the Wee Tiny Fairies and the Gay Little Elves and the Merry Little Muncheons and the Happy Little Dwarves—are working every minute these busy days.

However, the busiest of all the Little People in Santa Claus land is the Queen of the Wee Tiny Fairies—Santa's personal, private secretary—Tinkle Bell. Santa, himself, gave the Wee Tiny Fairy Queen the name of Tinkle Bell, because you see, she is the gayest, the merriest, the happiest of all the Little People and because of that she gets to wear a beautiful, silver bell on her head.

Now this beautiful, silver bell tinkles wherever she goes—so, of course, Santa calls her Tinkle Bell.

Tinkle Bell's most important job is taking notes for Santa. She flies along at his side as he checks up on the behavior of children everywhere. When Santa wants something done, Tinkle Bell is right there to see that it gets done.

Tinkle Bell flies all over Santa Clause land seeing that all the Wee Tiny Fairies and the Gay Little Elves and the Merry Little Muncheons and the Happy Little Dwarves do everything just right.

Today, Santa, with Tinkle Bell, his tiny secretary, hopping along on his shoulder, is visiting the doll workshop. It is the third building in Toy Factory Row, and here the Merry Little Muncheons are making the most beautiful dolls you have ever seen.

Santa and Tinkle Bell go down the line of tiny work benches, and they check every doll to be sure the Merry Little Muncheons are not making any mistakes.

Now, if they find that there is a Merry Little Muncheon who is not paying attention to his work—like that little fellow, No. 63, at the end of the line who is putting blue eyes on a brown-eyed doll—do you know what happens?

Santa turns to Tinkle Bell and says, "Put a big red 'X' on the list for Merry Little Muncheon No. 63, for some little girl who wants this brown-eyed doll will be very, very unhappy if she finds it has blue eyes instead. Why, her Christmas is liable to be ruined!

So Tinkle Bell pulls out her long list of Merry Little Muncheons, and she marks a great big red "X" next to No. 63.

Now, what an Unhappy Little Muncheon is No. 63, when Tinkle Bell shows him her list. For every Merry Little Muncheon who gets a big red "X" by his name blushes with embarrassment. And, if it happens often enough—if he makes too many mistakes and gets too many big red "X's" and blushes with embarrassment too many times—why, the blush just sticks there! And the Unhappy Little Muncheon's face stays red forever and ever.

Though Santa Claus has to punish these careless Merry Little Muncheons for not doing their job well, the jolly old fellow has such a kind heart that he cannot help but feel sorry for them. So do you know what he does with all the Unhappy Little Muncheons who turn red from blushing too much?

They are all transferred from their regular work benches where their mistakes made them blush too much. And they are assigned to a great big building on the edge of Santa Claus land, where the toy fire engines are made.

And can you guess why Santa Claus sends the Unhappy Little Muncheons that are red from blushing too much to the fire engine factory?

Why, so that no one will be able to notice just how red the Unhappy Little Muncheons really are—you see, next to the bright red fire engines that they are painting—the Little Muncheons, unhappy no longer, don't look very red at all!

Slams and Plaudits Greet Saskatchewan's Hospital Plan

By NORM ALTSTEDTER
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Regina, Dec. 20 (CP).—The first government-controlled hospital service plan of its kind in North America faces a chorus of vocal opposition and an expected rush of patients with its New Year's Day inauguration.

The Saskatchewan C.C.F. government's plan, which will provide basic hospital care for a $5 compulsory annual tax from each resident of the province with a maximum of $30 tax a family, is taking the slams with the plaudits.

Opponents say it will flood the already-overcrowded hospitals; that it is too expensive; and that control should be decentralized to regional schemes, some already in effect.

Plan administrators say the expected rush of patients will soon level off; that the centralized scheme cuts down on overhead expenses and allows it to fit easily into any future dominion-wide plan; and that it "breaks down the economic barrier to hospitalization".

Although up to last Monday less than $1,800,000 of an expected $3,500,000 to $4,000,000 was collected from Saskatchewan residents, the planning commission officials are not worried. They expected the big rush in the final two weeks' collection.

Residents who do not pay the tax before Jan. 1 will not be eligible for benefits until one month after they do pay and will also be liable to a $25 fine.

Those of Saskatchewan's 840,000 inhabitants who do pay will be eligible to receive public ward accommodation; meals and special diets; ward nursing care; operating room service; surgical dressings; "necessary" drugs and medicines; laboratory service; physiotherapy and hospital maternity care.

But the scheme does not cover doctors' bills. That will be part of an over-all provincial health service plan of which the hospital care phase is the third to go into effect. Free care of tuberculosis, cancer, mental and venereal disease cases; old age and blind pensioners; dependent mothers' allowance cases and indigents is already given. Diagnostic and dental services for all are expected to come later.

Some of Saskatchewan's 545 medical practitioners smile on the hospital services plan — Norway has had one since 1911 — as a salvation for their poorer patients; others frown at the thought of flooding the province's 81 hospitals and 10 Red Cross outposts and overburdening Saskatchewan's 1,500 nurses.

But there are 969 nurses in training in the province — more than ever before. And there are almost five hospital beds for each 1,000 population — more than 4,000 beds. Health authorities call only for a minimum of 4.5 beds for each 1,000 population. The United States average is 3.5 and Saskatchewan hopes to have 6.1 before the end of 1947.

Inflation Slow Control Policy

By JACK WILLIAMS
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa,—(CP)—The Year 1946 bought Canada's reconversion worries in a rush. At the year end conditions were taking a more definite peacetime form, but war's hangover still left its imprint on the lives of Canadians.

There were still shortages necessitating continued rationing of some foods—sugar, meat, butter; many other goods were in short supply; but employment and income was at a high level and, on a domestic plane at least, Canada's outlook for 1947 was bright.

Inflation remained a major government worry and slowed down the gradual decontrol policy adopted immediately after the war. Expectations were that as production stepped up in 1947 the process of removing wartime controls could be accelerated with the possibility that few, if any, would remain at the end of the year.

Housing difficulties, present throughout the war, reached new heights as veterans returned and sought homes. Particularly in large centres the problem became acute and in Ottawa and Montreal "squatter" tactics were used by some groups to take possession of vacant buildings.

Construction of new homes was hampered by shortages of skilled workers and materials, with strikes contributing to the material shortages. Nails became as precious as though they were made of valuable metal and material was salvaged from abandoned war buildings. The 1946 target of 60,000 new homes fell short by between 5,000 and 10,000; but Reconstruction Minister Howe predicted 1947 would bring the greatest building activity the country had ever seen.

High Income Level.

The high level of income that was maintained — more than double that of 1939—added to the inflationary threat with a shortage of goods to soak up the available spending power. High production held promise of the best protection.

Price control had been eased during the year, particularly on goods regarded as non-essential, and living costs had risen noticeably but there was no evidence of an immediate abandonment of price control. Wage control, on the other hand, was on the way out at the year-end.

Winding up tag ends of war business was a major government activity. War contracts were reviewed to determine whether profits had been excessive and renegotiation of contracts returned $400,000,000 to the Dominion treasury.

Sale of surplus war materials had passed its peak by the end of the year but was continuing at the rate of $20,000,000 a month, with total sales in excess of $300,000,000. Thus, with the year of reconversion ended, the way seemed paved for concentration in 1947 on shaping Canada's war-found strength for its first real test in a competitive world field.

Washington Spotlight:

Stassen Wants to be President And He Doesn't Mind Saying So

BY CLYDE BLACKBURN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Washington, Dec. 20—(CP)—Capt. Harold E. Stassen, late of the United States navy, former governor of Minnesota, wants to be president of the United States and is making no bones about his ambition.

He was in Washington this week with a number of others who might be considered logical republican contenders for the presidency but he was the only one to come right out and say he was in the running.

Not only did he tell correspondents he wanted the White House but he outlined his legislative and administrative ideas and said he would open an office here Jan. 1 from which to direct his campaign.

Evidently Stassen believes it is no disgrace to aspire to the presidency. He has been quitely campaigning for it ever since he got out of the navy, where he was decorated three times for courage, service and meritious conduct.

The Minnestota republican committee has been working for him and trying to rally the national committee behind him. He has travelled all over the continent on speech-making tours and plans to keep right in—and to travel abroad to study the results of American policy.

Stassen is 39. He was elected for his third term in Minnesota in 1942 although he warned his constituents he hoped to get into the navy, which he did.

He told reporters this week he would work with the Congressional Republican group toward liberal policies on labor, housing, public health and the rights of small business. He would oppose the extremes of fascism and communism.

Sen. Arthur Vandenberg (Rep.-Mich.), interviewed on the 1948 presidential fight, said he was not a candidate and no one was working to nominate him. But no one believes he would refuse.

Sen. Robert Taft of Ohio also is a Republican possibility, as is his fellow Senator-elect, John Bricker of Ohio who was running mate of Governor Thomas E. Dewey of New York in the Party's unsuccessful 1944 presidential campaign.

They were all here this week including Gov. Dewey who was recently elected for another four-year term in New York. No one questions the fact that all these Republicans want the 1948 nomination but it is doubtful if any of them would publicly admit it. Dewey said Friday in Albany, N. Y. 'certainly not" when asked if he were ready now to announce his candidacy.

The general guess in Washington is that the party will forget its unbroken tradition of never nominating a one-time loser, and try to nominate Dewey.

Washington has been intrigued —and it is reported Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower has been embarassed—by the mysterious appearance in the capital of small colored buttons inscribed "Draft Ike for '48" but with no indication of their source. wearers have explained that they 'found" them.

So much is heard of United States strikers that little attention is paid those that fail to come off, such as the 13,000 industrial disputes settled by federal mediation or voluntary arbitration in the first full year after VJ-Day.

Little Benny's Note Book

We were eating supper, being almost a big steak, and ma said, Oh dear, I suppose I'll save to order a proverbial terky for Chrissmas dinner, but personaly I'd be hapiper with a lam chop, because I know I'll go way off my diet when I look at that big berd and realize that if it's not eaten up it will be looking me in the face for a week.

Aw G, ma, it wouldn't be Chrissmas without a terky, it would just be a imitation, I said, and pop said, if I had my choice, I'd eat liver and onions on every holliday, especially Chrissmas. Terkies are vastly overrated berds, anyway. They dont sound happy when they're alive, and nobody feels happy after the therd helping, he said.

Aw heck, pop, I do, I said, and pop said, I dont see why everybody cant eat what they like best on Chrissmas of all days. By gollies, my dear, let's try it out. You get your lam chop, and fix me up a nice platter of liver and onions, and we'll get Benny a big cooked terky leg from the dellicatessen, and maybe even a neck too, he said.

Nothing doing, no sir, aw no, I said. It wouldn't be any fun eating a drumstick without being able to see the rest of the terkey where it came from. Good night it would seem like eating a ghost. G. roozalem, nothing doing, that's a heck of a idea, I said, and ma said, Well I might as well go ahead and order it, then.

There doesn't seem to be any way out of it, pop said. Oh well, after all, there are compensations, such as the cramberry sauce and the filling, he said, and I said, Well G wizzickers how about the terky itself? That's the biggest of all, I said.

Which it is, and pop said, Okay, you win, and ma said, All right, all right, we'll have a terky.

Making me feel lucky.

Christmas Prices Mar Holiday Pleasures for Most Britons

By STUART UNDERHILL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Dec. 20—(CP)—Christmas in the Old Country recaptures its English accent this year, buts it's still just a whisper of the joyous festivities that used to be.

For the first time in eight years streets and stores aren't crowded with British and Allied uniforms. The servicemen from overseas have gone home and Tommy Atkins has exchanged his military headgear for a bowler hat.

If this is his first civilian Christmas after years of war service, he finds supplies more lavish than they have been for a long time past, but at a price which makes him think twice before completing his purchase.

"Prices are something awful," says Mrs. Brown, who makes a few shillings weekly cleaning to supplement her husband's £5 ($20) income as a laborer. "What we shall do for toys I don't know. My little girl keeps asking for a doll. I saw a lovely one yesterday —for £8.

"What, us 'ave a turkey at 4s 6d (90 cents) a pound? Not very likely. Even if we could afford it, the butchers save 'em for the toffs or sell 'em to the black market. Oh no, we shall do very well on our joint (roast), thank you."

For Special Customers

So will most British homes, for Mrs. Brown is right; turkeys are scarce again this year and available only to those customers whom butchers classify as "good."

But as usual there will be little extras on the ration—a few ounces more meat and a bit more candy and sugar. Dried and fresh fruits —the latter including Canadian apples—are expected to reach the public before Dec. 25. Meagre though they may be, some concrete signs of Christmas will be visible.

Liquor supplies are more plentiful, too, although the would be purchaser has his doubts. Liquor isn't rationed—it's almost unavailable—and the technique is to cultivate the same wine merchant until one is regarded as a 'regular' and eligible for occasional sales.

"The food ministry tells us there's more beer and at least as much spirits as last year, but I'm sure I don't know where it's all gone," said one vendor gloomily. "At least I'm not getting it."

His meaning wink said it was going to the black market, which undoubtedly does exist, though without the organized vigor of European countries. Millions of Britons couldn't find a black market salesman even if they wanted one.

Left to regular markets, they do their Christmas shopping in stores where all but non-esentials sell for dizzy prices which are bolstered by a 33 1-3 per cent tax A few examples of toys: doll's pram 6£ 14s; teddy bears £3 to £9, doll's house £9 to £20.

Variety of Goods

But stores are much better stocked with goods of all sorts than they were last year even if prices are staggering. Christmas shopping budgets have to undergo rapid revision.

Clothing remains among the most popular of gifts from the recipient's point of view but is still rationed tightly, and most people require their coupons for their own or their children's use. Gloves stockings and lingerie—traditional gifts—all take coupons.

At least the surroundings show an improvement over a year ago. There are still great gaps in cities all over Britain—and will be for years—but most of the rubble has been cleared away and tottering walls which were beyond repair have been levelled.

Shopfronts are a lot brighter, too, with more and more replacing the heavy cardboard which has filled up window space for two or three years with plate glass. Paint is still difficult to get but a little has gone a long way in brightening up shabby trims.

The general housing situation still remains one of Britain's grimmest problems, but tens of thousands of homes have been made available during the year by repair and new construction, and all these have absorbed families which last Christmas were separated or unsuitably housed.

It's these people, and those who are hanging on grimly for long-deferred better times, who put a ring in Britain's "Merry Christmas."

Communism Future Rendered Dubious By Army Crackdown

By EDWIN B. GREENWALD

Istanbul, Dec. 20 — (AP) — Veteran foreign observers in Istanbul expressed belief today that the future of Communism throughout Turkey had been rendered dubious by Tuesday's army crackdown against Left-Wing organizations and publications in Turkish Thrace.

Informed quarters, reviewing with increasing interest the sudden clean-up in the Istanbul state of siege zone, which extends to the Greek and Bulgarian borders, said little apparently remained of any Leftist leadership.

Gone with them, these sources said, were two political parties—the Workers and Peasants Socialist Party and the Turkish Socialist Party — their labor union affiliates and eight publications. An uncounted number of persons was reported arrested in the so-called purge.

While wild demonstrations which wrecked two newspapers and two bookstores Dec. 4, 1945, were more spectacular, observers viewed Tuesday's quietly efficient sweep as infinitely more important and described it as an expressive sign of official displeasure with an external political philosophy.

Old-time observers said they could not recall when any government pronouncement had been so outspoken against "Communists" as the army communique describing the crackdown.

"Communism" is a word seldom used in Turkey but nonetheless the communique issued by the state of siege commandant used it three times in 250 words. It openly accused the two banned parties and their labor affiliates of being directed by Communists and "people having Extremist Communist tendencies."

The eight padlocked publications were accused, in general, of "propagating opinions" of the two banned parties, which had headquarters here. To start again the parties must apply to government appointed governors in any other province.

The closed labor syndicates were among the first in Turkey under a recent law permitting organizations along class lines, and one important observer said, the action against them seemed to deal a blow, at least temporarily, to the organized labor movement.

"WHITE-TAILED DEER" by W. B. Herbert.
The above illustration shows white-tailed deer at the close of day.

THE HUNTER—a Conservationist
The hunter, by lawful shooting helps control the number of deer which any given area can support, and by the destruction of predatory wolves, becomes a conservationist of the first order.

Poised and alert, among the lengthening shadows of a snow crusted bush trail stand a Buck and a Doe. Yet, at the crack of a twig, the white tails vanish into the fastness. Truly a superb example of Canadian wild life whose continued existence in our forests can be ensured through the whole hearted support of conservation measures.

*"As a sportsman, or simply a person interested in enjoying nature, we can help by strictly obeying the regulations designed to protect our game animals."

*An excerpt from—CONSERVATION AND CANADA'S BIG GAME ANIMALS, by R. C. Dowling, one in a series of pamphlets published by The Carling Conservation Club.

Cards-Dodgers Regular Season Tie Voted Sports Oddity of Year

New York, Dec. 20 —(AP)— The St. Louis Cardinal-Brooklyn Dodger regular season tie for the National League pennant has been voted the No. 1 sports oddity of 1946 by a close margin over the Ted Williams shift.

Twelve of the 56 writers who participated in the annual Associated Press poll to determine the oddest event of the year, agreed that the Red Bird-Brook standoff was tops, while 11 thought the Cleveland and St. Louis shift of slugger Ted Williams of Boston Red Sox was the strangest occurrence.

The Card-Dodger deadlock marked the first time in major league baseball that two teams wound up the regular season in a dead heat for the title.

The two teams entered the final day of the campaign snarled for the lead and both contestants lost, resulting in a best-two-out-of-three game playoff for the flag which the Red Birds won in two straight games.

The now famous "Williams shift" was employed by Manager Lou Boudreau of the Indians after the Boston strong boy had belted three home runs off tribal hurlers in the opening of a doubleheader. Boudreau moved practically his entire team into right field and Manager Ed Dyer of the Cards used a variation of the move in the World Series. The strategy paid off as Williams was held to five singles.

Stoppage of a second game of a twin bill between the Dodgers and Chicago Cubs because of an invasion of gnats at Ebbets Field drew five votes and Enos Slaughter's mad dash from first to home with the Cards' payoff run against the Red Sox in the last game of the World Series gained four votes.

Football oddities included such beauts as Ohio State flying to Los Angeles for a game with Southern California and forgetting to take along a single football; a Washington and Lee player lining up in a West Virginia huddle by mistake in a game played in the mud; officials instructing the band to play the Star Spangled Band three times during the Arizona-Santa Clara game to halt play because of roughness.

What's Doing in Sport

(By The Canadian Press)

Wrestler George F. Temple, brother of Actress Shirley, yesterday filed suit for divorce from the former Florence Bruce, 21, Detroit ballet dancer, charging extreme cruelty.

Bruce Woodcock, British heavyweight boxing champion, and his long-time sweetheart, Nora Speight, were married yesterday at Doncaster, Yorks.

At Milwaukee, Elmer Baumgarter, secretary of the American Bowling Congress, said yesterday two proposals for changes in the organization's constitution limiting membership to "the white male sex" were being prepared for introduction at the annual delegate meeting in Los Angeles next April.

Northeast Missouri State College basketball team, winning from Montana Polytechnic Institute 102-35 at Kirksville, Mo., last night, averaged more than five points a minute.

Outfielder Stan Musial of the St. Louis Cardinals yesterday talked with President Sam Breadon for 45 minutes but both parties said they failed to agree on terms for Musial's 1947 contract.

12-POINT LEAD ENJOYED BY HAMILTON TIGERS

(By The Canadian Press)

The Hamilton Tigers, League leaders of the five-team O.H.A. Senior A circuit, can sit back comfortably tonight and watch the other four teams push each other around in an effort to edge a little closer.

Winners of 12 games in as many starts this season, the Cats are currently the only Club in the league playing better than 50-50 hockey and their 12-point lead over the nearest contender means they can watch tonight's results with little concern.

Meanwhile in Hamilton the second-place Toronto Staffords tackle Hamilton Patricias who stand a chance to share the second spot if they can grab the decision. Each club has beaten the other once this season.

The tail-end Owen Sound Mohawks entertain Stratford Indians in the other Senior game. A victory, coupled with a defeat for Pats, would give the visitors a third-place tie. A win for the Mohawks would still leave them a game out of fourth place. The Indians took a close 2-1 decision in their only previous meeting.

In tonight's only Junior "A" game the cellar-dwelling Windsor Spitfires, who racked up their first win of the season last time out, will try to make it two in a row in Barrie against the sixth-place Flyers.

Chips Off The Sports Block

By George H. Carver, Sports Editor

It may have been telepathy or a reasonable facsimile of the old adage that "great minds think alike" but the master-minds of the Belleville and Trenton Intermediate hockey teams rose up simultaneously in their righteous wrath at the groupings recently handed down by the OHA.

The Belleville management was definitely not satisfied with their set-up in an inter-city series with Kingston. Trenton, whose squad is a "B" rating, was likewise concerned with their allotment in the district group, with the latter losing no time going into action.

As a result of more or frenzied activity and wire burning between Trenton, Toronto and Kingston, the grouping hereabouts will consist of a four-squad set-up with Kingston Lions, Queen's U Seconds Belleville and Trenton in the intermediate "A" group, and Trenton, Belleville, Kingston Vics and Kingston Saints in the Junior "B" grouping.

Trenton Hockey Association held an emergency meeting on Wednesday night and immediately got in touch with the OHA asking for a different set-up. They were told by Secretary W. A. Hewitt that their suggested changes were O.K. with him so they immediately contacted the managements of the various Kingston squads proposing the new grouping. Kingston acquiesced, and yesterday afternoon, the managements of the Belleville teams endorsed the idea.

In the Intermediate Group Kingston Lions and Belleville are classified as "A" with Queen's Seconds and Trenton under the "B" banner. This will mean that there will be group playoffs between Kingston and Belleville and Queen's and Trenton regardless of team standing at the end of the group schedule.

"We were definitely not satisfied with the group as laid down by the O.H.A.", Secretary Treasurer Rex Young of the Intermediates said. "We immediately wrote a letter to the OHA moguls protesting against the idea, but Trenton beat us to it. The new set-up while not as attractive as that of last year when Peterborough, Whitby and Oshawa were included, is a lot better, than the original. It will at least give local fans a little more hockey."

However, it's an ill wind that doesn't dry somebody's washing, and the grouping of the teams of Trenton, Kingston and Belleville will reduce to a great extent that great bugbear of any athletic team, cost of transportation. And brother, that's a big item on any team's expense sheet, or it was heretofore, not to mention the wear and tear on the players themselves when long safaris in lumbering buses were in order.

And while on the subject of wear and tear, it was one of the main reasons for the miserable showing of the Belleville Redmen last year when they slumped from near top-slot to outside a playoff berth in their OHA grouping.

They went through a long hard grind in the Van Horne series, a social moniker for the Kingston City League, and met and defeated the best ice talent the Limestone City could produce. In fact they were never lower than a third place tie and eventually went into the finals only to be defeated by a desperate Queen's University late in the season after the students had been kicked around intercollegiate and exhibition circles like a ragged football.

In any event, by the time the OHA schedule started, the Redmen found themselves with two schedules on their hands. They played eight games in eleven nights. On one occasion they trekked to Kingston and back, 100 miles, snatched an hours' sleep, got up for the daily grind and that evening hopped the bus for Uxbridge some 25 miles north in the hinterland above Oshawa.

Came the inevitable slump and after that the Redskins could do nothing right. Weary arms and legs could not recall their early season vigor and although the Reds battled gallantly they could not get back their former speed and ability and they passed out of the picture defeated but far from disgraced.

This year it should be a different story, with much depending on the immediate weather. If sufficient cold draughts, wind that is, sift down from the north pole to give Walt Gerow and his ice-making confreres the proper opportunity so that the boys of both teams can get in at least a little practice, then the redshirts from the Moira River wigwams will give a good account of themselves.

REMEMBER WHEN—

Jerome (Dizzy) Dean, who managed to hit the sports pages all year, was voted sports biggest disappointment of the year, nine years ago today. Twenty of 53 sports writers voted for Dean, then with St. Louis Cardinals.

This yarn has been told before—but somehow there is always a kick to it. Eddie Ainsmith the late Walter Johnson's regular catcher cooked up a hoax on an umpire one late afternoon that worked to perfection. Darkness was threatening to halt the game. There were two strikes on the catcher. Walking out to the mound, Ainsmith said to Johnson, "This guy'll swing at anything. So you wind up, but don't throw the ball. I'll pound my glove and it's so dark, maybe the umpire will think he didn't see it either."

As the story goes it happened that way. Johnson went through his motion but held the ball and Ainsmith pounded his mitt to simulate the ball striking it.

"Strike three," yelled the umpire.

"No," yelled the batter, "That was no strike. It was a foot wide.".

Sports Roundup

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New York, Dec. 20 — (CP) — Maurice Podoloff, president of the American Hockey League and the Basketball Association of America, must run into a lot of overtime guiding the destinies of two such major sporting organizations in the same season . . . Yet six years ago Podoloff scarcely knew a punt from a rowboat, so scant was his knowledge of sport . . . One of the favorite stories about Podoloff concerns his reaction when his son wired that he was to be married in Oklahoma . . . Podoloff promised he would be there if he had to arrive "on crutches" . . . The next day he fell to the deck of a boat when a wind caught a piece of canvas he was fastening . . . A tendon in Podoloff's leg was severed and he made the wedding with his injured leg in a cast.

What-are-they-doing-now Dept.

For those who wonder "whatever became of old so-and-so?" let it be known that Pudge Heffelfinger, the great college football guard, still is around the sports scene . . . Heffelfinger showed up in Houston, Tex., Thursday to welcome famed coach Amos Alonzo Stagg to the Optimist Bowl . . . Rated by many as the greatest guard of all time, Heffelfinger was an All-America choice three years in a row . . . Along with Stagg, Pudge was on the first All-America team ever picked — in 1889 . . . He played professional football after the age of 50 and reports from Houston said he looked as though he could turn in a hefty brand of ball today.

Sock Exchange

Ronnie James, British lightweight champion, will meet Tommy Burns in Sydney, Australia, Jan. 13 . . . The match will be at the welterweight limit . . . Burns, recently knocked out by Australian lightweight champion Vic Patrick, is the chief contender for the Australian welter crown . . . James went to Australia to meet Patrick but Patrick couldn't make the lightweight limit . . . Negotiations still are proceeding for the proposed Empire welter title fight in London between Montreal's Johnny Greco and Britain's Ernie Roderick . . . . Sugar Ray Robinson was considered as a possible opponent for Roderick but instead will go against Tommy Bell in Madison Square Garden tonight.

Around the Circuit

It's just one thing after another with the Australian and American Davis Cup teams in Melbourne . . . The latest rift is said to have been caused by Australian opposition to participation of American players in exhibiting in Australia after the scheduled cup matches late this month . . . The United States team is reported "peeved" about the Australian attitude and the word is the invaders may pull out of Australia as soon as cup play ends . . . . Atlantic City will build a one-mile turf course in an effort to attract foreign horses . . . . All authorities seem to agree that the increasing use of air transportation of thoroughbreds will bring a revival of international competition . . . There's a move afoot to make bribery of athletes in the United States a federal offence.

Canadian Sport Snapshots

By WILF GRUSON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Dec. 20. (CP)—A step which the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association may adopt officially in the "not too far distant future" appears to have been taken by the Northern Ontario Hockey Association which demands payment to its clubs for release of players to other leagues.

Officially, exchange of money between clubs for release of a player is not proper but the C.A.H.A. no longer turns its eyes away from the fact that it has been done for years. It has accepted it just as it realizes now that the majority of the players in the big amateur leagues play for something besides love of the game.

As yet it's not compulsory for a club seeking players to "purchase" their release but the N.O.H.A. intends to see that payment is made for its players, especially from clubs in the Ontario Hockey Association Junior "A" series which have taken some of the better puckchasers in the N.O.H.A. in the last few years.

"In future, there definitely will be a payment for transfer of any of these players ot Junior "A" Clubs", Secretary Bob Crosby of the N.O.H.A. told Britt (North Bay Nugget) Jessup in a letter.

Some players' releases have been obtained without exchange of money. In other cases, such as the transfer of Sammy Casanato and Matt Mesich from Porcupine Combines to Stratford Kroehlers, payment was made with approval of both the N.O.H.A. and the O.H.A. For Casanato and Mesich the Kroehlers are reported to have paid $300.

"There always has been money changing hands in the transfer of players in recent years," said W. A. Hewitt, secretary of the O.H.A. and registrar of the C.A.H.A. "It is privately done but sanctioned by us. We believe a club which has spent considerable money in developing a player is entitled to some compensation."

Mr. Hewitt said the C.A.H.A. at its last meeting discussed but never adopted a plan to inaugurate a "draft" system where payment would be made for a player moving from one club to another. At present payment is compulsory only when professional teams draft players from amateur teams.

"Compulsory payment for the release of players among amateur clubs is on its way," Mr. Hewitt added. "It will gradually come as it is the tendency of the times. It provides further control of players and does away with arguments when a player wishes to make a change."

Mingled with skill you need a little luck to win tournaments. With appropriate persuasion, I could be induced to trot out plenty of proof. Even in the many I have won.

In the title matches, deals are played in duplicate. This means that the same hands are played at all the tables. Consequently, the luck element is mostly due to vagaries of players.

In a recent match, there came up this deal:

♣Q 8 765432

WEST
♠Q 9 8652
♥10
♦Q J
♣J 10 9 6

EAST
♥9 6 4 2
♦K 109842
♣K

SOUTH
♥A K Q J 3
♦A 7 5 3

Many of the pairs were in six clubs or six hearts. These were defeated. Those who ended in five clubs or four hearts had nothing to worry about if content with making their contract.

My partner in the south seat became the declarer at a contract of four hearts. With a correct opening lead from west, he could have taken only 11 tricks. There are two losers.

But at our table, my partner got a diamond in dummy. He got in again with his spade king and led another diamond.

West ruffed this with heart ten. Unable to overtrump, the dummy hand sluffed the only remaining spade that was there. West now thought of leading a club. Dummy ducked and south won with the ace.

Now the spade jack was led and trumped in dummy. Club queen was sent forth from there. West ruffed with heart four. The jack in south topped it. The last south diamond was then ruffed in dummy.

By ruffing a club, south got in again and pulled the remaining trumps. His king of spades was then good for the last trick. He thus lost only one trick, the one ruffed with the lone west heart.

Yes, south got a lucky break. He also took a wise precaution by sluffing dummy spade. Otherwise he might have lost a spade trick.

Luck and skill are a great combination.

The Movie Column

By HELEN BANNERMAN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ingrid Bergman will be the star of the first picture made by the new company, Transatlantic Pictures, jointly owned by Alferd Hitchcock and Sidney Bernstein. At present playing the lead in "Joan of Lorraine" on Broadway she plans to leave for England in the Spring to make the picture, which will probably be a thriller.

Publicity men will go to great lengths for their art and here is the text of one of the latest from Columbia: "Daisy, the Bumstead dog in the 'Blondie' series, returned to Hollywood yesterday by plane from Portland, Oregon, where she was vacationing with owner-trainer, Rennie Renfro. Filmdom's canine star was recalled to the studio for final scenes in 'Blondie's Holiday'."

'The Lady Member', a 1911 story by the late Damon Runyon, will be a vehicle for Constance Bennett. It tells the story of a woman who is elected to the House of Representatives.

Adolphe Menjou has been signed for a role in "The Hucksters" with Clark Gable and Deborah Kerr.

Fourteen-year-old Richard Tyler, who plays the title role in Moss Hart's Broadway play, "Christopher Blake", is the mainspring behind a new movie producing company to be called "The Falcon Films". He, his sister, whose stage name is Diane Parker, Mack Twamley and Charles Nevil, who are also in the play, plan to produce a picture based on a family comic strip, "The Adventures of Sunshine", drawn weekly for several years by Diane as her weekly letter to her brother, a comic strip fan.

Originally the strip recorded happenings in her own life but when they seemed tame she branched out till "Sunshine" had all sorts of adventures in a haunted castle somewhere on an English moor. The picture will be based on the latter adventures.

"Duel in the Sun", Daivd O. Selznick's lavish Western, will have its premier before an audience of 2,000 wounded veterans in the theatre of Birmingham hospital, Van Nuys, Cal., on Dec. 29, before it opens its doors to the public in Los Angeles. After that it will be shown in other veterans' hospitals before release in other United States cities. Plans are in progress for hospital screenings to be carried to other countries.

The Birmingham hospital premiere will have the glamor and celebrities of a regular premiere, the pictures' stars, Jennifer Jones, Joseph Cotten, Gregory Peck, Lionel Barrymore, Herbert Marshall, Lillian Gish and Walter Huston will attend.

AT THE BELLE

"If I'm Lucky"

Starring Vivian Blain, Perry Como, Harry James and Carmen Miranda, and boasting a score of six new songs hits by famed composers Joe Myrow and Eddie De Lange, "If I'm Lucky," 20th Century-Fox's new musical, opens tomorrow at the Belle Theatre.

The picture, set against the background of an exciting election campaign, tells the story of one orchestra's fight to make the "big time," and of a gal and two fellows who find that love and politics mix with a vengeance.

Assigned to the task of writing songs for four of the nation's top musical personalities, Myrow and De Lange are said to have written an outstanding musical score that gives each of the stars generous opportunities of displaying their distinctive talents, as well as playing an important part in advancing the mood and action of the film's story. "Follow the Band," rousing election number, features Harry James and his Music Makers; "If I'm Lucky" and "Bet Your Bottom Dollar," both romantic ballads, throw the spotlight on Vivian Blaine and Perry Como; "One More Kiss," an unusual rhythm number, provides specialty spots for each of the stars and the band; Carmen Miranda lets loose with her tropical rhythm in "Batucuda," a racy Brazilian number; while "Moon of Jade" brings Harry James and his celebrated trumpet to the fore in all his brilliant virtuosity.

Myrow, who has just completed the music with Mack Gordon for the forthcoming "Three Little Girls in Blue," has collaborated with De Lange before on New York shows and night club revues. "If I'm Lucky" marks their debut as a motion picture tune team.

The star-studded, song-packed hit was directed by Lewis Seller and produced by Bryan Foy.

The Belle Latest World Newsreel, a funny Terrytoon Color Cartoon "Jail Break," and March of Time's new exciting issue, "Wanted, More Homes," revealing new hard-hitting revelations that will smash wide open many long-standing and flagrant abuses in the housing situation. The next to closing chapter of the year's most popular serial "Hop Harrigan" will be exhibited Saturday matinee. Continuous shows will be presented on Saturday.

A DISAPPOINTMENT

Toronto, Dec. 20 — (CP)—To those who like plenty of snow, this winter — in Ontario at least —is proving a disappointment. With only five-and-a-half inches recorded to date, the Meteorological Office says snowfall is six-and-a-half inches below normal.

Details of Intimate Life of Hitler And Wife Revealed

By RICHARD A. O'REGAN

Frankfurt, Germany, Dec. 20—(AP) — Intimate new details of the life of Adolf Hitler and Eva Braun have been uncovered by seizure of 31 reels of color films.

The films, depicting gay parties at Berchtesgaden and bathing in the nude under mountain waterfalls, were dug from a hiding place in the Bavarian Mountains "several months ago," United States Army intelligence officers disclosed Thursday.

Taken between 1939 and 1941, long before the couple's 11th-hour marriage in Berlin's ruins, the films were described as the personal property of the German Fuehrer and his bride.

The films show frequent scenes of Hitler with Eva Braun, talking calmly to her or apparently teasing her.

"The shots of Eva alone show her to be a really beautiful woman," one officer commented.

The films show Eva dressed nearly always in a blue polka dot skirt, white blouse and red velvet vest, with her long golden hair falling over her forehead.

She is dancing, talking, playing with kittens or children or cavorting on the beaches of the Starnberger See, the Chiem See or the Wolfgang See.

The films show Hitler's favorite in at least six gaily-colored bathing suits, diving, surf-riding, doing gymnastics or climbing trees. They show trim legs, firm muscles and a well-moulded body. In one sequence with the closest members of the Braun family, her sister, Mrs. Gretel Fegelein, bathes blithely in the nude under a mountain waterfall.

Kenneth Loyst Is Acquitted Of Assault Charge

Kingston, Dec. 20. (CP)—Acquitting Kenneth Loyst, Kaladar game warden, of a charge of assault occasioning bodily harm, Thursday, Judge J. C. Reynolds said he could see no reason why Alvin Patterson, of Oso, wounded in the fray that led to the charge against Loyst, should not be prosecuted.

"Patterson," he said, "was ringleader in general fighting that took place at Friwood Lodge dance hall on night of Aug. 17. Of that there is no doubt in my mind. As for the accused, I think he was quite sincere in his attempts to break up the fights but was foolish to use a gun. However, I fail to see where there was any criminal intent on his part and in my opinion the shooting was accidental."

Patterson was shot just below the heart during the second of two free-for-alls inside and outside the dance hall. Loyst admitted the shooting, claiming self defence.

Verdict came when the hearing was resumed after a week's lapse.

MILLERS, KNIGHTS TIED UP AGAIN

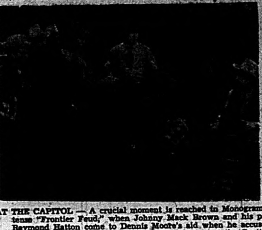
It has happened again—once more leadership in the Northern Division of the United States Hockey League is tied up between Minneapolis Millers and Omaha Knights.

Minneapolis was knotted with the Knights until Wednesday when the Knights took a one-game lead. But the Millers came back last night defeating Fort Worth Rangers 3-0 at Fort Worth thus renewing the deadlock.

Minneapolis gained its victory on a count a period from the sticks of Walt Melynk, Les Gasparni and Earl Bartholome respectively.

It was a thoroughly bad night for the Southern Division. In the only other league game, Houston Skippers bowed 5-3 to St. Paul Saints despite a furious third period rally. The hometeam Skippers hadn't counted once in the first two periods. Then, in quick succession, Arley Carlson, Marcel Dheere, and Moe White crashed the net for the Skippers. But it was too late to do any good. The score stood 4-3 for the Saints and Mitch Pechet added another to clinch it for St. Paul.

Vic Myles, Alex Sandiack, Hal Brown, and Dave Baker were the early St. Paul scorers.



AT THE CAPITOL — A crucial moment is reached in Monogram's tense "Frontier Feud," when Johnny Mack Brown and his pal Raymond Hatton come to Dennis Moore's aid when he accuses Jack Ingram of foul play. The western is now at the Capitol Theatre. On the same program Gene Stratton Porter's best-seller "Girl of the Limberlost," starring Ruth Nelson and Dorinda Clifton.

Toronto, Dec. 20 — (CP)—Annual financial report of the Ontario Progressive Conservative Association did not take long to read to delegates yesterday. The Association started — and ended — the year with $50.79. To make things even more simple, officers said the Association received no communications during the year.

BURNED FINGERS

By Kathleen Norris

Chapter 27

They sat at the long table, and a perspiring man brought them glasses for wine and long loaves of French bread, split and toasted. Then came sardines and salami and olives swiming in oil, and presently enormous tureens of minestrone. Coming in out of the biting cold, they had been shivering and huddled; now everyone was warm and cheerful and the plentiful food seemed delicious and the talk was ont long burst of laughter. Raciotti's windows grew frosted behind their red and green wreathes. Everyone sang, "Santa Lucia" and "Mandalay" and the "Adeste" to the accompaniment of a white-faced black-haired girl.

Jennifer watched the clock. The hands spun about; nobody thought it was worth while to wait for Jim later than ten o'clock Everyone had last Christmas jobs waiting at home.

They wandered up through Chinatown; the girls made last purchases. There was talk of going into the theatre, but Mollie thinking of her babies, told Dan severely that it was too late. The poultry shops were closed behind oiled worn wooden poles, but now and then they heard geese cackling or the valiant crowing of some doomed rooster penned away in the dark. And always they could smell chickens, opium pipes and musk. Joe Evans and a boy named Martin Something took Jennifer home. To her the whole evening was wasted.

The next day was unexpectedly muggy and dim; foghorns droned through the downtown bustle of Christmas shopping; Vogelsang's did a big day's business. Men bought extravagant perfumes for women they had al but forgotten; uncles and fathers selected fur scarfs and carried them away in long boxes after pathetic reiteration of the question, "Think she'll like it, eh? It's what a girl would like, is it?" Miss Wilcox, the new buyer from New York, sold three mink coats, and as Mary Flood had done all the preliminary salesmanship great resentment was expressed in the nonn hour over Miss Wilcox's nerve.

Jennifer went out for a few minutes at one o'clock and walked about among the bright, crowded shops and bought posters and ribbons at the five-and-ten. When she went back she was almost afraid to sak if anyone had come in to see her, if anyone had telephoned. No one had taken any messages for Miss Jennifer.

At five she went home with Mary. They carried the enormous turkey that Mary had won in a raffle. The Flood turkey had been secured days before and was now all trussed and stuffed and waiting in the ice box, but Mary and Jennifer knew more than one family that would welcome the windfall, and during supper they debated as to which widowed, patient mother and fatherless children should be given it.

It was a quiet supper. Old Mrs. Flood was in bed with a cold that threatened pneumonia; Mary was tense with anxiety. She listened to every cough that came from the bedroom, winced as if she suffered it herself. The meal was halfway through when she said suddenly:

"Christmas Eve, and you were going up to Evanses'!"

"That's all right," Jennifer answered serenely. "I telephoned them that your mother was sick. I knew you'd want to go out to church."

"Well, I could have asked Annie McNara to step in." Mary said vexedly. "I'll phone her this minute, and you call Joe Evans and tell him to come get you! I never heard the like."

Jennifer had been as if on wires during this hour of sacrifice. She had feared that Mary, in her anxious preoccupation, would not notice it at all. It was comforting now to be praised, hurried into other clothes, and reminded that if she and Joe would stop and leave the turkey at the O'Bearnes' it would save Mary a hard trip.

Put this way, she had no choice but to accept the program and be whirled away happily in Joe's care. Joe reported to Jennifer and two aunts of his in the car that the whole house was a rat race; nobody'd had any dinner yet; Mollie's Sheila had fallen into the bathtub and had two stitches in her head. Lucky thing Jim was there! No, she was all right, but she'd look like a prize fighter when Dan's folks came in from Sacramento on Christmas afternoon.

"God preserve us from all harm!" said Aunt Minnie.

"Jim—Jim stitched up her head, did he?" This was Jennifer.

"He did that. You'd have thought he was wiping teaspoons. It takes more than that to fuss that lad! 'Here,' he says, 'hold her, Mollie, and, Mrs. Evans, you hang onto her legs, this'll only take a minute but she may jump'."

"She yelled of course?"

"No, she didn't. She seemed kind of dazed. When I left, two of them had beat it off to the drugstore in Jim's car to get her some ice cream and Mollie was reading her 'Little Black Sambo' and Mom was at the door shushing people away. God knows when we'll eat!" Joe said darkly.

Her joyous laugh rang out.

"Oh, we'll eat!" she predicted happily. Jim was there. Nothing could keep her now from seeing Jim. Christmas Eve, going to the Evanses', and with Jim Lippincott there! Jennifer's heart hurt with the joy that crowded it.

Once at the house, she put on a ruffled apron and went straight into the kitchen, thus winning golden opinions from Mike Evans, Mollie's hungry father, waiting for his dinner, and a group of elderly uncles and aunts. Presently Jim was clumsily helping to set the table with his big, spatulate hands.

"Was it thrilling at the hospital last night, Jim? We missed you," Jennifer said, pouring water into glasses.

"Last night? Here, let me do that," he said. "Oh yes, last night. Yes, it was—kind of good. It was Ehrmann telephoned me, you know."

"I think I'll put buttered roll on every plate; it saves time. They're all ravenous... Is he a big man, Jim?"

"It ?" He seemed to bring his attention back to her with a sort of start. "Yep, hep's the top," he said.

"Does he like you?"

"Well, I don't know. He lectured to us twice a week in medical school; he was always nice to me. He's a pretty big man. He's—in my line," Jim, said, hesitating.

"Surgery."

"Yep."

"Would you like to be associated with him, Jim?" She was not quite sure what it meant, but the phrase sounded right and she must somehow hold his interest—or, rather, get it and keep him talking.

"Oh gosh," he said simply. "These go on?"

"The soda crackers? Yes, put them on. Pop says his mother always had them on the table and he likes to see them there. Has he—Dr. Ehrmann—asked you to join him?"

"Oh gosh, no."

"Well, he will," Jennifer predicted calmly. It sounded silly to her and she fancied it sounded silly to Jim, for he made no reply.

"If he did," she pursued, afraid of a pause, "would it mean that you lived here in San Francisco?"

Another start out of abstraction. He did not know she was alive!

"Would it what?"

"Jennifer," said Myra from the doorway, "we're all ready. For heaven's sake let's eat!"

"All right. Dinner!" Jennifer called. "Go tell them, Jim. Say we're all ready."

"You asked me something and I didn't hear you."

"Oh, it wasn't anything. I forget what it was. Oh, I know: it was that if you stayed here, you know, associated with Dr. Ehrmann, would you have to live in San Francisco?"

"Well, I haven't got much chance, really," Jim answered, going on his errand.

Jennifer finished distributing butter knives; looked after him wistfully. Not much encouragement there.

The rest of the evening was confusion, and at midnight mass she did not sit next to him. A whole year since they had sat together on Christmas Eve, and his fingers had gripped hers so firmly, so thrilling. The years were going too fast... she wasn't getting anywhere....

"Could you go to the theatre with me tomorrow night?" he asked most unexpectedly when they were all parting outside the church. Mrs. Flood's sister, Mrs. Craven, with a large brood, was at mass and would take Jennifer home. The Cravens had come into town to see Aunt Maggie because she was ill. They would pile into the shabby car and go back to San Bruno early in the black dark of Christmas morning.

"Tomorrow night? Christmas night?"

"Rather not, Christmas night?"

"Well, I think Mary'd think it was—maybe she wouldn't. But I'll tell you, would you come to dinner, Jim?"

"How about the next night then? One night I have to dine with Bill and Bertha White; I'll do that tomorrow night, and we'll go to the theatre the next night, huh?"

"I'd love it," Jennifer said hesitatingly. "The only thing is, Friday nights Mary likes to go to church, and since her mother is so sick I might have to—but I'll tell you," she broke off in sudden decision, "I'll fix it!"

"You don't have to do it to be nice to me, you know," he said, trying for a light tone

"Oh, I know that!" Her laugh was not quite successful either. "I'm dying to go I've not been to the theatre for months. I took Faddy and Elna once to a matinee."

"I'll bet you have Christmas presents all wrapped up for them."

"Oh, I have, and Betty too. I don't go there often because they're getting on all right," Jennifer said, her earnest blue eyes raised to his under the street lights, "and they make such a fuss that I feel guilty about coming away. But I got Betty a nightgown and I got the girls sweaters from Vogelsang's—that was months ago at our autumn sales—and clips. A little dog clip and a fox clip."

It was discouraging. He was looking down at her, but she knew he was not listening. However— and she was going to the theatre with him for the first time! Any man who was in love with a girl in Pasadena would not ask another girl in San Francisco to go to the theatre with him.

Well, perhaps he might, she reflected, when the long dark drag of the new year began and Vogelsang's was one nervous flutter of women, fussily exchanging gifts. The theatre evening had been strangely disappointing, although the show was good and Jim only too ceticulously eager to have everything right. Nothing momentous had happened; indeed it had been bewilderedly difficult to keep the conversation moving easily and naturally. Jennifer had been uncomfortably aware that the dinner was expensive and the theatre seats were the best. She did not know what his resources were; perhaps he could not afford this outlay and the taxi home.

At the door she had asked him to come in, but he had said no, he had to make an early start in the morning; he was on his way back south.

"If he cared the tiniest bit in the world for you," Jennifer told herself, "a few minutes one way or the other wouldn't make any difference!"

But still he had asked her to the theatre. And it was only a few weeks later that Mollie said quite casually, "I think Jim Lippincott's crazy about you, Jen. Did you ever think he was?"

"I know I'm crazy about him," Jennifer answered calmly. It might sound like a joke or like the exaggeration almost any girl would indulge in when Jim's name was mentioned, or Mollie could take it sesiously if she wanted to, and perhaps pass it along to someone who would in turn indicate something of the sort to Jim; it didn't matter.

Mollie thought he was crazy about her. Jennifer fed her secret dreams on that. Spring came in, and there were lilacs in the back yards of San Jose Avenue, and the days grew treacherously warm. Jim Lippincott was going to spend three July weeks with the Evanses at the lake. Jennifer put in an early plea for an extra vacation week without pay; she bought dark blue slacks and a white sweater, white buckskin shoes, and an alluring set of oriental pajamas—these last for evening wear.

July was a long way ahead when these plans and purchases were made. It was fourteen weeks ahead; Jennifer calculated it almost down to minutes. But meanwhile life was pleasant enough; she was busy daytimes; there were weekend parties and picnics. On more than one warm Saturday night the Evans group went out to the beach and built a campfire and toasted buns and frankfurters.

Any minute might bring news, of course, that Jim Lippincott could not come, or any minute might be the one in which someone said, "You knew Jim's engaged?" But these minutes did not occur, and hot spring weather gave way to summer's fogs and salty winds, and June fled by and the elder Evanses departed for the lake to open the place for the summer.

Then it was a question of "That's a week from Friday, remember, Jennifer?" and of who would drive up with whom. Jennifer telephoned Mollie, almost in tears: "Mollie, I think I'm getting a horrible thing on my chin, and here it is Wednesday!" and Mollie responded wearily, "Sheila's got spots on her stomack—if this is measles I simply give up."

Mollie and the children were going up with Joe, starting early on Friday. Jennifer could not get away until four.

"Oh, all right then," said Mollie. "Jim Lippincott is driving Marg'ret and Michael and the Tinney girl up; they're leaving at five because Ji mhas to have a whole day in town. Is that okay by you?"

"Yes," Jennifer said, beginning to tremble with joy. "That's—that's fine with me."

Ontario Crop Production in '46 Is $232,241,000

Toronto, Dec. 20—(CP) — Ontario's largest crop in history today filled granaries and storage sheds, and Agriculture Minister Kennedy, looking back on a season of bounty, announced the estimated value of this year's farm production stood at $232,241,000—an increase of nearly $1,000,000 over 1945.

Mr. Kennedy revealed that with the new record yield, Ontario produces now approximately one quarter of the nation's crop yield.

Substantial increases in the value of spring wheat, oats, barley, fall rye, mixed grains, peas, dry beans, soy beans, turnips, mangels, fodder corn and potatoes were offset by large declines in hay and clover, alfalfa and sweet clover.

The year's oat crop of 71,776,000 bushels was valued at $38,831,000 as against 51,879,000 bushels with a $31,250,000 value a year ago.

Mixed grain production showed an increase over 1945 while hay and clover declined.

Renfrew Leads Way

The 12 counties in southern Ontario produced 6,659,285 bushels of fall wheat valued at more than $8,000,000. Highest production was recorded in Lambton county where 48,283 acres of land yielded 1,362,752 bushels.

Renfrew county led the way in production of spring wheat with 75,496 bushels. The entire province yielded a spring wheat crop valued at $1,018,000 compared with a value of $777,000 in 1945.

The potato crop was valued at $19,913,000 for 10,764,000 hundredweight. In 1945 7,833,000 hundredweight yielded $19,083,000. More than 120,000 acres were cultivated with potatoes this year—an increase of 4,000 over last year.

Toronto Leafs Bolster N.H.L. Lead With Victory Over Wings; Turk Broda Plays Well in Nets

Looks Unbeatable After His Teammates Give Him Three-Goal Margin

By JACK MITCHELL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

To watch the solid backstopping of an "old guardsman" for the youthful Toronto Maple Leafs, you'd never guess this was the same Walter (Turk) Broda who, with tongue probing the vacancy left by six departed teeth, announced his retirement from National Hockey League play last January.

The retirement was announced in jolly old Brighton, England, after Broda lost the teeth in an Amsterdam army match and he rejected it shortly after being repatriated a month later. The fact that Turk changed his mind may be the main reason why the flying Leafs are on top of the N.H.L. today.

The forces of youth were in full motion last night as the Leafs downed Detroit Red Wings 3-1, in Toronto to widen their lead over the second-place Montreal Canadiens but Broda was the man who looked after the home fires.

Broda Unbeatable

Oldest goaler in the N.H.L. in point of service, the Turk looked unbeatable in kicking out just about everything the fourth-place Wings had to offer. It wasn't until 5.05 of the final period that Detroit managed to pierce his armour, big Jack Stewart firing the goal on a pass from Roy Conacher.

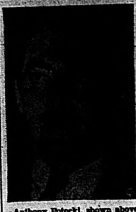
By that time the Leafs had piled up a comfortable lead on two goals in the opening period and another in the second. It was the younger members of the rookie-studded Leafs who took care of the scoring, defenceman Gus Mortson, left winger Joe Klukay and forward Bud Poile tallying in that order.

Another rookie helped provide the fireworks for the Toronto crowd of 12,854. It was Howie Meeker, the little winger from Stratford, who mixed it up with Billy Taylor, a former Leafian, in a fight that started on the ice, continued in the penalty box and was stopped only by intervention of two husky policemen.

Well in Fight

While all this was going on up front, Broda tended his chores carefully to keep well in the fight for the goaltender's Vezina trophy with his average of 55 goals scored against in 23 games. Only Bill Durnan of Montreal Canadiens sports a better record, with 50 scored on him in 22 matches.

SUES FOR $200,000



Anthony Potocki, shown above, former member of the Polish nobility, asks $200,000 from his mother-in-law, Mrs. Flossia M. Griffiths, in a suit filed in circuit court, Chicago. He charges that Mrs. Griffiths alienated the affections of his 34-year-old wife and their child. Potocki eloped with Heiress Gloria Griffiths of Chicago, 11 years ago.

Broda, who won the Toronto netminding job from George Hainsworth, in the 1936-37 season became the only Leafian to win the trophy when he finished the 1940-41 season with the best-scored-on average.

A 32-year-old native of Brandon, Man., Turk cuts a chunkier figure in the nets than when he first broke in from the junior Winnipeg Monarchs. The lights gleam through his thinning blond hair. But his eyes must be twice as keen, the way he handles those long shots that used to baffle him occasionally in his earlier years.

Rebuilt Team in Front

Back too late last season after nearly three years in the army to prevent the Leafs from playoff elimination, Broda started this season with a rebuilt team in front of him. Sometimes the youngsters forget about defence in the heat of puck chasing, so his leading total of three shutouts takes on even more lustre.

Offence and defence dovetailed perfectly last night, however, as the Leafs, taking part in the only scheduled match, stole three points ahead of the Canadiens. The loss left Detroit, who have gained only three ties in their last 10 matches, deadlocked for fourth with New York Rangers.

It will be weekend before the jockeying for positions resumes. In a five-game card, Canadiens take on the third-place Boston Bruins at Montreal Saturday night and go on to Detroit Sunday. The Leafs play Rangers at New York after a home stand against Chicago. The third Sunday night game matches Boston with the Black Hawks at Chicago.

CROP FAIRLY GOOD

Delhi, Dec. 20 — (CP) — This year's crop of cigar leaf — first time this type of tobacco has been grown in the district — returned approximately $169,000 to growers, according to tobacco company officials. The type usually produces from 1,100 to 1,200 pounds per acre. The 1946 crop was described as "fairly good."

SPORTS BACK WITH A BANG IN OLD LAND

Games Revived on Pre-War Basis But Britons See Many Big Titles Go to Foreign Competitors

London (CP)—Britain took the sports bit between its teeth, raced through 1946 kicking up unprecedented attendance and betting figures, but crossed into 1947 with the country's watchword — "For Export Only"—echoing even in the trophy rooms. Foreign competitors took away many of the years' plum sports awards.

After six wartime years of an almost-starving sports diet, the fun-loving Briton demanded—and got—his recreation on a colossal scale.

Big-time soccer and first-class county cricket were revived on a pre-war basis; horses and dogs drew millions; golf fiends followed "name" players up and down the country, almost crowding them off the green; Wimbledon's electric scoreboard spelled out the names of tennis experts from France to Australia; boxing produced a British heavyweight "white hope"; and Canadian hockey players came over to revive the ice game.

Motorcycle speedway racing, roller-skating and various other attractions crowded the rationed newspapers for space on the sports pages. The Englishman led with his chin for any sport, and promoters were only too happy to oblige.

The biggest blows to Britain's playing-field prestige were suffered on the rich green turf of race tracks, golf courses and at Wimbledon. Reasons advanced were wartime dislocation of sport and the austerity diet of the British people.

Here is a resume of the post-war sports revival:

Golf—Slammin' Sam Snead of the United States won the British open and James Bruen of Cork, Eire, won the amateur. Bobby Locke of South Africa copped the Harry Vardon trophy for the best average scores during the summer and also won three major tournaments.

Tennis—The United States Wightman Cup team breezed through to an almost-farcial victory over Britain's hopes without losing a set. Yvon Petra of France won the Wimbledon men's singles and all other titles were taken by "outsiders." British players were woefully weak.

Horse-racing—British-bred Airborne won the Derby but the horse of the year was Souverain, French Grand Prix and St. Leger winner. The French colt also won the rich King George VI Stakes for three-year-olds, leaving Airborne a well-beaten third behind Bright News, the Irish Derby winner.

French horses won more than $150,000 for their owners in stakes, winning 22 races in about three months.

Tote figures for 1946, it is estimated, will total more than £14,000,000 ($56,000,000), exceeding the previous record for 1938 by £5,000,000. The figure is all the more remarkable when it is considered many tracks were still requisitioned by the government.

Soccer—Derby County won the Football Association Cup before 100,000 fans at Wembley Stadium. The English League pre-war setup of four 22-team leagues was revived and Saturday-afternoon attendances were estimated at 1,000,000. Player transfer prices of between £5,000 ($20,000) and £13,000 were common.

Cricket—County clubs started the season with almost-empty coffers, very little equipment, a determination to make the game "brighter"—and a prayer. Yorkshire, 1939 champions, retained the title and many teams finished with their financial status in bold black figures. An Indian Test team toured the country, played three matches against an English side and left with two drawn games, due mainly to weather conditions, and a loss. England sent a strong rungetting team to Australia, but it was decisively beaten at Brisbane in the first of five tests to be played during the summer season "down under".

Boxing—Heavyweight Champion Bruce Woodcock sent the country's ring stock to great heights with victories over Gus Lesnevich, American lightweight, and a few European battlers. Fight fans, who jam-packed London's Harringay Arena for all Jack Solomons' promotions, talked of a Joe Louis-Woodcock battle "in a year or so."

Greyhound racing—The country's 104 tracks, allowed by law to run meetings twice-weekly, draw enormous crowds. It is estimated that the tote machines "take" is nearly £100,000,000 annually.

Speedway racing— Crowds of 50,000 to 85,000 attended meetings during the summer and fall and experts predict a mushrooming future for the sport in 1947.

Hockey—Scotland's seven-team league is made up entirely of young Canadian players while the game in England, always popular since introduction of the game before the war, has a tremendous appeal, with "House Full" signs at all games in London and the provinces.

Even the Boat Race was caught up in the surging crowd-interest. Oxford defeated Cambridge easily and the crowd lining the banks was estimated at a record 100,000. Peter Madconnell of Toronto was in the Cambridge crew.

RAY ROBINSON LIKELY TO BE CROWNED CHAMP

Meets Tommy Bell in New York for Welterweight Title of World

New York, Dec. 20 — (AP) — Sugar Ray Robinson, the "uncrowned champion," gets his delayed chance to make it official tonight when he takes on Tommy Bell of Youngstown, Ohio, with the welterweight title hanging in the balance.

After five weary years of waiting for a shot at the 147-pound crown, the Harlem sugar man is a prohibitive 1 to 4 favorite to whip Bell and earn recognition by both the New York Commission and the National Boxing Association after their 15-round Madison Square Garden bout.

Partly because they figure Robinson deserves a title chance and partly because they know Bell as a capable workman who never has been knocked out, the fans are expected to turn out 15,000 strong for a $90,000 gate.

Beaten only once in his career of 75 fights, and then by middleweight Jake Lamotta, Robinson had been matched with Marty Servo for a championship scramble before the Schenectady welter abdicated his throne because of a sore nose. Bell finally was selected as a logical foe and all agreed to recognize the winner as the new king.

The welters met before, in January of 1945, with Robinson earning a decision on his boxing finesse and class. In his last outing, Sugar Ray got off the floor to stop Artie Levine in Cleveland. Bell lost two of six 1946 fights, both to middleweights, Cecil Hudson and Lamotta. The 23-year-old Negro boy has been beaten 10 times in his career.

Although Robinson has won his last 15 fights and knocked out 11 of his opponents, the rugged Bell is given a good chance of lasting the the route. The Youngstown scrapper has a good knockout punch but they're betting Sugar Ray doesn't stand around long enough to get hit.

BRITAIN'S JET-WING NO. 1 SECRETS ON SHOW

Some of the secrets of Britain's first jet-propelled Flying Wing, the Armstrong - Whitworth AW 52, have been shown at Coventry. This new type — all wings except for wing-tip rudders, is practically finished and will soon be tested. Ninety feet from wing-tip to wing-tip, AW 52 has been built for development work. Two Rolls-Royce engines are built into the wing which has an entirely clean contour, free from rivets, etc., which add to the "drag."

300 GUERILLAS KILLED

Athens, Dec. 20 — (AP) — An official announcement today said 300 guerillas had been killed, 300 more wounded and an additional 500 taken prisoner in the last two weeks in northern Greece.

Military sources said 40 members of one guerilla band were killed two days ago in an eight-hour battle which included hand-to-hand fighting during mopping-up operations at the village of Deskate, in the Khasia mountains between Kozane and Trikkala.

Russian Ultimatum Forces U.S. Navy Ship to Leave Port

Lying at Dairen And Only Given 20 Mins. to Leave

By WILLIAM H. NEWTON

(Representing the Combined World Press)

Dairen, Manchuria, Dec. 23 — (AP) — An unarmed United States Navy ship pulled out of the port of Dairen Friday afternoon after receiving a verbal ultimatum from Russian military officials to the effect that "unless you leave within 20 minutes we will not be responsible for the consequences."

(This dispatch was delayed at its source since Friday.)

Previously, the Russian military commander in charge of the city had refused to permit an American businessman with full clearance from U. S. authorities to disembark. Also denied permission to land were two American newspapermen, representing the combined world press.

(Russian troops have occupied Dairen since the Japanese surrender. Although the Chinese-Russian Treaty of 1945 called for its designation as a free port under Chinese administration, Soviet forces still are in control of the city.

No Immediate Comment

(In Washington, the State Department said it had received no report of the "verbal ultimatum" and would have no immediate comment.)

The vessel was on a second routine courier mission to Dairen carrying diplomatic mail and supplies to the U. S. Consulate there.

In view of the fact that the details of the first trip had been revealed to the press, two correspondents were permitted to take passage on this trip by Admiral Charles M. Cooke, commander of the 7th Fleet, in order to be present in event their going ashore would meet with the approval of local authorities. Admiral Cooke had ruled that no photographs could be made without the consent of the local officials.

Requested Permission

The ship arrived at Dairen Dec. 18, and requested permission to remain in port for 48 hours. This was accepted without comment by the Soviet authorities who met the ship at anchorage.

The ship remained in the harbor two additional hours while U. S. Consul General H. Merrill Benninghoff attempted a last-minute appeal to the Soviet military authorities to permit an American businessman, Jesse L. Poole, Atlanta, Ga., representing the Standard Vacuum Oil Co., to go ashore. It was at this point that the Soviet ultimatum was delivered.

The Soviets ordered the ship to leave despite the fact that neither the diplomatic courier nor the commanding officer of the ship were aboard. They were at the American Consulate awaiting results of Consul General Benninghoff's final appeal to the Soviet commander. They arrived on board only at the very moment of the ship's departure.

The Russian military commander of the city, Maj.-Gen. V. U. Korzhanoff, refused to see the American Consul General, however, and the ultimatum was delivered to the ship by one of his military aides.

When the Consul called at the Soviet commander's home to appeal from the decision banning the three Americans from Dairen, he was left standing in the bitterly cold street while a sentry carried his request inside. After some time, he was told that Gen. Korzhanoff was not available.

Benninghoff had previously called on the Russian Consul General, S. N. Petrov, to inquire why American citizens were not allowed ashore. Petrov replied that the whole matter was in the hands of Soviet military authorities. He said authorization for such entries must come from Moscow.

17 TONS POULTRY SOLD

Owen Sound, Dec. 23 — (CP) — One of the largest retail Christmas markets ever recorded here was held Saturday morning. One of the biggest items was the sale of 17 tons of poultry, described by a Federal poultry inspector as "very good" in quality.

SHOOTS 21 FOXES

Wiarton, Dec. 23 — (CP) — In the past six weeks 55 applications for fox-bounty money have been received in nearby Albermarle township, the largest individual bag being that of James Hardiman with 21 foxes.

Bevin Optimistic Over Growing Harmony Between Big Powers

London, Dec. 23 — (AP)—Foreign Secretary Bevin, Britain's treaty negotiator and part-time United Nations spokesman, is optimistic over the chances for "friendship and co-operation between great powers," which he terms "the surest basis on which to build peace."

"I believe we have entered the first stage of establishing concord and harmony between great powers," he told the people in a radio speech last night, adding later: "Friendship and co-operation between great powers is the surest basis on which to build peace for all time." But he warned that peace-making would take several years.

The 65-year-old Labor government diplomat in his 20-minute BBC address reported on the Big Four Foreign Ministers' treaty-making and the United Nations General Assembly session in New York, from which he returned last Thursday, and laid down his aims for the foreign ministers' next meeting in Moscow March 10.

Bevin declared that "the war left two great powers preponderant — the United States of America and Soviet Russia," with Great Britain lying "midway in geography and way of life."

Willing to Play Part

He said that the United States "has shown a willingness to play her part to the full" in peace machinery and expressed belief that Russia "fully realized" at New York "that there was a great desire for complete understanding, and that there is throughout the world a readiness to co-operate with her and see her develop in her own way, with the recognition that others equally have a right to their own way of life."

In outlining Britain's policy, he answered critics within his own party who, during his absence, pushed the government to a foreign-policy confidence vote, which it won.

To the criticism that that policy was too close to that of United States and that British relations with Russia were not close enough, he said that Britain had "a mind and purpose" of her own, did not "tie herself to anybody" except through the U. N. Charter and held out "the hand of friendship and co-operation to all."

Last POW Leave Canada Meekly In Contrast to Former Arrogance

By JACK BRAYLEY

Halifax, Dec. 23 —(CP)— They trooped on to the ship serious-eyed, meekly obedient and without spirit, five and six years older and wiser. They were the last 2,000 of Canada's 35,000 prisoners of war and a few shed a tear as the transport Samaria stood out to sea yesterday. Hitler's supermen, who had swaggered and snarled and threatened when they arrived here in 1940, were on a final stage of their journey home.

Most of them showed their disillusionment as they rejectedly toiled up the steep gangplank bearing all their worldly goods on their backs. None offered resistance by word or action as a sharp-spoken Canadian Army sergeant kept them moving.

Before them was a bleak and uncertain future that included eventual return to the Germany they had fought so fiercely to make all-conquering — a country torn and battered by war and its aftermath.

Behind them was the clean and reasonable land of Canada, successful in war and facing new and greater opportunities and responsibilities.

There was nothing cheerful about this departure. A driving rain beat down and wetted them through. Their field-gray greatcoats — salvaged from the days

DEATH TOLL RISES TO 2,206 DEAD, MISSING, INJURED

Relief Workers Reach More Isolated Areas Of Quake-Devastated Japan

By TOM LAMBERT

Tokyo, Dec. 23 (AP) — With the toll of dead calculated as high as 1,125 so far, thousands of wretched, shivering Japanese tonight huddled around fires near the waterlogged wreckage of their homes destroyed by the earthquake and tidal waves early Saturday.

The Home Ministry listed 1,026 dead, with reports still coming in from previously isolated areas in southern Shikoku Island and the Wakayama Peninsula. Kyodo News Agency reported its count at 1,125 killed. Kyodo listed 2,700 killed, missing and injured.

A bitter cold wind blew steadily across Japan from the Manchurian plains, adding to the miserable discomfort of Japanese who lost their homes and their relatives or friends in the tragic dawn Saturday.

The homeless—tens of thousands—were living under railroad trestles, in forests and along the beaches, stoking little fires against the biting winter weather, as relief crews sought to deliver emergency food, clothing and medical supplies

The Home Ministry listed 1,026 as dead, 145 as missing and 1,035 injured, and reported that well over 100,000 persons were made homeless in one of the world's worst natural disasters.

American Army pilots who flew over Shikoku said the Kochi area appeared to be the worst damaged — considerably harder hit than Wakayama Peninsula, of Southern Honshu, which also was battered by six tidal waves.

Landslides blocked Shikoku Island rail lines. The British Army command at Kure also reported three landslides near Okayama, on Honshu, had blocked the main railway from Kure to Tokyo, but said the route would be restored this afternoon.

Despite Japanese reports on widespread destruction on Wakayama Peninsula Associated Press correspondent Tom Lambert was unable to see extensive damage in that sector when he flew over it at a low altitude yesterday.

Japan's home ministry said peace and order are being maintained in all stricken districts from which relief missions have been able to report.

Send Eighty Doctors

Eighty Japanese doctors went by boat to Wakayama and other districts. The home ministry also sent 400,000 one-meal ration units, varying from hardtack to preserved sea food and canned goods.

American military government units also were rushing the distribution of clothing and foods, most of which had been retained from former Japanese military stocks for just such an emergency. American Red Cross observers were in the field, but its officials said the Red Cross has not yet begun distributing relief.

The Japanese government established a special bureau to coordinate all relief work, and government investigators already have been sent to isolated districts.

The Tokyo press said the government would be able to use its special reserve funds for relief, if a prospective special appropriation is delayed.

British reports said relief work was well in hand in Shikoku's Kochi area, but that only a seven-day supply of rice remained in Western Kochi.

Customs Wall Set Up By France Between Saar Area and Germany

Paris, Dec. 23 — (Reuters) — The Foreign Office announced today that France has set up a customs barrier between the Saar territory and the rest of Germany.

(Lt.-Gen. Joseph Pierre Koenig, French military governor, placed 1,200 customs officials on the boundaries of the rich coal region Sunday, a Berlin dispatch said.)

The announcement said the barrier will be manned by 1,200 customs officials whose chief task will be to prevent imported foodstuffs intended for the Saar population from entering Germany.

The French move, foreshadowed in the French press several days ago, is regarded here as the first step toward economic union of the Saar with France.

(In Berlin, Lt.-Gen. Lucius D. Clay, deputy United States military governor, expressed annoyance at what he called the "entirely unilateral action" of the French government. Gen. Clay said the matter had not been presented to the Allied Control Council.)

Paris observers presumed the French move would be approved by the Foreign Ministers' Council during its forthcoming Moscow talks on the German peace treaty.

The Big Four already have indicated they favored such a development.

London, Dec. 23 — (AP) — A foreign office spokesman today described the French action in placing 1,200 customs men on the Saar frontier as "an anti-black market operation."

The foreign office spokesman said Maurice Couve de Murville, French delegate to the Foreign Ministers Council in New York, informed his colleagues that the French government felt it necessary to counter currency manipulations and black market operators in the Saar by establishing a customs frontier between that region and the rest of Germany.

The spokesman said Couve de Murville, disclosing the French intention in New York, requested that the proposed strip be kept secret so manipulators would not be warned. He said there had been no objections from Great Britain or "from any other quarter."

The spokesman said Great Britain supported the economic intégration of the Saar with France, although the government view was that it would be preferable for such integration to come as a result of a Foreign Ministers' Council decision.

FATHER CASTING ABOUT FOR NAMES, HOME FOR QUADS

Three Boys and Girl Born to British War Bride at Baltimore, Md.

Baltimore, Dec. 23 — (AP) — Charles Henn, Jr., was casting about today for names and a house big enough for a family suddenly increased to seven by the birth of quadruplets — three boys and a girl — to the British girl he married during the war.

The babies were placed immediately after birth yesterday in individual oxygenated incubators as a precaution, although Dr. Thomas J. Bowyer, who delivered them, said the quads' chances of survival were "very, very good."

The 28-year-old mother also is in "good condition" after the delivery which was performed without anesthetic in 55 minutes in hospital.

The couple, who have another son, Johnny, about 15 months old, married in England after Henn, a sergeant, met Mrs. Henn, the former Dorothy Geast who was serving in the auxiliary territorial service.

Mother Quite Calm

Mrs. Henn was one of the calmest persons in the hospital and after the delivery asked for a "British cup of tea" before taking a sedative.

The quads were not weighed, but Dr. William H. Sawyers, who assisted at the delivery, estimated they were "approximately half normal size, or about four pounds apiece."

Henn, who didn't get his first look at his new offspring until three hours after their birth, said he and his wife had picked no names, although they were informed by x-rays last November that quadruplets were on the way.

Didn't Tempt Fate

"We didn't want to tempt fate," he said. "Now that they are all here and living we'll give them names. You know, we'll have a lot more to thing about than names, too .This is sure a case of four of a kind meaning a full house."

The 28-year-old bookbinder was referring to his housing problem. At present, he and his wife and their son are living with his parents, three of his brothers and a sister.

Before x-rays indicated the multiple births the couple, married in England on Jan. 1, 1945, had purchased furniture for three rooms "to set up our own house."

Dr. George Corner, director of the Department of Embryology of the Carnegie Institution of Washington, D.C., said after specimen examinations at Johns Hopkins Medical School the second and fourth Henn babies were identical twins.

Quadruplets are born on an average of once in 658,963 deliveries. The Henn quads were believed to be the 11th living group born in the United States.

RAIN AND MORE RAIN IS NEEDED AROUND MONCTON

City Suffering From Most Serious Water and Power Shortage in Its History

Moncton, N.B., Dec. 23. (CP) —The rest of Canada may be hoping for a White Christmas—but in Moncton, rain and more rain is what the people want.

They got just that during the week-end, and Monctonians had pails and other containers outside to catch their private share of almost two inches of rainfall.

But stringent conservation measures still prevail in the city, suffering from one of the most serious water and power shortages in its history. Officials said the heavy rain had not completely abolished the shortage but merely lessened it.

Citizens are still getting along with fewer baths. Hotel guests are continually reminded to use less water and restaurants serve the precious liquid only on request.

To take a bath in Moncton these days requires no small degree of planning. The appointed hour must be one which does not conflict with periods when the pumping system is shut down. Then an infinite amount of patience is required when one waits for the thin trickle of rapidly cooling hot water to fill the tub.

Housewives have been forced to re-arrange their work schedules and the traditional Monday washday has become a memory for many.

Hardest hit are persons living above ground floor level. They find only a thin trickle coming from their taps when the pressure is reduced during the afternoon and evening and water system works only on gravity flow.

But while hope for normal water supply in Moncton lies in waiting for the Spring thaw, the rest of the Maritimes is perking up under an unusually heavy December rainfall.

In Nova Scotia provincial power officials are, firm in their conviction that the situation has returned to normal after the prolonged Autumn dry spell.

GREAT DEMAND

Kingston, Dec. 23 — (CP) — W. E. Breckon, past president of the Ontario Crop Improvement Association who recently returned from a trip through England, Scotland and Denmark, said here yesterday that there is a great demand in England for Canadian holstein cattle as this type of dairy cattle can produce 2,000 lbs. more milk per year than the English cow.

PETERBORO NURSE DIES

Toronto, Dec. 23 (CP). — Mrs. Lillian Tobin of Peterboro died yesterday at Christie Street Hospital. She was a nurse at the Peterboro War Veterans Hospital which burned recently and an illness was aggravated by injuries and shock she suffered at the time.

TRUMAN WORKS ON THREE LETTERS TO NEW CONGRESS

State of the Union, Annual Budget And Committee Report Will Be Dealt With

By CYLDE BLACKBURN

Washington, Dec. 23, (CP)—President Truman is spending his pre-Christmas hours writing letters, and they are not to Santa Claus.

He is working on three separate messages to the new Congress which meets Jan. 3 and expects to be busy on them right up to the moment of delivery, probably starting in the week of January 6.

The President will first deliver a message on "The State of the Union", describing how the country has been getting along, what it needs most to improve conditions, and telling Congress in general what he would like to do in 1947.

This message corresponds closely to the "Speech from the Throne" which is read by the Governor-General at the opening of Canada's Parliament.

A few days later he will send Congress his annual budget message outlining the administration's financial needs in the fiscal year beginning next July 1, and telling the legislators how the current year's budget stands.

He is expected to ask for around $37,000,000,000 for the next fiscal year and to report a deficit in the budgeting for the current year.

Lastly he will present the report of his economic advisory committee, which has already been published, and probably add his own ideas on how Congress can legislate to ensure full employment.

For the first time in 14 years these messages will go from a Democratic Administration to a Congress in which both Senate and House are dominated by Republicans, the result of last November's Congressional elections.

This apparently does not disturb the President at all. As a matter of fact it would almost seem that he relished the situation, and with some reason.

The Democratic Congress of his first year in office was none too friendly at any time and often was downright unfriendly.

If the President submits legislative proposals that are well-reasoned and practical the whole country will know it and the Republican majority will have to take the responsibility if his recommendations are ignored.

If Congress initiates legislation of its own that the President does not like or does not believe can be successfully administered, he can veto it.

If Congress, as it threatens to do, takes away the President's remaining extraordinary war powers, it will only take upon its cumbersome self the necessity of quick action if fresh emergencies arise, and relieve the President of making decisions which are often difficult and unpopular.

Provincial Police to Deal Sternly With Motorists Mixing Liquor and Gas

(By The Canadian Press)

Ontario police departments will not be breathing a spirit of brotherly love toward motorists who breathe the fumes of alcohol during the Christmas season. From Windsor in the south to Sault Ste. Marie in the north, a survey shows precautionary steps will be taken to deal sternly with offenders who mix liquor and gasoline.

A service to provide sober drivers who will operate the automobiles of inebriates has been launched in Sault Ste. Marie by Police Chief I. L. Robertson.

No such patronizing attitude will be found in London, Windsor, Oshawa and Kingston, where police report extra details will be assigned to watch for offenders. No leniency will be shown.

Chatham police say they will be "all-out" against drunken drivers, but in St. Catharines, Stratford and Kitchener — centres where few accidents have marred the holiday season — police expect little trouble.

Toronto's vigorous traffic inspector, C. J. Lytle, is apprehensive about the day before Christmas as a menace to sobriety. He fears the increase in the liquor ration will lead to many celebrations in offices beginning early Tuesday, occasions minimized during leaner rationing.

"I cannot too strongly urge motorists who know on Tuesday morning they will be drinking before evening, to leave their cars at home," he said.

Toronto police have been instructed to seize keys of any driver who in their opinion is unfit to get behind the wheel. Keys will be returned next day and cars placed in a police garage.

A move on the part of Ontario's liquor authorities to stop the sale of beer at 6:30 Christmas Eve is hailed by police as a helpful step toward an accident-free Christmas. Clubs will not be restricted by the edict.

A white Christmas in traditional style is forecast by weather authorities and with it will come additional driving hazards. While no extreme cold is anticipated, driving conditions will be "touchy." Highway department officials have their staffs in action to minimize driving dangers and sanding is in progress throughout Southern Ontario.

The warning of police chiefs to those wishing to imbibe is to leave their vehicles at home and take a taxi. In most Ontario towns, sufficient cab service is available to those wishing to celebrate by the gallon—or the pint.

Mother Attempts Rescue of Family, Is Badly Burned

Old RCAF Barracks, Used As Vets' Homes, Destroyed

Ottawa, Dec. 23 —(CP)— Four children, ranging in age from four months to six years, were burned to death today while their mother and others tried to reach them through flames which destroyed a former air force barracks, converted into homes for veterans and their families.

The dead were the children of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Sevigny who were among the 200 families moved into barracks at nearby Rockcliffe airport in a city-sponsored veterans housing movement.

The children were Michael, four months; Louise, three; Andre, four, and Jean, six.

The fire was believed to have started in the Sevigny apartment when a Christmas tree touched a nearby grill and suddenly broke into flames. Mr. Sevigny had already left for work.

William Conroy, a member of the seven families living in the two-storey building, said he was awakened by cries of "save my children."

Driven Back by Flames, Smoke.

"I rushed my daughter-in-law (Mrs. William Conroy, Jr.) and her five children out-of-doors in their night clothes and then I went back to the Sevigny apartment," said Conroy.

"I opened the door but the flames and smoke were so bad that I could not go in at all. I could not see or hear anything in the apartment.

"I rushed outside thinking that I might be able to get in through the window. When I got outside Mrs. Sevigny was there. She had jumped through the window, I guess, and she was trying to get back in, but two airmen were holding her back. She was terribly burned."

Mr. Conroy said it was about 8:10 a.m., E.S.T., when he heard the first alarm. He believed it was 10 minutes later when the firemen arrived and that everyone was so excited they forgot at first to sound the alarm which hung on a power pole not more than 10 feet away from the building.

The wooden asbestos-shingled building was a mass of flames by the time firemen arrived, but they prevented fire from spreading to other barracks.

Alarm Spread Through Building

Mr. Conroy said that while he was trying to save the Sevigny children his daughter-in-law spread the alarm through the rest of the building. He believed that two of the families were away at the time and likely did not know their temporary home had been destroyed

Furniture from a nearby barracks was piled on a lawn nearby. While firemen pumped water on the building a youngster pounded heavily away on a piano that was amongst the furniture on the lawn.

24 Cars Derailed At Lansdowne; Wheat is Dumped

Lansdowne, Dec. 23 (Special.) —Twenty-four freight cars, 10 of them containing 400 tons of wheat, were derailed in a spectacular accident here Sunday morning when the running journal on the car immediately behind the engine broke as the train was speeding through Lansdowne. No one was injured. Twelve cars are a total loss. The other 12 remained upright but off the track after the derailment.

Two cars, rolling end over end, tore into the coal sheds owned by Fred McConnell and levelled the frame walls and roof. The first car left the rails at the main crossing in the village and tore up more than 600 feet of track from the crossing to the C.N.R. station.

Emergency gangs from both Belleville and Montreal were rushed to the scene and by 6:30 p.m. they had completed more than 600 feet of temporary track to the north of the main line. Longest delay for any passenger train was one hour and thirty minutes.

Nightmare to Workers

Spilled wheat is the nightmare of railwaymen. It is considered the hardest material to move. The 400 tons of wheat from the 10 wrecked cars had to be shovelled off the rails and right-of-way, a long, tedious task. The decision to lay a temporary track was made when it was realized that rail traffic would be held up many hours unless quick action was taken. The emergency track was ready in time to take two passenger trains. Other eastbound trains used the detour. There was also rerouting at Napanee and Coteau for eastbound and westbound trans, respectively.

The Moutreal-Toronto passenger train which is scheduled to pass Lansdowne shortly before 1 p.m. was routed via Coteau, and local trains were made up along the St. Lawrence towns and cities to make connections both at Coteau and Napanee.

Had the accident occurred on the north instead of the south track, much more serious damage would have resulted, possibly some loss of life, as several Lansdowne business houses and residences are situated near the north track. To the south, with the exception of the McConnell coal sheds, other buildings are at least 100 feet away from the tracks.

The derailed cars were piled up in a 300-foot space. Some of the cars rested across the east and westbound tracks, while others were on their sides on the south side of the westbound rails. Two hundred workmen were pressed into the emergency job.

Weather Synopsis

Toronto, Dec. 23 (CP).—Synopsis: A southerly flow is developing this morning over Ontario and will bring mild air into all the forecast regions with afternoon temperatures near the 40 mark. Cooler air overlies the western continent and it has moved eastward as far as Lakes Superior and Michigan. A storm centre on its leading edge in Northern Ontario is causing a large snow area with occasional freezing drizzle. This snow extends into the southern portion of the Kirkland Lake region. It is expected to move southeastward and pass just north of the southern forecase regions. By Tuesday morning the cool air will cover all of Ontario dropping temperatures to near normal again.

MOTORISTS WARNED TO USE CAUTION

With streets in a slippery condition as the result of the fall of snow over the weekend, Police Chief Walter Probert today urged that motorists use extreme caution that the possibility of traffic accidents over the holiday might be avoided.

"Everyone is in a hurry doing their last minute Christmas shopping and this fact goes to increase the possibility of accidents on our streets," warned the police chief as he urged an extra degree of caution on the part of motorists and pedestrians alike.

FOUR CALLS ANSWERED BY FIRE DEPARTMENT

Although four calls were answered by the local fire department over the weekend, all trouble was of minor nature with damage being reported in only one instance.

Early afternoon on Sunday the department was called to 144 Bleecker Ave., where a bed mattress was reported ablaze. Damage of approximately $150 to room and furnishings was reported by the department.

The three other alarms answered included a call to the rear of Modern Cleaners on Saturday to extinguish a bonfire; and to 98 Chatham Street and 44 Ridley Ave., where over-heated stove-pipes were the trouble.

POSTAL SERVICE VERY RESTRICTED CHRISTMAS DAY

Sorel By-election Being Held Today

Sorel, Que., Dec. 23 (CP). — Over snow-covered roads voters of the federal riding of Richelieu-Vercheres went to the polls today to elect a new representative in the House of Commons.

The candidates:

Gerard Cournoyer, Liberal, 34-year-old law partner of the late J. P. A. Cardin, who represented this St. Lawrence River riding 40 miles northeast of Montreal for 35 years, an independent in the last election but a former Liberal cabinet minister.

Etienne Duhamel, Progressive Conservative, an inspector of the Caisse Populaire (People's Savings Banks).

Roland Corbeil, Union des Electeurs (Social Credit). His platform calls for a $20 monthly dividend for all.

All parties wound up their campaigns Sunday. For the Liberal, External Affairs Minister St. Laurent came down from Ottawa with three other Quebec federal ministers to predict that if elected Mr. Cournoyer would be in the cabinet before many years have passed.

Mr. Duhamel held his final meeting in Varennes, emphasizing his stand in defence of provincial rights. He accused Ottawa of allowing Communists in the civil service and of interning the Mayor of Montreal during the war while Tim Buck, Labor Progressive leader, went free.

The Social Credit candidate addressed a gathering of 1,000 in this industrial city, where his chief strength is believed to lie.

In the 1945 general election Mr. Cardin polled a majority of 7,850 over Progressive Conservative and Social Credit candidates, carrying every poll in the riding.

Polls will open at 8 a.m. and the 25,703 eligible voters will have until 6 p.m. to cast their ballots.

Factory Worker Held Without Bail After Abduction

Dixon, Ill., Dec. 23 —(AP)— A 27-year-old factory worker was held without charge today in the five-hour abduction of an attractive 40-year-old mother of three children, who was released unharmed at a farmhouse five miles from her home.

Sheriff Gilbert Finch said that Frank L. Sickles, of Wyoming, Ill., had related orally that he forced Mrs. Della Stackhouse, a physician's wife, to leave her Dixon home with him after he was frightened in an attempted robbery yesterday.

The Sheriff said Sickles led the woman aimlessly through the countryside after tying with a clothes line two of the Stackhouse children, Lynda, nine, and Dianne, seven, and leaving them in a closet of the home.

The children were released when an older brother returned home, found them and told police his mother was missing. Police gave this account:

Sickles picked the home of Dr. Stirling Stackhouse at random from a telephone directory as a likely prospect for robbery, and gained entrance by posing as a newspaper reporter.

Once inside he revealed a pistol and said he wanted money. He tied the woman's wrists with clothes line and put adhesive tape on her mouth, and trussed up the two children on their arrival home from school.

Sickles became frightened when the telephone rang and ordered Mrs. Stackhouse to leave with him. After fleeing through fields and brush and over fences, he released Mrs. Stackhouse at a farmhouse from where she called her home.

Authorities arrived and seized Sickles.

Mrs. Stackhouse suffered only from shock and exhaustion.

LAST P.O.W.

they had moved in terrible mass to crush most of Europe — grew sodden and heavy. And the Germans hunched their shoulders in the icy wind. Their teeth chattered as they shuffled past the identification desk.

Here they were given a final search and scrutiny. The big and perhaps embarrasing tag, dangling from a string around their necks, was checked, and so was the big red POW patch on their backs. They were marked and defeated men.

There were no complaints, not even a mild grunt of protest as they were sharply ordered to shoulder their packs for the last walk on to the ship.

Almost at the tail end of the long wet and trudging company was a medium-sized, blond corporal. The neat canvass duffle bags on his shoulders proclaimed in heavy German lettering that he was Heinrich Braun. He certainly looked the type that matched Hitler's racial standards. What did he think of this stage in his trip back to the fatherland?

In the first place he very willingly offered to talk. In fact he seemed glad of the opportunity. "It is no good to leave this country," he said. "We could be happy here and make money if we stayed. There is nothing left for us in Germany. There is no food, no nothing. I do not want to go back there."

The conversation was interrupted by a Canadian officer who said that under the Geneva Convention prisoners of war were not to be exhibited in public or interviewed even with the war over and won and the prisoners heading back to a defeated enemy land.

The last time the Geneva Convention was quoted to this reporter was in Montreal in 1940, when the first batch of German prisoners arrived on the transport Duchess of Bedford.

At that time the reporter had watched the supermen parade down the gangway—it was too superior a movement to be called a walk—boldly taunt their guards, stubbornly conceded every order. Germany was winning the war.

On the voyage from Britain they had attempted riot but a handful of over-age British Tommies—all that could be spared from beleaguered Britain — had winged the ringleaders and the disturbance never reached serious proportions.

This reporter had singled out a tough, surly looking lieutenant of the Luftwaffe. What did he think of his imprisonment? The lieutenant's reply was a snarl. After the snarl came a loud demand for the escort commandant.

When the Englishman arrived the German gave hm a lecture on the Geneva Convention and its relevant clauses dealing with civilians and their contact with prisoners-of-war. The Englishman explained that the Germans had thrown "the book" at him all the way across the Atlantic. He hadn't studied war long enough to know whether they were right, so he shooed off the reporter.

In the dark and drizzle of the early morning departure today, the tattered blue uniforms of captured U-Boat crew members could be seen. They looked as forlorn as any of their mates.

Compared to the handful of ill-armed Tommes that brought the first Germans out to Canada, the last unwelcome guests are going back under the eye of a tough company of Veterans' Guard, armed with Sten guns.

"And they are as meek as little lambs," said a sergeant who doesn't like the idea of being away from home at Christmas.

Pope Pius Pleads For Union Of All Christians

By FRANK MUNRO

Vatican City, Dec. 23 (AP). — Pope Pius, addressing tens of thousands of devout Roman Catholics in historic St. Peter's Square, called yesterday for a "holy union" of all Christians to overcome "hostility" in the world. The huge gathering, summoned by the church as a show of devotion to the pontiff in answer to a new wave of Italian anti-clericalism, cheered the Pope's appearance for ten minutes in a series of thundering "vivas" which echoed through the Bernini colonnade of Christendom's largest church.

The Pope urged Catholics everywhere to fight for and defend the faith. The fight today, he said, "is for Christ or against Christ".

Another great roar responded: "For Christ".

Vast Throng.

No estimate was available on the size of the throng, summoned to Mass by the deep-throated bells of St. Peter's. But the 1,000-foot piazza, which can accommodate 200,000 persons was nearly full.

The Pope, visible to the faithful as a tiny figure clad in white, spoke from the loggia, or gallery, high above the piazza. He talked in a firm voice, magnified by a battery of twenty loud speakers.

Incongruously scattered through the thousands of clergy, nuns and Roman citizens were knots of Italian soldiers equipped with machine guns. Despite recent inflammatory attacks against the Pontiff in several Roman newspapers, there were no anti-Catholic incidents.

Many of the devout carried posters and banners. Some read: "Holy father, we are with you unto death".

A group of more zealous youths climbed a lamp-post in the piazza, affixed copies of the anti-clerical publication Don Basilio, and applied a match.

When the Pope started to speak, he was interrupted time after time with roars of "Vive il papa; vive il papa."

Soul Is Here.

"Truly," he said, "the Catholic soul of the eternal city is here."

The Pope recalled briefly other great gatherings in St. Peter's piazza during the war and at its conclusion.

He referred to March 12, 1944, when he appealed to both the axis and the allies to spare Rome, as a day when "so many refugees and Italian citizens came to seek safety and comfort in the words of their father and bishop."

He referred, amidst another outburst of cheers, to June 6, 1944, when allied forces surged past Rome, as the date when "Rome emerged from the war spared."

It was at St. Peter's piazza, he said, "that Rome celebrated the first hours of her liberation."

Turning to the new wave of anti-clericalism, the Pope told his followers that "you see with pain and indignation" the Holy name of the Vicar of Christ attacked by "deniers of Christ!" and by "ruiners of holy things."

Gives Benediction.

The Pontiff called for the "holy union" of Rome, Italy and the whole Christian world to overcome "all hostility and messages".

He concluded with the apostolic benediction and with an innovation for "peace and justice for Rome, Italy and the whole world".

Hundreds of persons with babies in their arms held their children up in the air to see the Pope.

The Mass was celebrated on an improvised altar on the top St. Peter's stair, before the great central doorway, looking down on the piazza enclosed by 17th century quadruple colonnade.

The bells of Rome's 400 churches joined those of St. Peter's as the devout began to assemble under the cool December sun.

Directions were given through the powerful loudspeakers to aid the people in following the service that preceded the Pope's appearance.

"On knees, all," was the direction at one point, and the throng knelt as one on the cold stones.

Excommunications.

The latest outburst of anti-clericalism resulted in the excommunication early this month of the editors, vendors and readers of the weekly Don Basilio, the most virulent of the anti-religious journals.

Subsequently the Italian government filed charges against the editor of another weekly, Pollox. Premier Alcide de Gasperi, himself a devout Catholic, told the constituent assembly that his government would not let the "re-won freedom" of the Italian press be used for "obscenity and pornography" and the detriment of the Pope.

Meanwhile, subcommittees of the assembly were debating inclusion of latern pacts—which contain a statement that Catholicism is the religion of Italy—in the constitution. Despite communist opposition, it seemed likely that the pacts would be approved.

Local Resident Innocent Victim Of Christmas

Christmas is a poor time to get in the "doghouse" but that is where a well-known man about town is at the present, although the Yuletide atmosphere may reduce his sentence to some extent.

He meant well, as he plodded along Front street with a small nephew in tow. In fact, being a good family man he had bought his wife several presents, and all seemed to be hunky-dory.

On his way home he met a friend. Greetings were exchanged and the friend proffered him a package with the seasonal compliments.

Reaching his home, he was greeted by the smiling wife, and being in good holiday cheer, he thought quickly, thrust the package in her hand and said, "Here's a present a friend of ours sent to you. It's a box of candy."

He experienced the thrill that Scrooge of Christmas Carol fame did after doing his good deeds to Tiny Tim and family and Saturday night retired with a sense of something well done.

Sunday morning he arose. Going downstairs he met the good lady of the house. There was a cold gleam in her eye. Something was definitely wrong. He gazed quickly about the room, saw nothing amiss and sat down and ate his breakfast. There was a stony silence. Occasionally he glanced up. His wife pinned him with an icy look.

Finally he could stand it no longer. "What's wrong, dear?" he managed to say.

His wife rose to her feet. She went into another room and came back with an opened package.

"Since when," she demanded, arms akimbo, "did women eat chocolates like this? Who was the friend, and what kind of a friend is he? If you want to eat the candy, bub, it's all yours."

The man looked down. Lying there in all its pristine beauty was a complete shaving set, soap, brush and shaving lotion.

Slippery Streets Cause of Crashes

Slippery streets were the cause of a number of minor motor accidents on local streets over the weekend as soft snow packed onto pavements to give vehicular traffic considerable trouble. However, all trouble reported was of comparatively minor nature with no personal injuries resulting.

One motorist driving west on Bridge Street swerved to avoid striking a small girl who darted in front of his vehicle and as a result skidded into another car causing fender damage. Another motorist reported killing a dog as he was driving on Front Street. The dog had been chasing a cat across the street and fell victim to the wheels of the auto as the driver was unable to stop because of the slippery condition of the street.

COWS BEING GROOMED

Napanee, Dec. 23 — (CP) — Reports from local farmers indicate that both the farmers and Polish veterans employed by them are satisfied with the present arrangement. One of them said recently "My cows have not been brushed for 10 years, but they are groomed every day now and my man is up every morning at five."

HOLIDAY NOTES from the "Voice of the Bay of Quinte"

During the holiday season, CJBQ is presenting to the listeners of the Bay of Quinte area, several programs of outstanding interest during the Yuletide season. Probably the outstanding of these is the annual address of His Majesty, King George VI, which will be heard throughout the world. Special arrangements have been made to bring this program to the Quinte district listeners over CJBQ starting at ten o'clock Christmas morning.

Immediately preceding the King's address, CJBQ will carry the "Empire" broadcast through the facilities of the C.B.C. This broadcast has become almost an institution with the peoples of the British Empire on Christmas Day. During this broadcast, the listeners of this district will hear greetings from all parts of the far-flung commonwealth. The "Empire Broadcast" is scheduled for 9 o'clock.

"A Christmas Tapestry," radio feature of the Belleville branch of the Canadian Restaurant Association, and the first Yuletide broadcast to be heard over CJBQ, has presented the pattern in story, song, lore and customs of "the best beloved time of all the year."

"A Christmas Tapestry" heard each day at 5 p.m. winds up its series with the final broadcast on Tuesday, December 24th.

David's Electric "Musical Cocktails," aired over CJBQ, Monday thru' Friday at 5.50 will assume a holiday air on December 24th. and on Christmas Day. In keeping with the spirit of the season, "Musical Cocktails" will become "Christmas Cocktails" and will feature favorite Yuletide music.

Nearly half a century ago, an editorial which was to live through the years appeared in the "New York Sun" under the title, "Is There a Santa Claus?" It was written to dispel a little girl's doubts about the exisence of a very real and very important person in her life. A reading of this world-famous newspaper editorial climaxes a special half hour Christmas fantasy in music and drama to be presented by the McCarthy Theatre over CJBQ at 7 o'clock Christmas Eve.

Titled "Santa Claus Rides Again," the broadcast will feature Allen Roth's orchestra and chorus in specially arranged Christmas music, Clement Clarke Moore's beloved verse, "A Visit from Saint Nichols," and the Christmas Eve story of a little girl named Virginia and her Daddy.

Immediately following "Santa Claus Rides Again," McIntosh Bros. of Belleville, will present a "Christmas Carol Cavalcade" at 7.30 o'clock Christmas Eve and at the same time Christmas Day.

One of the best-loved stories in English literature will be heard as a featured part of the Christmas Eve broadcast schedule of CJBQ. It is Charles Dickens' "A Christmas Carol," adapted for radio and produced in the form of a full-hour dramatized program, commencing at 8 o'clock Christmas Eve and brought to the listeners of the Bay of Quinte district by Walker's Hardware of Belleville.

It's the familiar story of "Scrooge," the miserly, miserable old man who detests Christmas jollity but finally mellows towards his fellow man after spending a lonely, frightening Christmas Eve wrestling with his memories and listening to the ghostly admonitions of his deceased partner, "Marley," and of his lost sweetheart, "Alice."

Clapp Motors of Belleville, will present a quarter hour program of Christmas carols at 9 o'clock Christmas Eve which will be followed by "'Twas the Night Before Christmas," a program of Christmas music and verse presented by Paul Mercier.

A radio adaptation by the CJBQ "Sunday Players" of the story of the Nativity will be the Christmas presentation of Quinte Motors of Belleville at 9.30, December 24th. Titled "A Child is Born," the program tells the oft-repeated story of the Birth of Jesus.

The script has been given a new treatment and holidayers are sure to find new thrills in this moving drama of the event which marked the first Christmas.

Bourgeau's Garage, of Belleville, will present "A Christmas Diary," at 10.30 Christmas Eve. "A Christmas Diary" will include selected Christmas music, also stories of Christmas celebrations down through the ages. It will be followed at 11 o'clock by "Christmas In Other Lands" which tells of the way the Birth of Christ is celebrated in other lands across the world. "Christmas in Other Lands" will be presented by the Ed. Thomas' Tobacco Store of Belleville. Thompson and Reilly, Photographers, will present "A Portrait of Christmas" at 11.30, a program of special Christmas music and verse.

Observance of Christmas Mass at St. Michael's Church, Belleville, will be broadcast through the remote control facilities of CJBQ starting at midnight Christmas Eve and lasting 'til approximately 1 30

The installation of special remote control facilities by CJBQ's engineering staff will afford the radio audience a complete sound picture of the proceedings. Mass will be sung by Monsignor J. F, Nicholson and special music will be featured.

At 10.15 Christmas morning, immediately following Christmas message of King George VI, Cole's Hairdressing of Belleville, will present two Christmas stories narrated by Frank Luther, "The First Christmas," the story of the Nativity as recorded in the Gospel of St. Luke and "The Little Match Girl," one of Hans Christian Andersen's most famous tales.

Christmas music will predominate most of the afternoon programs. These programs will be presented by Shaw's Men's Wear of Belleville, Wray's Furniture, the Vogue Beauty Salon and Bishop's Feeds.

At 2.30, the Massey Harris Co. will present lovely Loretta Young in "The Littlest Angel," the touching tale of "The Littlest Angel," a mischievous cherub who astonished the citizen angels of the Celestial City with his unusual behaviour. He proved his worth, however, by offering with sincere simplicity the humble gift which was most precious to him, as a birthday gift for the Christ Child. On this same program will be the music of Victor Young and his orchestra and the Ken Darby Choir.

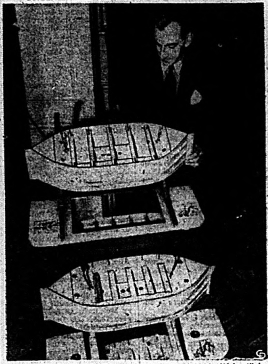
At 3.30 Christmas Day, the staff of CJBQ will send their own special greetings to listeners in the Bay of Quinte area. All members of the staff will take part, sending their own personal greetings.

At 8 o'clock Christmas night, The Ontario Intelligencer will present Charles Dickens' immortal "Mr. Pickwick's Christmas" starring the distinguished actor, Charles Laughton with Hans Eisler and his orchestra. In addition to this beautiful story, Mr. Laughton will also narrate "The Story of the Three Wise Men" from the Gospel according to St. Matthew and "The Oldest Christmas Story" from the Gospel according to St. Luke. Old and young alike will take great pleasure in listening to Charles Laughton in these Christmastime masterpieces.

At 9.30 there will be a special program for the holiday season direct from Edgewater Park in Campbellford. Plans are under way to make this Edgewater Park broadcast the best ever from this popular Campbellford amusement centre.

Happy Christmas in Canada — English war brides and their children — most of them spending their first Christmas in Canada — had a happy time Saturday afternoon when they were guests at a pre-Yuletide party given by the Red Cross. Did they enjoy themselves fully? Just look!

UNSINKABLE LIFEBOAT TO BE LAUNCHED



A mid-Atlantic launching to test an "unsinkable lifeboat" is to be made from a liner next May. The lifeboat is the work of Professor Harold A. Gaskin, of Knightsbridge, London, who since 1912, following the "Titanic" disaster, has made 124 models of lifeboats for patent rights and Board of Trade tests in America and England. His first model was made from old milk tins. His latest is a full size craft fitted with two Diesel engines and radio. It can be described as two boats fixed bottom to bottom. If either section is uppermost an air-cushion underneath makes the craft non-sinkable. On May 11 the lifeboat will be taken to Southampton, loaded on to a United States-bound liner, and launched in mid-Atlantic from where the vessel will be sailed to New York. This photo shows two replica models of the unsinkable boat. The mirror shows the reverse bottom of the boats and illustrates how they are similar to two boats fixed bottom to bottom.

Barn on Outskirts Of Tweed Burns

Tweed, Dec. 23 (Special)—Fire of undetermined origin completely destroyed the barn and some of its contents of Percy Badgley, farmer residing on the southern outskirts of this village, on Friday afternoon.

Leaving his house shortly after one o'clock, Mr. Badgley saw flames leaping out of the barn. He raced to the structure and plunging through heavy clouds of smoke succeeded in extricating several head of livestock. He also succeeded in saving the family automobile which was slightly damaged by the flames.

Mr. Badgley was at a loss to understand how the fire started. Everything was in good order when he left the structure before going to his dinner. There was some insurance on the building, which rapidly fell a prey to the flames despite all efforts to reduce the blaze.

LARGE NUMBERS RUSS SALDIERS DEMOBILIZED

Moscow, Dec. 21 (AP).—Indications that Soviet Russia is reducing her forces considerably in foreign countries were seen today in the large numbers of demobilized soldiers returning daily from the west. Soldiers, many of whom say they are from Germany, are numerous in Moscow railroad stations, detraining here or passing through on troop trains.

A MILLION VISITORS

London, Dec. 24 (CP).—Already over one million people have visited the "Britain Can Make It" Exhibition in London. On Nov. 19 the millionth visitor was presented with a pigskin travelling bag by the organizers of the exhibition—the Council or Industrial Design.

SANTA DANCES

TOO MANY O'MALLEYS SO SCOT SUBSTITUTED

London, Dec. 24 (CP). — Because Bing Crosby played Father O'Malley in two films, Alastair Sim who was to have been Father O'Malley in the British film "Captain Boycott" will now appear as Father McKeogh, a Scot living in Ireland.

Sim, however, does not mind the change of name and nationality, for he is an ex-professor of phonetics at New College, Edinburgh and a pure Scot who will not have to acquire a temporary Scots accent.

13 Dont's to Prevent Fires

"Deaths, injuries and damages to property are caused by fires due to carelessness every Christmas and therefore the public is urged to remember some simple precautions," said the Canadian Underwriters' Association in a statement issued for the season.

The Association's list of 13 "don't's" include the following:

Don't strike matches beside the Christmas tree.

Don't strike matches with your thumb nail.

Don't smoke while decorating the Christmas tree.

Don't place matches within the reach of children.

Don't use strings of lights unless "approved" label is attached.

Don't place the tree near a fireplace or hot electric bulbs.

Don't play the part of an amateur electrician.

Don't permit tissue wrappings to collect around the tree or room.

Don't allow children to use gasoline, alcohol or kerosene-powered toys unless supervised by an adult.

Don't purchase electrical toys unless they bear the "approved" label.

Don't permit the use of anything but safety films in movie projectors.

Don't attend crowded halls with improper exit facilities.

Don't stuff paper into furnaces because of the danger of back drafts.

"If", officials of the Association said, "the above suggestions were rigidly followed, there would be far less suffering and fewer fires at Christmas time."

Spirit of This Time

Christmas with its full meaning cannot be confined to one day or a few days, for the spirit of the time is felt before and after the anniversary. It is the greatest festival of the year, the happiest time of all. It has the importance of the greatest religious fact with implications which mean so much to assurance of faith and immortality, to man's manner of life, to human conditions and to the development of charity, good will and brotherhood. It is a revelation of the Divine Will in the world and in history. No figure has so molded the minds and hearts of men as He whose birth is commemorated this week. No other has so directed humanity along the course of truth and light. From that Life have gone out influences which have influenced and will influence humanity to the end of time, touching the individual human heart as well as society and nations, for His principles endure because they are truth.

His Life has drawn into the Christmas orbit the loveliest legends and customs such as that of the kindly saint, Santa Claus and inspired men and women in all ages.

On Sunday in countless churches and shrines anthems, hymns and carols were sung to His praise. Christmas is primarily a religious festival and it is marked by the world because of its significance. In the light of Christmas the world understands life.

Christmas will be marked wth depth of feeling and faith, with merriment and joyousness especially in the lands of the Western World which feel the sense of liberation from restraints of the war years as the second Christmas comes since the close of the conflict. In Britain the people will celebrate with the knowledge of the mercies they have been privileged to enjoy in the return of peace, though Britain still feels the food shortage. In Continental lands the time will be marked with something of the spirit of pre-war days though there are yet great numbers who are in foreign lands far from their homes and many who are still undergoing hardships which have resulted from the war.

Fuel Supply Good

Coal supplies in Canada are in a healthy condition, is the good news which the people have received. Restrictions on distribution will pass out with the end of this year, according to the announcement of Reconstruction Minister C. D. Howe.

This is another of the restrictions which have been removed. These began in war time and as time has permitted they have been dropped and now that concerning fuels is to be lifted.

Act of Faith

A skyscraper home for the United Nations in the heart of a skyscraper city has a peculiarly appropriate meaning which no other site and no other architectural plan could approach. By building its capital high to the heavens and within the boundaries of the world's greatest metropolis the United Nations makes a fine gesture of faith in its own mission and destiny. It is a bold defiance to the menace of war from the air. It is a challange to the atom bomb.

Against this greatest of all war terrors, it will be recalled, the only approach to the semblance of the beginning of a defence that people have been able to think of has been decentralization and dispersion. By scattering people and industry over the greatest practicable area, by clinging inconspicuously as near to the ground as possible, short of actually going underground, it is thought that the frightful potency of the atom bomb might be appercialby reduced.

— New York Times

First Hospitals

Hospitals are known to have existed 4,000 years before Christ, and the temples of Saturn in ancient Egypt were medical schools, and in the 13th century hospitals became common enough to demand individual or national treatment. The first hospital was established in the New World 15 years after Christopher Columbus discovered it. The building was located at Santo Domingo in 1503 and staffed by members of the Confraternity of Our Lady. The first hospital on the mainland of North America was known as Immaculate Conception and was founded by Cortes in 1529 in Mexico City and is still in operation.

When the claim was made a short time ago before the Montreal Council of Social Agencies that the Hotel Dieu at Montreal was the first hospital in the New World, W. A. L. Styles of that city did some delving into historical facts about hospitals. He found that the first hospital in Canada was that of St. Jean de Dieu at Port Royal, new Annapolis, N.S., in 1629, under the charge of a religious community. This was ten to fifteen years before the Hotel Dieu hospitals at either Quebec or Montreal were founded. He also discovered that the pioneer charitable society in Canada was the Bureau des Pauvres, organized by the Supreme Council of New France in 1688, when the practice of begging was banned.

The Shirt

This, sartorially speaking, must be the much-heralded era of the little man.

While average-sized Canadians search vainly for shirts and shorts that will fit them, the little fellows are enjoying a made-to-order situation.

Look at the counters covered with shirts nearly all marked size 14 or 14½. And the shorts, through some omnipotent regimentation, seem restricted to waist size 28 and 30.

This is all very well for the lucky lads who manage to squeeze into such gazelle sizes, but for those Canadians who have waved goodbye to their lean and boyish lines, the situation isn't funny.

One can understand why it is necessary to make some small size shirts and shorts, and understand that such sizes are not in great demand and consequently in better supply. But why, oh, why, does so much shirting and shorting have to go to make so many size 14's and size 28's?

Rural Note in Old London

Spring will bring back a once familiar sound to Hyde Park, and I do not mean the resolute step of a guardsman trying to overtake a pretty nursemaid. The sheep, banished for the last few years of the "duration," are to return as soon as the new grass is thick enough says the London Daily Mail.

JUST FOLKS

By EDGAR A. GUEST

(Copyright, 1946, Edgar A. Guest)

SUCH A LONG WAIT

My Pa, he says "The days go by
So fast they fairly seem to fly.
Jack Robinson, you cannot say
Before today is yesterday."

My Grandpa says: "Tomorrow comes Before you've time to twirl your thumbs."
And he refuses to believe
Tomorrow will be Christmas Eve.

My Ma, she says: "She doesn't know,
So fast the hours and minutes go,
Just how she ever will get through
The countless tasks she has to do."

But I am sure they all are wrong.
I think the days are much too long,
And these are slower than are some.
Will Christmas Morning ever come?

WARSHIPS HOME FOR CHRISTMAS

During the late war, thousands of Canadian sailors watched the leaden waves of the North Atlantic and dreamed of a Christmas at home. This year, for the first time in eight Christmasses, all Canadian warships are expected to be in port. The naval auxiliary, H.M.C.S. Dundurn, a fleet oiler, however, will be plodding up the Oregon coast toward Esquimalt, B.C. The warships in port will decorate their mastheads with Christmas trees. The photograph shows a Canadian sailor upward bound with a Christmas tree.

PERSONAL HEALTH TALKS

By WILLIAM BRADY, M.D.

HIEMAL HEGIRA TO SAHARA ONAGIN

The melancholy days are come, and most of the wear and tear on respiratory mucous membranes, skin and disposition that makes 'em melancholy is due to the extreme dryness of the indoor atmosphere from November to May. The warmer the house, store or office is kept the drier and more irritating the air, no matter which method of heating you use. Whenever the indoors temperature is above 70 degrees F. the air is bound to be too dry for health or comfort, unless you make special provision for evaporating water constantly—not just a quart or two a day, but several gallons of water every day. The more the indoor atmosphere is overheated the more water vapor is required to keep the indoor Sahara comfortable to live in, and please don't tell me a preposition is not the correct word to end a sentence with.

If the equipment for humidifying the atmosphere is not built in with the heating plant, then a suitable tank or open container with at least two-gallon capacity and numerous loops of wicking dipping in it and suspended on wire frame above the water, will evaporate a considerable amount of water daily if kept on radiator, stove or hot air register. This serves for one room.

The uniform experience of people who take the trouble to keep the heated indoor atmosphere from becoming drier than the Sahara— as it does in most heated houses—is that they feel comfortable with less heat. They enjoy an indoor atmosphere that is somewhere in between the atmosphere in the overheated American house and that in the moderately heated English house.

A winter of such atmosphere is as hard on the lining of nose, throat, sinuses, larynx, vocal cords, bronchial tubes, lungs, Eustachian tubes and middle ear cavities as it is on the skin and the complexion, not to mention the disposition of every one who is much exposed to it, or the furniture, musical instruments, book bindings and plants, if any survive the test.

A familiar observation misleads a good many rocking-chair Saharans. They see frost form on the windows sometimes and when they can scrape some of it off from the inside they deduce that these is too much "steam" or dampness or moisture or water vapor in the air. The truth is that the relative humidity of the air indoors is practically never as high in rooms where the windows are frosted as the normal or usual relative humidity outdoors on a perfect summer day.

The outdoor air on an ideal summer day has about 50% relative humidity (contains about half as much water vapor as air at the same temperature can hold.) Cool this air from say 85 degrees F. to 70 degrees F. and since cooling contracts the volume of air, the cooled air would have a relative humidity of about 75%—to damp for comfort. On the other hand, outdoor air on a fine winter day may have a temperature of 20 degrees F. and a relative humidity of 45 to 50% but when heated up to 70 degrees F. the air expands and although the same amount of moisture per pound of air is still present, because of expansion the relative humidity of the heated air will be only about 15%—much to dry for comfort or health.

Besides built-in equipment for humidification and the evaporating tanks or humidifiers already mentioned, other aids in maintaining comfort and health during the annual sojourn in the Sahara are (1) growing plants in the room, plenty of plants, the more the better, and preferably in porous pots—both the leaves of growing plants and the porous pots evaporate or give off considerable moisture to the parched air, (2) the use of window-screens of unbleached muslin in bedrooms, for example; such full-sash ventilators exclude wind, snow, rain but admit fresh air and light and desirable moisture.

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

What makes a oulja board work?

The oulja board was invented by Isaac Fuld and his brother William and was patented July 1, 1892, in the name of the Kenard Novelty Company of Baltimore, Maryland.

In his application for a patent William Fuld declared: "A question is asked and by the involuntary muscular action of the players, or through some other agency, the frame will commence to move across the table."

The oulja board swept the whole world in one of the most remarkable cases on record, although it had been marketed by its manufacturers for years merely as an interesting toy without any claim that it had the mystic powers ascribed to it by many.

"Oulja" (pronounced WEE-jah) was a coined term for trademark purposes, being a combination of "oui" and "ja", the French and German words for "yes." Literally it means "yes-yes."

The oulja board was really a modification of the planchette, which had a wide vogue about the time of the Civil War and which was an instrument used in spiritistic and automatic writing.

"Planchette" is the diminutive of Old French "planche" and literally means "little plank or board." A planchette consists of a small triangular piece of board mounted at the base on tiny casters and at the apex on a vertical pencil. When the tips of the fingers are rested lightly on the planchette the pencil writes on a sheet of paper. Believers in the mystic powers of the planchette insist that the messages are written independently of the will of the operator.

The oulja board consists of a movable pointer attached to a board on which the alphabet, numbers, the words "yes" and "no" and other signs are printed. Two persons, with the yes-yes device between them, face each other and place their hands on the board. Sometimes the pointer seems to move in response to the subconscious mind without the operator's being aware that his muscles have anything to do with it, and the resulting messages spelled out are often startling or amusing, although generally unreliable and meaningless. A clever operator, by applying pressure on the board properly, can make the pointer indicate messages without any apparent effort on his part. Since ancient times magicians and mystics have pretended to forecast events by means of such devices, and credulous persons are often led to believe that the messages emanate from spirits or supernatural forces.

Experts say the movements of the pointer on the oulja board are owing to the unconscious muscular actions of the operator.

In 1919 the Federal Government ruled that the oulja board is taxable as a game, and this ruling was confirmed by the federal courts. William Fuld died in 1927 and Isaac Fuld in 1939. William Fuld, Jr., son of the co-inventors, continued to manufactur the "talking board" under the name of the "Mystifying Oracle."

How Salvation Army Defied Tyranny of Axis Aggression Told by Adjt. Arnold Brown

The Salvation Army in Belleville on Thursday evening had the privilege of listening to Adjutant Arnold Brown, of the editorial staff of the Salvation Army's War Cry, from Toronto, a former Belleville boy.

Taking as his subject "The Salvation Army in a World at War", he very graphically described the Army's activities in foreign countries during the last war. Speaking of the international aspect of The Salvation Army, the adjutant stated that the Army carried on work in 100 different countries and operated in ninety different languages.

In Germany, the authorities early banned Salvation Army activities, taking their buildings for government purposes, prohibiting the wearing of uniform and curtailing their efforts in many ways. Copies of the War Cry reaching Canada from Berlin, showed the swastika appearing on its pages. The German Salvation Army bandsmen showed their resourcefulness by taking their band instruments and burying them in the ground, carefully marking the spot for the day of liberation from religious persecution. Only two weeks ago these German bandsmen (400 of them) supplied the music for Salvation Army services, with these instruments which had been dug up from their hiding places and were all cleaned and shining for the occasion. As there is no cloth available in Germany out of which to make new uniforms, these men appeared in their old band tunics, carefully patched and cleaned to the best of their ability.

Brave Dutch S. A. Major

The adjutant spoke of a city in Holland where the occupation authorities stated that 11,000 men must be produced for labor camps "or else". The Salvation Army major of that city went down to the Gestapo headquarters and plainly told the German authorities that he thought this order inhuman and that they would eventually be brought to justice for their actions, with the result that he was a marked man and the Gestapo issued instructions to take him dead or alive. However, the major was not to be outdone and he stated that they would never capture him, and he did elude capture during the entire period of occupation. In the Salvation Army Citadel, he took out a panel in the wall and made a little secret hiding place for himself with just room for him to stand straight up, so he could escape when the Nazis were on the hunt for him. The Germans were so sure that he was in the building that for 24 hours they mounted guard to try to catch him, and the major had to remain in these confined quarters for that whole period. The major made a vow that while the Germans occupied Holland he would not shave and he was known everywhere as the bearded major. When he heard that the British forces were approaching the city he ran down the streets of the bullet-swept town out on to the highway, carrying in his hands the Dutch flag, the Union Jack, and the Salvation Army's yellow, red and blue flag, and thus welcomed the incoming forces of liberation. The following Sunday being Easter Sunday, a service of Thanksgiving was held, the Army Citadel was gorged with people, thousands on the outside, so they took possession of the city hall, which even then wouldn't hold the immense crowd, and during that packed service, over 200 stood to their feet signifying their desire to become Christians. A splendid tribute to a man who had defied the occupation authorities and ministered to his people during the period of occupation.

In France the Germans stated that they would allow only one church to operate, the church chosen being the Episcopal Reformed Protestant Church of France.

Here again the Salvation Army Officers showed their ingenuity by overnight putting the entire Salvation Army membership on the books of the Episcopal Reformed Protestant Church of France and turning over to them all their assets for the duration of the War, thus being able to carry on in spite of the order issued by the Germans. The Adjutant said it was encouraging to know that the Army in France is prospering and that they have more officers in training, than are at the training college in Toronto at the present time.

Terrible Experiences in Orient

Speaking of the Orient he told of the terrible experiences endured during the Japanese occupation. In what the Japanese called the march of humiliation, from Shanghai to the concentration camp, he stated that a Salvation Army woman officer was forced to march with two small children at her side and a baby of two months old in her arms with Japanese soldiers with fixed bayonets on each side, a distance of twenty miles without food or water in the blistering sun.

He told of a Chinese salvationist, who had not so long been a Christian. This man the Japanese singled out for terrible torture. They tied him to a wall by his wrists till the cords cut through the flesh and his nervous system was disorganized by such treatment. Then they told him that all he had to do while the crowds of villagers stood around was to say there was no God and that the Salvation Army was an espionage association, carrying on espionage work for foreign countries, and he would be set free.

The Chinese salvationist would still say nothing so they held burning tapers to his skin till his body was a mass of burns, and still he wouldn't give in, then they stood him on his head and poured a pail of water into his mouth and nostrils and half drowned him.

After all this persecution they again asked him to speak and he said:

"Many years ago there was a good man who was hung on the cross to die and as He looked down at his persecutors He said, 'Father forgive them, for they know not what they do'," and the Chinese salvationist said, "the servant is no greater than his Master, and I forgive you."

This splendid Christian Chinese salvationist lived to see an end of the Japanese occupation and today is serving the Salvation Army faithfully in that country.

After the service held in the Citadel, the adjutant gave an address at the Masonic luncheon, the Salvation Army band providing the music for the luncheon.

Judgment Deferred On Theft Charges

Judgment was deferred by Magistrate T. Y. Wills in county police court last week following taking of evidence on charges of theft against Leslie Ray and Fred Vardy, both of Trenton. A further charge of receiving stolen goods laid against Leslie Ray was dismissed by the Magistrate.

Charges against the two Trenton men were laid by Provincial Police following reports from Trenton R.C.A.F. officers that a quantity of goods had been taken from the station warehouse. A quantity of goods was later discovered in the home of Leslie Ray.

The theft charges against the two men were heard on Thursday afternoon with Magistrate Wills deferring judgment until January 2nd, while the additional charge against Mr. Ray was heard Friday afternoon. Following presentation of the Crown evidence, defence counsel Alan Sprague moved for dismissal of the case without offering defence. Mr. Sprague also acted for the accused on the theft charges.

Following dismissal of the receiving charge against Mr. Ray, Magistrate Wills issued an order for the return of the goods to R.C.A.F. authorities.

Ronald Longwell Named President Holstein Club

Ronald Longwell of Foxboro was named president of the Hastings County Holstein Club at their annual meeting held last week at the agricultural office at Stirling.

The meeting was well attended with forty Holstein breeders in attendance.

Honorary president of the club for the next year will be Herbert Watt of Foxboro, while Dave Hollinger of Stirling will be vice-president, and H. L. Fair, secretary treasurer. Earl Burnside, Madoc, is auditor.

Holstein fieldman for the district, Mr. F. Roy Ormiston, was the guest speaker at the meeting and spoke on the general situation regarding the marketing of Holstein cattle. He reported that large numbers of cattle are now being exported to foreign countries other than the United States.

"Shipments of high class Holsteins for the first time have gone to Great Britain and to Palestine, he said.

Mr. Ormiston congratulated the club on the splendid program carried out during the year and made particular reference to the splendid barn meeting held at the farm of Emile Masse last January and the field day held on the farm of Clifford Ketcheson in June.

The Stirling Agricultural Society again invited the club to hold their Black and White Day at Stirling Fair. It was decided that instead of a barn meeting this year members would take a bus tour to some outstanding Holstein breeders' farms in the Toronto area. The farms of Ray McLaughlin, Oshawa, and Jack McCague, Alliston, were suggested. The trip will likely be made in January.

The annual field day will be held at Moira Lake early in June with livestock for judging to be trucked in. A. J. Tamblyn was re-hired as salesman for the club for 1947.

Teacher, Pupils Mt. View School Give Concert

A very successful Christmas entertainment presented by Miss Huff and the pupils of Mountain View School was held in the Sunday School rooms of Mountain View church on Thursday evening. The proceeds amounted to $19.65 of which $6 was donated to the Sunday School.

Miss Mary Smith, music supervisor, assisted Miss Huff with the program. Rev. Mr. Graham capably acted as chairman for the following numbers:

Opening Chorus, "Twas the Night Before Christmas", Jr. Rhythm Band, "Winter Wonderland"; recitations by Audrey Morris, "Santa and Arithmetic"; by Renee Mason, "The Shortest Day"; by Lenna Latchford, "Which is Santa?"; chorus by the Juniors, "Christmas Cake"; a humorous Negro dialogue, "Yassuh Boss" was put on by four boys, Roger Sprague, Hugh Joyce, Eugene Morris and Ronald Lough; a monologue was given by June Wilson "Grandma's Christmas Presents"; the Senior Rhythm Band played and sang "Santa Claus is Comin' to Town".

Operetta: "A Joke on Santa Claus"—a family group on Christmas eve, is gathered in the living room to discuss events of the afternoon. They repeat part of the Christmas program, decorate the room with Christmas greens, then retire for the night. The small children, after the house is quiet, return, to try to catch Santa Claus. The Sandman puts them to sleep. Then the Holly and Mistletoe Fairies visit the place and put on a very picturesque drill. The Spirit of Christmas reminds them of the real theme of Christmas-time and finally Santa enters. Knowing the Sandman's magic power, he laughs at the attempted joke of the children, but something unforeseen happens and Santa is really caught. He makes the best of it, however.

The main feature of the evening was a Bethlehem tableaux, with the Christmas carols sung by the audience.

The first scene opened with Joseph, Mary and The Babe in the Manger, with the angel in the background, while the audience sang, "Silent Night". Six girls attractively dressed stood at one side of the platform and sang, "Carol, Sweetly Carol". Then the speaker, Douglas Trumble, described the Manger scene. The audience then rendered, "Away in a Manger".

At the opening of the second scene, the children sang, "While Shepherds Watched" in three parts. On the stage, the Shepherds in typical eastern garb, reclined around a small campfire, discussing the probable advent of a Messiah. Two decided to sleep but the other stood guard because of the restlessness of the flocks, so was the first to notice an unusual brilliance in the sky. The choir then sang, "It Came upon the Midnight Clear" and "Bethlehem Town".

In Scene III, the Kings of the East came offering their costly gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh to the Christ Child, with the Guardian Angel hovering near. The audience sang, "We Three Kings of Orient Are", then the speakers, Rene Mason, Lenna Latchford and Clarabelle Maybee, spoke of Jesus, who was born in Bethlehem of Judea. Because of that first great Christmas gift we sing our Christmas carlos, and give our Christmas gifts and greetings. The choir then sang the last two verses of "Carol, Sweetly Carol", and the audience sang "Hark, the Herald Angels Sing" and "O Come, All Ye Faithful".

An address was read by Mrs. Hamilton to Mr. Keeble and he was presented with a Bible from the Sunday School.

An address was also read to Miss Huff by Douglas Trumble and she was presented with a number of gifts on behalf of the school pupils.

Santa Claus arrived in due time and helped to unload the gaily decorated Christmas tree. The Sunday School presented each child with a sack containing oranges, candy and nuts.

The chairman moved a vote of thanks to Miss M. Huff and Miss M. Smith for the evening's entertainment.

TAKEN OFF BY HEAT

Toronto, Dec. 23 — (CP)—Removing snow from his sidewalk and garage runway is literally no job at all for W. E. Bannerman of this city. When a few cubic yards of the stuff accumulate outside his house, he flips a switch, the sidewalk gets hot — and presto —no snow. It isn't done with mirrors, but with pipes under the surface filled with a mixture of water and anti-freeze which are heated by a special furnace in his basement.

Final Farewell Given Members W.D'sofR.C.A.F.

Final farewell to arms for the Women's Division of the Royal Canadian Air Force was said at a brief and simple ceremony at the Trenton Air Station on Saturday.

Air Commodore A. Brown, representing the service shook the hand of the last member of the division in the last good-bye to the service on the part of the women. All W.D's have now been released from duty.

Air Commodore Brown officially thanked the women of the service for a grand job well done, through the medium of the lone representative. The ceremony was performed simultaneously with others in other air stations in the Dominion.

In a radio broadcast, former Air Minister Gibson in tribute to the W.D.'s of the R.C.A.F. said their slogan could truly be "First in, Last Out."

"At its peak the Women's Division numbered more than 15,000 and by the end of September last it had been cut to less than 1,000," he said.

The girls in blue were accepted as part of the force, he pointed out, and by their brisk efficient compliance with duty and their ever cheerful smiles were as much part of the service life as "forty-eights" and wing parades."

"Good bye and thank you," he concluded, "for a magnificent job done cheerfully and well."

London, Dec. 23 — (CP)—Pity the poor mail sorter confronted by a letter with the latitude and longitude of the addressee and "near London" the only clue to its destination. While postal officials didn't see the joke, they turned such a letter over to University of Western Ontario for the answer.

New Soapless VEL Marvelous For Dishes

by Frances Thompson noted homemaking authority

Nobody likes doing dishes, but there is now a new product called VEL that certainly makes the inevitable job a whole lot easier and quicker.

UNLIKE SOAP

VEL is not soap—it's a soapless discovery. Its quick-forming foamy suds don't last—they're not meant to. But the CLEAR water remaining in dishpan or sink is the very thing which makes glasses and china sparkle and so quickly cleans the porridge pot and roasting pan . . . the two bugaboos of dishwashing. What is more, dishes washed in VEL and given a quick rinse will dry themselves without streaking. It's amazing how VEL cuts the grease and leaves little if any scum on the sides of your sink. If necessary a tiny sprinkling of dry VEL on the dishcloth, then a quick rub-around, will make the sink or dishpan gleam. And, incidentally, VEL is very kind to the hands.

VERY LITTLE VEL NEEDED

Frankly, at first we were skeptical of VEL for we missed the heavy dishpan suds produced by soap. In error, we added more, but now know that a very little VEL goes a long way . . . and that VEL keeps on cleaning long after the suds dissolve. A teaspoonful or two of VEL is usually plenty in a dishpanful of water. Add a little more for larger sinks or very greasy pans.

To Wear With Suits

By ALICE ALDEN

THE TWO-TONED slip, with white top and dark skirt, is a boon to suit addicts and for those of us who just dote on separate skirts and blouses. Celanese jersey is used for this slip done on simple, sculptured, easy-fitting lines. White lace borders the nicely molded bodice that is brief above the fitted midriff, and the nicely handled black skirt has a black lace edging. It is interesting to observe the increasing popularity of knitwear lingerie!

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

They're Both After The Same Boy

Dear Miss Fairfax:

We are two girls of 17, who are very close friends and love each other like sisters.

We have met a boy whom we know we both love. I have gone out with him several times, and he knows that my girl friend also loves him. He claims he heard we had a fight over him, which is not true. Now he says if that's the way it's going to be, he will not take either of us out. He is 21 years old, and not the conceited type. What should we do?

"Two Unhappy Girls"

Well, girls, I think the first thing you'd better do is to stop thinking and talking about "loving" this boy. You're taking much too weighty a view for what might be a pleasant mutual friendship for all concerned, if you'd only be sensible about it.

Why try to force this young man into making a choice between the two of you? He certainly doesn't appear to be serious over either one, and I should think the quickest way to make him lose any casual interest he may have in you would be to take this silly attitude that you're both "in love" with him.

I don't blame him at all for saying he won't take either of you out. Whether or not you actually had a fight over him is beside the point. The fact is that by letting him know you're both infatuated with him, you've quite obviously thrown a scare into him, and he's looking around to locate the nearest exit in case struggles for his attention become too much of a nuisance.

My advise to you is to accept your boy friend as a casual comrade and let it go at that. If you don't, he's going to drop you, but fast.

You Belon in the Kindergarten Set, You 18-Year-Old Crybaby!

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 18 years old, and for the past 18 months I have been going steady with a girl of 16 whom I love very much. She tells me that she loves me very much and couldn't love anyone else, but she hurts me so terribly at times that I have to cry, which is so often.

I only get to see her twice a week, on account of my work, and usually on one of those nights she would rather go to the dance with one of her girl friends instead of being with me. And when she does, I don't know what to do with myself that night. I can't have any fun no matter what I do. The only time I feel easy is when I'm with her. All week I feel sort of sick about it, and can't get my mind off her for a moment. Please tell me what to do. I'll go nuts if I keep being hurt by her.

"Crybaby"

You sound to me, "Crybaby", as though a 16-year-old girl were too old for you, and you ought to pick your girl friend from the kindergarten set. That's the only age that can get along with crybabies.

I should think this girl of whom you write would rather go to a dance with her girl friends than spend her evening with you crying on her shoulder. That's hardly very fascinating entertainment.

What's the matter with you, anyhow? Can't you fight back if your girl says something you do not like? Haven't you sense enough to see that if you stood up for yourself and acted like a male creature instead of a female infant, your girl would very likely stop trying to hurt you? The way things are now, you're just asking for it. She can't resist the ludicrous spectacle of a practically grown man bursting into tears over trifles that he ought to laugh off. Besides which it gives her a fine sense of power to be able to bring it about.

Why not try being your age? Once you've won her respect for being a strong he-man, instead of trying to gain her sympathy—and only succeeding in getting her contempt—for your whimpering, you might find things taking a turn for the better.

A Friendly Word to that English War Bride

Dear Miss Fairfax:

On reading your letters on the English war bride recently, I'm wondering if by any chance you could give me her address.

The reason I am doing this is because I'm also a war bride, coming from England, and if in any way I could help to make her feel more at home, I should be only too glad to do so.

I may be perhaps a little more fortunate than she is, since my husband and I were lucky enough to buy our own little home, which helps a great deal. So, if by your help I could contact this bride, we could at least write to each other, and if not living too far apart, she could come to see me and have a good old English cup of tea.

Mrs. J. A. L.

Mrs. J. A. L. is referring specifically, of course, to the war bride who wrote about the lonely time she was having because her husband worked nights and could not take her out, yet was unwilling to have his men relatives show her around. Naturally she is eager to see all the new sights in this country to which she is a stranger, and make all the friends she can.

So I think it would be a very fine thing if she would let me put her in touch with Mrs. J. A. L., who might be able to make some suggestions that would help her get acquainted in her new environment. And I'm sure Mrs. J. A. L. would like it very much if any other English brides who feel a bit lost temporarily while getting adjusted to the way of a new country would write her, too. Any who lived near enough could get together for that "good old English cup of tea", and those more widely separated might get acquainted and exchange experiences by letter. It should certainly help make these girls feel more at home.

GOOD MANNERS

"Signing Off" Your Letters

You've come to the end of your letter. . . almost. Now how will you bow yourself out? What is an appropriate "complimentary close"? What kind of letter is it? How well do you know the person to whom you are writing?

If it's a business letter, it's easy to choose. "Yours very truly" is a correct ending, or "Yours truly", or "Very truly yours". "Respectfully yours" is no longer in very good standing. Sometimes it is used by employee to employer, or by a tradesman to a customer, but nowadays even in these cases, "Yours very truly" or "Yours truly" is the closing generally used. In certain types of business letters—letters to an individual, not to a company—"Sincerely yours" is appropriate.

"I don't know what we would do without "Sincerely" as a possibility for a closing to our letters! When in doubt our pen usually dips into this word as an ever-present help. It leans to the side of being rather impersonal, but so do many types of social letters we write. To a formal note or letter, we may correctly use "Sincerely yours" or "Very sincerely yours", or "Sincerely".

Unfortunately there is no such helpful word between the inclined-to-be-formal "Sincerely" and the intimate ending "Affectionately". So, when we write to an intimate friend, we may sign "Affectionately", or "Affectionately yours", and increase the intimacy of the closing to "Devotedly" and on to "Lovingly". We ourselves must decided which closing is appropriate to our relationship to the person to whom we are writing.

"Faithfully" or "Faithfully yours" or "Yours faithfully" is a closing often used by a man; for instance, when writing to a woman. It is also appropriate used as the informal closing of letters to important personages.

Some people scorn the use of "Cordially" as a letter-closing, but since the dictionary says that "cordial implies warmth and sincerity of feelings and manner", perhaps there is no well-founded reason for this disdain. "Cordially" is often used, for instance, by a hostess writing a note of invitation to "indicate warmth and sincerity of feeling".

"Gratefully" is sometimes used in closing a letter to a person who has done a favor or benefit. But usually a letter of thanks is signed "Sincerely", "Affectionately" or "Devotedly", or whatever you would sign to any other kind of letter to that person.

We should avoid signing a letter with the discourteous "Hastily yours" or "Yours in haste". And "As ever" doesn't seem to be a very inspired closing.

Remember that only the first word of the complimentary close should be capitalized; Very sincerly yours.

Naming Postumous Son for His Father

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My husband died last month, and our child is to be born in about two month. Naturally if it is a boy I want to give it his father's name. Should his name be followed by "junior"?

A. N.

No. A posthumous son who is given his father's name exactly, is not "junior", since "senior" is not living. For example, if your husband's name was Thomas Paul Noble, your son's name would be Thomas Paul Noble. However, I would like to call your attention to the confusion that may arise when your son is older and has a name that is not distinguishable from yours. To avoid this, a posthumous son may be given his father's first name but a different middle name.

No Marriage, So Gift Should Be Returned

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

If one were not married and received a wedding present from a friend, should she keep the present and let the sender know she has it, or should she send it back?

W. J.

I'm not sure what you mean by your question. Do you mean that the girl expected to be married, told her friend she was to be married, the friend sent a wedding gift, and the marriage is not to take place, or at least is indefinitely postponed? If this is your question the answer is that he girl should return the gift to teh sender, with a gracious note of explanation, either that the engagement has been broken ("by mutual consent", is the phrase always added to this news) or that the marriage has been indefinitely postponed.

Farmhouse Cider

By RALPH WIGHTMAN
BBC Press Service

London, by mail—In the spacious days of the last century any rich young man making the grand tour of Europe was always advised to sample "the wine of the country." I suppose the wine of my contry is beer. On our light chalk land barley grows remarkably well, and in Grandfather's time every sizeable farm made its own ale. The very names of the villages reflect the quality of the land. Five miles away is Bere Regis, just over the border in Devon is the fishing village of Beer, while up in the North of my country is Bere Hackett. Bere was the old name for barley, and this probably accounts for the name of the beverage made from barley.

The practice of making beer at home in farmhouses fell into decay before my time, but the tradition of beer drinking has persisted in my district. A score of miles away to the West, cider making comes into its own. This is poor country for growing good barley but very suitable for fruit trees. Cider making is relatively new in England. We have a tradition that it was introduced for the first time into England by the monks of Forde Abbey in my county of Dorset, soon after the Norman Conquest in 1066. This seems a fairly reasonable tradition since parts of Normandy are still famous for cider orchards. The great united force which landed on the beaches in June, 1944, had to fight their way through little lush meadows and cider orchards. The sight of old apple mills and primitive presses made many a West countryman sick for the small farms and deep lanes of home.

I have never made cider on my farm at home, and I do not think that Father of Grandfather ever made any. We have an orchard of cider apples but it is sadly neglected, and all that ever happens to it is that we pick up the fallen apples in October and sell them to a cider factory. Some years we get twenty tons and some years we get none. We leave it all to Providence, which is very bad husbandry and most deplorable, but then I do not like cider and I shall be quite relieved when the last tree falls down and the field can be a normal pasture again. In the meantime, if I can sell a few apples for more than they cost to pick up, so much the better.

Friends of mine in the West of Dorset have always made cider, and I like to visit them at this time of the year. It is not that I like to drink their cider but that the whole process of making is one of those good old customs which are a thousand years remote from stinking engines. When I was very young I was allowed to drink the fresh apple juice as it flowed from the press. The taste was pleasant but the medicinal effect was almost atomic. I still like to watch cider being made but I no longer drink fresh juice. I mentioned just now that we have a cider orchard on my farm, and this may need a little explanation for people who know nothing of this wine.

There is a real distinction between a cider orchard and an ordinary orchard. Until I was instructed by my friends I should have thought that any apples would be suitable for cider making, the bigger and the juicier the better. Apparently this is not so. Good dessert apples and good cooking apples do not make first class cider. You must have cider apples, which are relatively useless for cooking or eating. Almost all cider is made from a blend of different varieties, and in fact the purists claim that there is only one kind of apple which will make prize winning cider without mixing. This variety is known as Kingston Black, and is a small red type which even small boys would find unpalatable.

For the rest good cider is made from a careful blend of sharp apples, sweet apples, and bittersweet apples. The bitter sweets leave your mouth with a dry tang and can scarcely be eaten. I believe they contain a good deal of tannic acid and give the finished product a racy spicy taste. The very names of the apples almost sing themselves— Redstreak, Cheery Pearmain, Strawberry Normans and Royal Wilding.

Like most of the very old arts of the countryside, cider making has received a good deal of attention from science. The Ministry of Agriculture have a National Institute of Cider Making in the West Country, and its influence on the quality of the beverage has been profound. My friends fall into two classes. There are those who make cider in exactly the way their Grandfathers did, and those who work under the close guidance of the National Institute. The first manage to drink their product without any serious injury to themselves, while the scientific men make more money from selling cider than they do from all the rest of their farms. In essentials there is no real difference in methods. It is all a matter of detail with special emphasis on cleanliness. In both cases the apples are collected when ripe and crushed in a mill. The modern mills are made of metal and can be easily cleaned. The old mills were probably in use when the Normah monks brought cider making to England. I have seen a cider mill which consisted of a huge circular stone trough round which a stone wheel revolved on an exceedingly primitive axle. It differed very little from the grain mill of biblical times and was completely impossible to sterilize. The crushed apples were next put into a press.

In the old days a huge conglomerate known as a cheese was built up from layers of clean wheat straw and layers of apples and a cumbersome weighting block was screwed down to press out the juice and to strain it through the straw. Today the principle is exactly the same but instead of straw, camel hair cloths are used to contain the crushed apples and the press is a scientific piece of engineering.

When the apples are pressed the juice contains a certain amount of solid matter and must be strained before it is run off in barrels. The old strainer was a dirty bit of cloth, the modern one is an efficient filter. The barrels are the same except that on the scientific farm they are clean and have been more or less sterilized by burning sulphur inside them. On the old fashioned farm they have certainly been rinsed out, but a smell which is half cider and half vinegar always persists. When the apple juice reaches the barrel it is left to ferment. There is no need to add yeast since there is sufficient yeast on the skin of the apple to start fermentation. Cider is apple juice and nothing else. The scum which rises through the bunghole is removed two or three times daily, and the scientist is careful to control his specific gravity at this stage. Usually a bent glass tube is passed through a cork in the bunghole and this tube curves into a basin of water so that the gas can escape from the fermenting liquid without any air entering the barrel. When fermentation is finished the old fashioned cider maker merely bunged up his cask and left the rest to Providence. The new scientist filters at this stage to stop any further fermentation action and he may even pasteurise the product.

It all sounds very cold and exact, yet both the new scientist and the old traditionalist are working in the same sort of building. One friend of mine, Harry Warren of Netherbury, who has won all the prizes in England for cider, houses his modern plant in a building which is at least 300 years old. When you visit him at cider making time you get the same good smell of apples. You duck your head to enter his stone barn. The oak beams overhead have seen the passing of three centuries of apple harvest. You lean on giant casks which have not changed their pattern in twenty generations. You sample a dry one from last year, and the medium sweet from 1945, and as the effects of many samples accumulate Harry takes you in to try a champagne cider eight years old.

I have heard tales of wine making in Portugal where the juice is expressed by the naked feet of dancers in the wine press. I believe that the making of wine in these sunny lands is a time of high carnival of song, and drunkenness. There must be something very attractive in the colour and the music yet it would never fit into our placid, homely England. I cannot imagine Harry Warren or Tom Durden dancing in or on the cider press. I cannot imagine their young men and maidens holding high carnival. It is much more English to sit in the dim old barn and watch them slowly and soberly following their ancient craft.

Members of the Eggleton W.M.S. and W.A. journeyed to Stirling on Friday afternoon for the December meeting which was held at the home of Mrs. Russell Stapley, who has recently moved to Stirling. Meeting opened with quiet music with Mrs. Raymond Chambers at the piano. The worship period was conducted by Mr. Stewart, Mrs. Bruce Stapley and Mrs. Warren Harlow.

A duet, "No Room at the Inn", was sung by Mrs. R. Stapley and Mrs. C. Fitchett with Mrs. Harold West playing their accompaniment. Offering was received and Birthday Bank opened, proceeds $4.72. It was decided that the January meeting be held at the home of Mrs. Clarence Fitchett, with the annual membership tea; Mrs. Carl Brydges to prepare the program.

Mr. Stewart gave a splendid Christmas message. A solo "The Birthday of a King," by Mrs. H. West was greatly enjoyed.

Mrs. Bruce Stapley then read a short address and Mrs. C. Brydges, on behalf of the W.M.S., presented Mrs. Russell Stapley with two china cups and saucers. Mrs. Stapley graciously thanked her friends. Meeting closed with a hymn and Mizpah Benediction. The hostess served dainty refreshments.

Rawdon

Y.P.U. ENTERTAINED

Rawdon (Special)—On Thursday, December 12th., the Two-by-Two Club, Mount Pleasant, entertained the Young People's Union. Mrs. Raymond McConnell and her group decorated the church hall with evergreens, colored lights and streamers, and a nicely decorated Christmas tree. This made an appropriate setting for the service despite the dark and rainy evening.

The president of the club, Mr. Orno Sharp, welcomed the guests and announced the hymn, "O Little Town of Bethlehem," followed with prayer by the pastor. Plans were made for a Sunday evening meeting on December 29th. at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Herb Smith and a week night meeting in January at the hall.

Mrs. Raymond McConnell then presided and Mrs. Herb Smith read the Bible lesson. A Christmas carol was sung and Mrs. Sidmer Demorest gave a devotional paper on "The Meaning of Christmas."

Mr. R. G. Paul, who is in charge of the National Film Board films, delighted with an assortment of pictures which opened with Stephen Foster's songs, Canadian Screen Magazine No. 7, Canada marches on with her army as the troops prepare for difficult assignment; "School for Canadians", Veteran Housing, "Power Valley and Industry", "Making Mankind One Family," marching all together depicting 80 different nationalities all linked together to make God's world, "Welcome to New Canadians," "The Eskimo and Muskox Expeditions of 1944 and 1945" and many other pictures proved intensely interesting.

Between the showings Mrs. Carleton Potts sang "A White Christmas" with Miss Betty McConnell as accompanist.

Mrs. Will Jeffs delighted with two Christmas selections on her guitar. Mrs. Herb Smith conducted a contest for supper partners. Rev. N. Cole was in charge of a humorous skit assisted by Messrs. Orno Sharp and Herb Smith. The club served refreshments, sandwiches, cake, tarts, and coffee and Miss Audrey Robson and Mr. Ralph Jeffs voiced the appreciation of the Y.P.U.

Personals

Mr. James Seeney had the misfortune on Saturday to fracture his leg while at Gilmour and is now a patient in the Belleville General Hospital.

Rawdon friends were sorry to hear of the illness of Mr. C. W. Heath of Bethel.

A large number of friends and relatives attended the funeral of Mrs. Sam Kirkey at Bethel United Church on Wednesday afternoon.

Little Benny's Note Book

Ma was looking at the radio page in the paper, saying to pop, My, what an embarrassment of riches. I feel I should listen to something with a Chrissmas flavor, but every program seems to have a Chrissmas flavor tonight, she said.

You might keep twiddling the dial and treet yourself to a holliday medley, pop said, and ma said, After all, Chrissmas is the proverbial season of childhood, so perhaps I ought to listen to Carmelita Kelly recite "The Night Before Chrissmas" on the Popping Particles Breakfist Food show. Just imagine, William, that little gerl gets a check for 2 thousand dollers every week, and she's not even old enough to be able to read, ma said.

All my simpethy goes out to her, pop said, and ma said, and then there's the Hillbilly Gerls Chorus.

Unfortunately, pop said, and ma said, They're to sing Chrissmas carrels accompanied by a full symfunny orkester. My, I dont think I ought to miss that. What do you think, William, she said.

Let your conscience be your guide, pop said. After all, if you dont tune in on Carmelite Kelly, a busy child like that might never get to hear of it, he said, and ma said, Still and all, I'd hate to miss the Baffle Hour's special Chrissmas program. It's called The Dog Show Merder, she said.

PHILLIP OF GREECE HELPS ROYAL PRINCESSES

Prince Phillip of Greece, rumored about to be engaged to Princess Elizabeth (right), helps Princess Margaret Rose remove her wrap at Romsey Abbey where all three were guests at the recent Mountbatten wedding.

Where the dooce is the Chrissmas spirrit in that? pop said, and ma said, Why, they're going to present a Chrissmas stocking full of the most expensive gifts to the contestant who comes the closest to solving the merder mistery correctly just before the final explination. Isn't that a wonderfully appropriate idea for the Chrissmas week Baffle Hour? she said.

Yee gods, let the bells ring out, pop said.

Meening the Baffle Hour.

Which ma did.

Looking Ahead in Ottawa

(By the Ottawa Staff of The Canadian Press)

Ottawa, Dec. 23 (CP)—Prime Minister Mackenzie King will spend Christmas Day quietly at his home at Laurier House.

With most of the cabinet away, the Prime Minister will take it easy, opening gifts like any other Canadian and sitting by the hearthside with Pat II, an Irish terrier. Just entering his 73rd year, Mr. King anticipates Christmas dinner with turkey and all the trimmings.

John Bracken, Progressive Conservative leader, and M. J. Coldwell, C.C.F. leader, will spend Christmas in Ottawa. It was expected that Solon Low, leader of the Social Credit Party, would celebrate at his home in Cardston, Alta.

Members of the cabinet who have not established residence here planned to return home. External Affairs Minister St. Laurent will go to Quebec, Health Minister Martin to Windsor, Transport Minister Chevrier to Cornwall; Trade Minister Mackinnon to Edmonton, and Postmaster General Bertrand to Montreal.

Also going to Montreal are Finance Minister Abbott and Solicitor-General Jean. Works Minister Fournier will spend the day at his home in Hull, Que., State Secretary Gibson will go to Hamilton; Fisheries Minister Bridges to Fredericton and Revenue Minister McCann to Renfrew.

Staying in Ottawa will be Agriculture Minister Gardiner, Veterans Minister Mackenzie; Reconstruction Minister Howe; Defence Minister Claxton; Resources Minister Glen; and Justice Minister Ilsley.

Labor Minister Mitchell, who has been holidaying in the West Indies, is expected to return to Ottawa Christmas Eve.

Help—The work of the Trade and Commerce Department was not sufficiently heavy during the war years to warrant the appointment of a parliamentary assistant to Trade Minister MacKinnon, but now that trade is beginning to swing back to peacetime channels it is likely the Minister will be given some assistance with his parliamentary duties.

The man being mentioned as a likely assistant to the minister on the floor of the Commons is Rene Beaudoin, Liberal member for the Quebec constituency of Vaudreuil-Soulanges.

Mr. Beadoin, 34, is a lawyer. He is well-known in Montreal as a former radio commentator. He speaks French, English and Spanish fluently, and it is believed his knowledge of the languages would be particularly useful in trade with South American countries.

2nd Thurlow

2nd. Thurlow—The December meeting of the Neighbors' Aid was held at the home of Mrs. E. Shymbyshyn on Wednesday for a pot luck dinner. About 25 were present to enjoy all the good things provided by the hostess and Aid members. Mrs. A. Mitchell was in charge of the meeting. Plans were made to fill boxes for the shut-ins with the money made from the euchre held at Mrs. Conners. Mrs. E. Leeming, Mrs. R. Mitchell, Mrs. A. Greatrix, Mrs. E. Vivian handed in 13 pairs pyjamas and some children's nighties they had made for Red Shield. Mrs. Craig reported handing in the quilt recently completed for Red Shield. Mrs. Gray reported she had got an electric table lamp and pictures with money given her from the Aid for a family who lost their home by fire. A quilt was quilted during afternoon for Mrs. Shymzyshyn to send with other articles of clothing to relatives in Poland, who lost all their possessions during the war. Thanks was expressed to the hostess by the president for opening her home for this meeting.

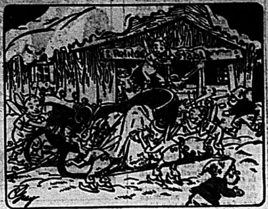
The Little People of Santa Claus Land

The Little People of Santa Claus Land



Gay Little Elves and Happy Little Dwarves fix Santa Claus' sleigh.

EDITOR'S NOTE — These stories, written for the children, will find a place in the hearts of their elders—who, like adults around the world, enjoy reliving the fantasy that Santa Claus and his land of "little people" spells.

By JANE NILES, Central Press Staff Writer

EPISODE FOUR

EVERY LITTLE CHILD KNOWS that on Christmas Eve Santa Claus climbs into his sleigh and drives his reindeer over the housetops to leave beautiful presents for all the little girls and all the little boys. Of course, every child knows that!

What most children don't know is the great amount of work it takes before Santa can start his big trip.

First of all, the Gay Little Elves have their job. They must paint Santa's sleigh bright red, so it will be new and shining for the trip. They see that all the bells ring just right so that Santa will have lovely Christmas music to keep him jolly on his trip. And they brush off the shiny leather seat and shake out Santa's white furry robe that he carries to keep his knees warm.

While the Gay Little Elves are busy with the sleigh, over in the stables the Happy Little Dwarves are getting the reindeer ready for the trip.

All of Santa's reindeer must look their best for the trip. The Happy Little Dwarves brush the reindeer's coats until they are smooth as satin. Then they polish up the reindeer's antlers, and sprinkle gold dust all over them.

This gold dust is what shines in the moonlight when the reindeer race through the sky carrying Santa and his sleigh. After the antlers are all sparkling, the Happy Little Dwarves fit the very special golden shoes on the reindeer's feet. The tiny golden shoes are built just especially for Christmas Eve landings on rooftops—to make sure there will be no slipping.

While the Gay Little Elves fix up the sleigh, and the Happy Little Dwarves get the reindeer ready, the Merry Little Muncheons are as busy as they can be over behind Toy Factory Row. They are making the great big bag that Santa will need to carry all the toys on his trip.

First the Merry Little Muncheons lay a big piece of cloth on the ground. Then each Merry Little Muncheon takes a needle and starts hemming the edge of the big piece of cloth. This is to make a hole through which they will string the big cord to tie the bag.

When the big piece of cloth is all hemmed, the teeniest, weeniest Merry Little Muncheon picks up one end of the big cord and crawls into the hole. He crawls and crawls until he has gone all the way around the hole that was left when all the Merry Little Muncheons finished hemming.

It takes the teeniest, weeniest Merry Little Muncheon a long, long time to get clear around the big piece of cloth, but when he finally comes out—there are all the Merry Little Muncheons to cheer him.

Now, all the Merry Little Muncheons catch up both ends of the big cord. And they pull and they pull. Finally they have the bag half closed, and this is when Tinkle Bell, Santa's personal private secretary, comes around to help.

As Tinkle Bell reads off Santa's list of toys for every little boy and every little girl in the world, the Merry Little Muncheons drop them into the big bag.

Soon the bag is full, and the Merry Little Muncheons pick up the cord once more. This time they pull and they pull and they pull—and presto!—Santa's Christmas bag of toys is all ready.

The sleigh is painted, the reindeer prancing in the stable, the bag of toys is full—everything is ready for Santa Claus' Christmas journey.

Oh, but there is one thing more!

How could anyone forget about Santa's dearest helper — why, that's Mrs. Claus, of course. Over at Santa's house, Mrs. Claus has brushed his bright red coat. She has shined his big black boots. She has polished his bright metal buttons. And right now she's combing his beautiful white whiskers.

Santa is sitting there chuckling, because he knows he is a fortunate man to have so much wonderful help—Tinkle Bell and the Wee Tiny Fairies, all the Gay Little Elves, all the Merry Little Muncheons, all the Happy Little Dwarves and, best of all, Mrs. Claus.

Yes, Santa is chuckling. For he knows his Little People—and Mrs. Santa, too—have the Christmas spirit. You see, they know that by making others happy is the very best way to be happy themselves!

NEXT—The Chimney Stretcher.

Party at the White House

(By C. B. D. in Christian Science Monitor)

"What's it like to go to dinner at the White House?"

So many people ask that question that we felt you would be interested in a wide-eyed account.

Engraved at the top of the card of invitation—a square of oyster-white cardboard—is a golden eagle which declares "E Pluribus Unum" and states "The President and Mrs. Truman request the pleasure of the company of Mr. and Mrs. John Doe at dinner on Tuesday evening, November 26, 1946, at eight o'clock." Next, a smaller card says, "Please send response to The Social Secretary, The White House, at your earliest convenience." (We did). Then a third card says "Mr. and Mrs. John Doe will please present this card at the East Gate . . Not Transferable." Well, this was one invitation we certainly couldn't or wouldn't transfer, and so we put on our best — we had a choice of tux, or tails on account of shortages—and went to the party.

The occasion was a formal dinner to half the diplomatic corps, chosen on a basis of seniority of service in Washington, to open the social season in the Capital.

Strictly on time, we were waved in through the Gate nearest the Treasury Department, gave up our entrance ticket at the door of the White House, walked along a broad short corridor past an office desk and some stuffed old brown leather furniture, checked our wraps, and climbed some low broad steps to the second floor. Here we went along a broad corridor at right angles to the previous one, were shown the seating plan and picked up the envelope marked for my gentlemanly escort. Within was a small-scale map of the seating plan.

Armed with the map and displaying a fortitude we weren't sure we felt, we continued our trek and were given an exceedingly friendly grin from Capt. William Santleman as we passed his famous Marine Band which plays for the Gridiron Club dinners. At the entrance to the East Room, the Head Usher announced us to the world at large in no uncertain terms; an Aide showed us to our exact places in the line forming single file around the room and many cordial friend of The Christian Science Monitor made us feel at home. When all guests had arrived, the band struck up "Hail to the Chief" and the President and Mrs. Truman came to stand in the entrance. The guests filed by and were presented.

We sauntered out to dinner along a gantlet of friendly aides. I went out on the arm of the majestic-looking former Ambassador Grew.

The state dining room was impressive, its white panels gleaming, its white candles glowing, the sequins on the ladies' gowns adding an occasional spark to the atmosphere, and the conversation being friendly and easy and noncontroversial.

Dinner was not elaborate —a clear soup, a fish course with a dab of fluted cucumber and minced beets, an entree of turkey, stuffing, gravy, mashed potato, Mexican creamed corn, and very impressive string beans, each bean neatly pointing due north and south in the serving dish (no mean feat when feeding most a hundred people). Then we had a salad of molded fresh fruit; ice-cream cake, half chocolate, half vanilla, and a bit of angel food cake to go with it. There were three kinds of wine if you wanted it; and water if you didn't And a take-homeable place card.

We were seated too far "below the salt" to get a good view of the center of the horseshoe; but nearer observers told us of a gold-mirrored plaque with a fringe of nymphs, and matching candelabra, compotes and epergnes which President Monroe went shopping for in France. The flat silver, dipped in gilt at Mrs. Harding's request, to match the Monroe service, had the seal on some of it and the words "President's House" on the rest. The low mounds of flowers were lovely—white and pink crysanthemums, deep pink carnations and green ferns. Oh, I forgot to say the china was selected by President Roosevelt (F. D. R., that is.)

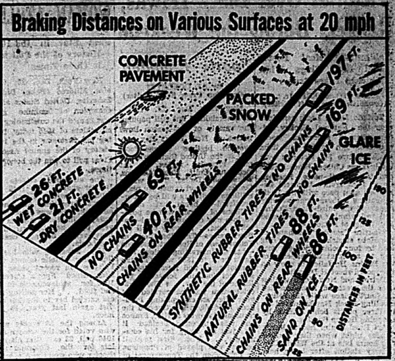
We were really quite a sight and even the two newspaper men were invited by protocol: Thomas F. Reynolds of the Chicago Sun as President of the State Department Correspondents Association and my husband as President of Overseas Writers. Carleton D. Smith, veteran Washington commentator of the National Broadcasting Company, represented the radio.

Ex-Ambassador Grew was, of course, on my left and was in great good spirits. I reminded him of a tea he had given a group of editors and publishers some years back in Japan and we matched a three-week visit with a stay of more than three times that number of years. On my right was the charge d'affaires de Roumanie. With him I had the laugh of the evening. Turning to him I asked in careful English, "Are you hungry?" "No! No!" he cried hastily, "Not Hungary, but Roumanie!" and presented his calling card.

After dinner the company separated—the ladies sitting about in the Red Room with Mrs. Truman in dignified black velvet and an orchid, chatting with us; and the men standing about in the Green Room and Mr. President chatting with them. We joined forces again in the Blue Room and then, for a neat little program to round out the evening, we sat in the East Room on little gilt chairs and listened to little Miss Sylvia Zaremba play the golden piano. She played a Cat and Mouse number which her fifteen years found fun in and the Blue Danube with, we conjectured, more trills than even a certain other pianist could achieve. The one pianist was then congratulated by the other; and this was the signal for our departure at about 10:45. As we said thank you and good-bye, President Truman said he would see us soon again at the Gridiron Dinner.

WINTER WEATHER BIG FACTOR IN CANADA'S TRAFFIC ACCIDENTS

DON'T SKID YOURSELF!



Braking Distances on Various Surfaces at 20 mph

New winter accident facts based on research and tests reveal alarming increase of skidding and poor visibility crashes during snowy, icy weather. Authorities urge Canadians to use tire chains, equalized brakes, windshield wipers, defrosters, good lights and lower speeds to minimize added hazards — inadequate stop-and-go traction on snow or ice and reduced visibility. The above guide on average braking distances for automobiles on different road surfaces is based on nearly 4,000 tests made by the committee on winter driving hazards of the National Safety Council. (Total stopping distances are 22 feet more than each of the average braking distances shown in above chart because it takes the average motorist three-quarters of a second to react and apply brakes after seeing reason to stop, and this means 22 feet at 20 miles per hour.)

LOSES YEAR SENIORITY

Halifax, Dec. 21 (CP)—A navy court martial yesterday found Lieut. E. G. T. Fisher, 26-year-old Victoria naval officer, guilty of negligence in the stranding of the mine-sweeper Middlesex Lieut. Fisher, who admitted an error in navigation when his ship, steaming to help a distressed fishing vessel, went 44 degrees off course and grounded off Halifax harbor, was sentenced to loss of one year's seniority as lieutenant in the Royal Canadian Navy (Reserve).

Leafs Chalk up Two 3 to 1 Victories Over Black Hawks, Rangers During the Weekend

Habitants Defeat Boston and Red Wings While Chicago Takes Bruins

By VIC MORRIS Jr.
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto Maple Leafs remained atop the National Hockey ladder after a successful weekend campaign which saw them chalk up two 3-1 victories over the luckless Chicago Black Hawks and the fourth-place Rangers. Coach Dick Irvin's Montreal Canadiens kept pace with the Leafs by halting a three-game winning streak of the third-place Bruins, 5-1, and winning over the jinxed Red Wings at Detroit, 4-2.

Maurice "Rocket" Richard of the Habs stretched his scoring lead by four points adding a goal and an assist at the expense of the Bruins. He failed to show on the record sheet at Detroit.

Detroit and New York, winless over the weekend, remained tied for fourth place while the cellar-dwelling Black Hawks moved up to three points behind them by dropping Boston Sunday.

Art Ross' Bruins had to hustle Sunday night when they arrived two hours late at the Windy City railway station after being held up by a transportation snag. Dressed in their hockey togs, the Bruins were met by a police escort who whisked them out to the rink where 16,000 fans cheered their belated arrival.

The loop resumes play Christmas Day with all teams engaged. The Canucks visit Broadway while Leafs will be guests of the Red Wings and Chicago make the trip to Boston. A win by Canucks on Christmas will put the Leafs on the spot as they face the Habs in Montreal the following night.

Sports Roundup

By AL COLLETTI
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New York, Dec. 23. (CP)—Commercialized but still popular, the variety of post-season Bowl games on New Year's Day may provide bigtime college football in the United States with its most lucrative melon. . . At Pasadena, Calif., New Orleans, Miami and Dallas, Tex., where the leading Bowl games are play-millions of dollars will be pour-predicted—a boom that means millions of dollars will be poured into city coffers by bowl-conscious fans. . . Daddy of all the Bowl games—The Rose Bowl or Tournament of Roses at Pasadena—has an interesting history that dates back to 1889 when Roman chariot races and floral displays and not football formed the theme of the day. . . The floral celebration was inaugurated that year after an enterprising Pasadena resident, who witnessed the carnival of flowers at Nice, France and was impressed, decided it was just the thing for his community. . . The first football contest was played at Pasadena in 1902 when the Tpurnament of Roses Association suggested an east-west game to entertain the spectators who came to see the city's Winter display of flowers.

Hurry-up Killed it for 14 Years

The late Fielding (Hurry Up) Yost brought his point-a-minute Michigan team to the coast for that first battle and his great eleven ran wild over Stanford 49-0 . . . Football then lapsed in the Tournament of Roses for 14 years coming back on New Year's Day 1916 to stay. . .Now the Rose Bowl, played before almost 100,000 is the No. 1 U.S. post-season attraction with approximately $400,000 divided among the competing teams and the sponsors. . .this year it will be Illinois against unbeaten University of California at Los Angeles. . .While the football game is the main course of the Tournament of Roses the week-long floral show is still a prime attraction. . .

Heavy Sugar in New Orleans

The Sugar Bowl has turned what once was one of the dullest periods for hotels and other businesses into a bonanza as visitors pour into the city for a gala sports week climaxed by the New Year's Day Classic. . . This year about 73,000 fans will see undefeated and untied Georgie play North Carolina with each team getting about $80,000 when the gate receipts, expected to hit $250,000 are sliced . . . The first Sugar Bowl game was played on Jan. 1, 1935 when Tulane bested Temple 14-0 . . . The Sugar Bowl derived its name from Lower Louisiana whose vast cane field have been referred to as "The Sugar Bowl of America".

Orange Bowl

A Miami Chamber of Commerce-inspired group started the Orange Bowl 15 years ago but it flopped in its first game in 1933 when only 3,500 fans saw Miami upset Manhattan 7-0 . . . . . Now the annual Miami game is considered choice picking for bowl-minded teams with some 35,000 expected to watch Tennessee against Rice. . .An estimated $40,000 of the anticipated $180,000 will go to each competing eleven. . .

Classic Of The Weevil Belt

The Cotton Bowl at Dallas, Texas, provides a tidy bale to colleges and is perennial sell-out. . . A New Year's Day crowd of some 46,000 will see Arkansas and Louisiana State battle it out for a gate of approximately $275,000 . . . The Cotton Bowl was organized in 1937 by a Dallas oil operator and provides each team with about $45,000 . . .Today it is the only Bowl game controlled entirely by an organization of colleges—the Southwest Conference.

BABE DIDRIKSON OUTSTANDING WOMAN ATHLETE

First Star in the 16-Year History of the Poll to Win it Three Times

New York, Dec. 23. (AP)—Mrs. Mildred (Babe) Didrikson Zaharias, United States amateur champion of feminine golfers, was named the outstanding woman athlete of 1946 today, becoming the first star in the 16-year history of the annual Associated Press poll to win the honor three times.

The all-round athlete from Denver shared the 1946 sports spotlight with Glenn Davis, army's three-time All-American halfback, who was selected Saturday as the No. 1 athlete of the year by a healthy margin over heavyweight boxing champion Joe Louis.

Mrs. Zaharias, who has confined her athletic talents to the Fairways in recent years, was first named Sports Queen in 1932 for achievements in track and field. . . Her golfing prowess carried her to the top of the list again last year, 13 years later.

Among the 58 sports writers who voted for the women in the 1946 poll, 33 cast first place ballots for the Colorado sharpshooter who won the All-America women's open tournament this year as well as the women's national amateur title.

She was ranked first, second, or third on all except four of the ballots, polling 15 second place votes and six for third. On the usual basis of three points for a first place vote, two for second and one for third, she wound up with a total of 135 points, more than twice as many as her closest competitor.

Pauline Betz of Los Angeles, who reached the peak of her tennis career to win both the United States and Wimbledon championships, finished second in the voting with 10 first place votes and a total of 61 points.

Ann Curtis of San Francisco, holder of 400, 800 and 1,500 metre free-style swimming titles, also drew ten first place votes but her total of 53 points left her in third place. She was named the No. 1 feminine athlete in 1944 and was runner-up to Mrs. Zaharias last year.

Chips Off The Sports Block

By George H. Carver, Sports Editor

That live wire organization that has done and is doing so much for the youth, especially the younger children of the city, the Quinte Skating Club has not been letting the grass grow under its collective skates, despite the fact that it has met with varying disappointments along the line.

Last season's plans called for a covered skating arena but the bugbear of shortage of building material due to housing conditions throughout the country has temporarily knocked this dream on the head.

But energetic members have not been idle. The grounds have been levelled, repaired and the clubhouse now presents an attractive appearance with renovation both inside and out. A brand new heating unit has been installed and larger water service secured so as to take care of a new proposed larger skating surface.

The club is a genuine asset to the city with its facilities and accommodation for skaters, especially the young children. It is one of these organizations that is doing a real effort along community lines and as such is worthy of all the support it can get. Parents as well as those who like outdoor skating would do well to let their children join this club or better yet join it themselves.

Definite hours of skating have been arranged with various times allotted to junior and senior members. Plans now call for the services of an expert instructor and if he or she can be secured there will be definite periods of instruction for those who like figure skating.

Expert supervision has been arranged for and parents need have no qualms as to the well-being of their skating offspring while at the club.

The Quinte Skating Club is a bone fide member of the Canadian Figure Skating Association, and is a voting member of that organization. Applications have been made to the parent body for the services of a professional, but in any event an instructor from another club will be on hand at various times throughout the season if the pros are not available.

The colorful ice pageants iced by the club during the past decade have always been one of the outstanding winter events of the city. This year, it is expected, the show will be bigger and better than ever with some of the country's finest figure skating talent being brought here.

The Quinte Club should be commended on its efforts to afford clean wholesome recreation for the people and children of the city and district, and as has been said before, it is deserving of the support, in all phases, not only of individuals but of the community as a whole.

That appetising aroma of roast turkey, that floated out over Maple Leaf Gardens from the tonsils of sportswriters who had previously enjoyed the annual Yule dinner, must have had a devitalising effect on the members of the Leafs hockey squad on Saturday night.

For in that first chukker the high-flying Leafs had about as much ambition as a Zanzibar gent at high noon in July and seemed to be enveloped in a lethargic coma that smacked of near anaesthesia. As a matter of fact the Chi Hawks weren't much better and about the thirteen minute mark the customers stifled their yawns and opened amazed eyes when Red Hamill slyly poked the puck past Turk Broda for the only tally of the period.

The Leafs however snapped out of their holiday siesta in the second heat and went on to score a couple of tallies and Syl Apps completed the defeatheration of the Hawks in the final act with their third goal of the evening.

But the Maplees, tired from travel and a bit leg weary staged a Merriwell comeback in Gotham last night to whip Rangers 3-1 and maintain their two point advantage over Les Canadiens who likewise helped themselves to a brace of weekend wins over the Wings and the Bruins. Turk Broda was the hero of the piece down N'Yawk way, sending the Rangers back reeling time after time with a brilliant exhibition.

Perc Cole, former star newspaperman of this city, Toronto and Montreal and now head public relations bloke for the C.P.R. down east won't forget this Christmas, according to Andy (Montreal Standard) O'Brien. Perc it seems was appointed caretaker for the Toronto Press Club's Yuletide gifts, a flock of hungry gobblers on the hoof.

Perc holed up the gobblers in his garage and started to study bird diets. He tried everything including corn flakes, hors d'ouvres, slightly worn cocktail, olives, soda crackers and old postage stamps. But the turks pulled a hunger strike until Perc offered them steamed shredded wheat sprinkled with sugar, boiled grapefruit, and nut sundaes.

It was the profound relief that he finally delivered them to the press club. Yeah, you guessed it—he won a live turkey and had to bring it back home.

Ray (Sugar) Robinson wore the welterweight crown today after waiting five years and five rounds, but time and a scrawny Negro named Tommy Bell disproved the myth that he was a miniature Joe Louis. "Uncrowned king of the welterweights" was what they dubbed the slim Harlem dy-dynamiter but Friday for 3 rounds he was not even a good crown prince.

The crowd was cheering violently, hungry sounds which roared through the rafters as Bell chared Robinson about the ring. They came to see a killer tiger and they were seeing him tamed by a wasp-waisted man with a silly little moustache and a left hook which whistled against Robinson's jaw. For five rounds Robinson came up with glowing bruises on his face and confusion in his eyes. The crowd rored for the underdog.

Then came the sixth and from then to the 15th. Robinson regained his newspaper fury. He tore into the foe with everything he had, until Bell just stood there in sheer guts and refused to go down.

What's Doing in Sport

(By The Canadian Press)

Tennis history will be made at Melbourne next Thursday when for the first time in a quarter of a century, a two-man team, John (Jake) Kramer and Ted Schroeder, will represent the United States in the challenge round against Australia. The two Americans will play all four singles matches and pair in the doubles in an effort to wrest the prized trophy from the Aussies. Four other members of the U.S. Davis Cup squad—Frank Parker, Gardnar Mulloy, Bill Talbert and Tom Brown Jr., apparently travelled all the way to Australia just for the ride, and are reported to be somewhat annoyed at the decision of Walter Pate, non-playing U.S. captain.

Schroeder, unranked in the latest U.S. singles rankings, reached the finals of the Victorian tournament recently only to lose out to Australia's No. 1 star, John Bromwich.

Cornelius McGillicuddy (Connie Mack) the perennial Philadelphia Athletics baseball manager with 53 seasons in that job behind him, will celebrate his 84th birthday today at Hollywood.

Motion Picture Magnate Louis B. Mayer has purchased the great Australian race horse Bernborough for stud purposes. Bernborough, will stand in Kentucky.

A school high-score record was set Saturday night at Buffalo when the University of Buffalo basketball team downed a McMaster University team by a score of 92-29. The Hamilton College team was badly outclassed.

Lake Placid Roamers, recently acquired as a farm team by New York Rangers, captured two week-end games from a Rideau, Ont., team by scores of 10-5 and 13-3. The games were played at Lake Placid.

Montreal, Dec. 23 — (CP) — The future prospects and possibilities of Jackie Robinson are being mulled over in Montreal again after last week's visit of Branch Rickey. The "Mahatma" and entrepreneur general of the Brooklyn baseball empire was very cautious about the whole thing. The Negro star of last season's Montreal Royals will have to fight for whatever he gets against the toughest of competition and can't expect any special favors, the Mahatma intimated.

He likes Robinson's style, thinks he's a great natural team player and that he would be a great help to any club with which he serves. Rickey also thinks Robinson could move from his second base spot to any other infield position and play it "in big league style."

But, first of all he will have to beat out the other hopefuls for the job — third base looks most likely on the daffy Dodger squad —and Montreal fandom just now is pulling for the likeable southern lad when he gets his chance at the Brooks' spring training camp.

Hockey War

With fuses popping all over the place in the case of the vanishing Ottawa Senators hockey stars, amateur and pro interests at one another's throats and the possibility of a new minor pro loop for Canada looking larger in the offing, the balance of this season and the 1947-48 whirligig have the makings of a fiesta to please the fans.

And underneath it all is a slight hint of more than a minor vendetta between Tommy Gorman and his old bosses of the Montreal Arena Company and the Canadiens of the N.H.L. when the Senators management offered to put up $10,000 as part of a $20,000 fund to reimburse the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association for funds professional teams would normally pay to sign up players from the amateur squads, T. P. suggested the Montreal interests might very well kick in a good sum out of the $100,000 he says they made out of amateur hockey last season when he was at the helm.

So far there haven't been any bites, but it's a cinch T. P. won't stop there. The intimitable Gorman is more than a trifle interested in the new minor pro loop, and if he can get it organized and on a sound basis it will prove Senior Hockey League of which Montreal Royals are prominent members.

At that, it might solve Ottawa's problems, since a pro team would have its players tied up by iron-clad contracts instead of the loose amateur-professional affairs that exist now, and leave the alleged Simon Pures wide open for player losses like the recent ones at Ottawa.

LOUIS TO VISIT MEXICO IN FEB.

New York, Dec. 23 (AP)—Latin Americans soon will get a chance to see heavyweight champion Joe Louis in action.

The Brown Bomber is due in Mexico City Feb. 5 to box an exhibition, possibly against Chilean Arturo Godoy, and then will give demonstrations of his prowess in four-rounders in a number of Central and South American cities.

The champ expects to wind up the junket in mid-March and then return to the U.S.

After a brief rest, Louis may make a tour of England and Europe with possible trips to Australia, South Africa, an the Philippines.

PLA-MORS BOUNCE OUT OF CELLAR WITH TWO WINS

Kansas City Team Shovels in 19 Goals Against Omaha and Tulsa

(By The Canadian Press)

The revitalized Kansas City Pla-Mors bounced out of the United States hockey league's Northern Division cellar into a third-place tie with St. Paul during the weekend by breaking Omaha's old jinx and handing Tulsa Oilers their worst defeat in two seasons.

The Pla-Mors shovelled 19 goals into the net trouncing Omaha 9-6 Saturday and Tulsa 10-2 last night. It was Kansas City's first victory over Omaha this season, although they tied twice.

Wingy Johnson and Butch McDonald each tallied twice in leading the assault on Tulsa.

They were backed up by John Harms, Baldwin, Powell, Laurie Silvestri, Dick Butler, and Bert Olmstead with one tally each. Johnny Ubriaco brought home both Tulsa counts.

In another league game last night, the Minneapolis Millers, paced by Leo Gasparini with two counts, grabbed an early lead hung onto it downing Houston Skippers 5-2.

Marcel Dheere and Eddie Young chalked up the Skippers counts while Tom Forgie, Roy Kelly and R. T. Strobel were responsible for the other Minneapolis tallies.

Fort Worth snapped a seven-game losing streak by taking a 4-1 decision from the hot Dallas team which had won five straight. Fort Worth scored once in the first period on a shot by Fred Weaver, L. Smake counted for Dallas. Then the teams battled on even terms until midday through the last stanza when pucks from the sticks of Andie Brown, Alex Ritson, and Stan Jones found the net.

Don Morrison slammed in two consecutive third-period goals to lead a five goal rally sending Omaha to a 6-4 victory over St. Paul. Joe Ianarelli, Bernie Strongman, Sullivan and Winky Smith also scored for the Knights. For the Saints Cliff Pupur counted twice and Bob Dew and Nakina Smith once each.

In Saturday night's other encounters Dallas topped Minneapolis 3-0 and Houston tied 4-4 with Tulsa.

FORM NEW "A" LOOP

Boston, Dec. 23 (AP)—The Atlantic Coast League, a new and compact class "A" baseball circuit with major league owned or supported teams in eight New England cities will begin operations in the 1948 season it was announced today.

Claude B. Davidson, President of the class "B" New England League said he has been organizing cities in the old Eastern League area and has received assurances that the Providence and Pawtucket clubs would transfer from the New England to the Atlantic Coast.

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

Dream hands awaken your interest in a bridge deal. But not for long, as a rule. After they have been bid, the sparkle fades. They usually turn out to be the easiest hands to play.

They asked me to analyze this fruity pair of hands:

North	South
♠ Q 8	♠ A K 9 7
♥ K 8 6 2	♥ A Q
♦ K Q 4	♦ A 5 2
♣ Q 9 8 2	♣ A K J 5

The bidding should go like this:

North	South
	1 S
2 NT	3 C
4 C	5 NT
6 H	7 NT
Pass

In answer to one spade, what would north have to respond with a jump no-trump? Figure out the high cards required by such a bid and you are on the road to a grand slam right now.

An opening of one in a suit shows five tricks. Four of them are guaranteed to be high cards (aces, kings, queens). Each high card is counted as one trick in no-trump. That it is.

A game in no-trump needs nine tricks. A jump response in the no-trump department promises enough high cards to make such a game. If opener says he has four of them, the jumper shows five.

How many high cards are in a pack? Only 12 of them. South has seven. Partner shows him five by the jump no-trump. All 12 high cards are known to be in their pair from where the south player sits.

All 12 high cards mean the four aces, four kings, four queens. South also has a jack. Add this jack to the 12 high cards and you can lay your hand down for a no-trump grand slam.

Six hearts was the convention reply to five no-trump. It is the signal for showing two kings. Was this information necessary? Naw. This was just horsing around.

The Movie Column

By HELEN BANNERMAN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New York has seen and applauded a movie of the wide open spaces in the great tradition of "Grass," which in 1925 set the pace for films glorifying magnificient landscape and man's place in it. The latest of these pictures is "The Overlanders," made by a British-Australian team in Australia.

About 95 per cent of the film was shot-out-of-doors in the almost uninhabited Northern Territory of Australia and the action was photographed with documentary clarity.

"Hero" is perhaps too strong a term for the role because the human members of the cast have to take second place not only to nature at its rawest and grandest, but also to 1,000 bullocks. The story is based on the real-life adventures of cattlemen who risked driving their herds across 1,600 miles of wild country rather than let them fall into Japanese hands. The anticipated Jap invasion did not come but the great treks continued through 1942.

The picture is no rootin', tootin' western. The vocabulary is strange but not hard to learn. The drovers (cowboys) carry bull whips, a herd is a "mob," a group of drovers is a "plant," and a water-hole is a "billabong."

The plot is simple: Boss drover Dan McAlpine played by Chips Rafferty, decides to overland his cattle rather than shoot them, gathers a group of drovers and the wife and daughters of one of them to help him and takes his bulolcks safely to pasture in Queensland, 1,600 miles away.

One of the most refreshing details is the substitution of natural country sounds for a musical background. The singing and chirping of insects, the cawing and screaming of Australian bird-life, windw in trees and rushes and the sounds of the cattle all contribute to the film in which the dominant sounds are those of galloping hooves and cracking bull whip.

Director Harry Watt, who made his name with the British documentary war pictures, "London Can Take it," and "Target For Tonight," used documentary methods in his Australian feature film. It stands high up in the semi-documentary class which also include "Western Approaches" and "48th Parallel."

AT THE CAPITOL — John Payne, Connie Marshall and Maureen O'Hara are to be seen in 20th. Century-Fox's "Sentimental Journey," the new hit now at the Capitol Theatre. On the same program the musical "Masquerade In Mexico," starring Dorothy Lamour and Arturo de Cordova. Matinee all this week at 2.15.

THE BIG SEVEN

(By The Canadian Press)

Maurice Richard of Montreal Canadiens notched two points during the week to increase his National Hockey League race total to 30 points, 17 goals and 13 assists, but Billy (The Kid) Taylor, Detroit, chalked up three points to end up two points behind Richard in an effort to recapture the leadership he held for more than the first six weeks of the season. Taylor, with nine and 19 for 28 points, is followed by Ted (Teeter) Kennedy, Toronto, who gathered an assist to hold third place with 26 points, 15 and 11. Milt Schmidt, Boston, has fourth berth with 11 and 14, for 25 points, an increase of four during the week. Roy Conacher Detroit, steadily slipping down the ladder, was held scoreless and is fifth with 24 points. Max Bentley Chicago is sixth with 23 points and Bobby Bauer, Boston, rounds out the first seven with 22 points.

Post-War Sports Boom Believed Past its Peak

London, Dec. 23 — (Reuters)— The post-war boom in Britain is believed by many people closely connected with sport to have passed its peak in at least two major sports — professional boxing and soccer.

There were empty seats when the British heavyweight boxing champion, Bruce Woodcock, defeated Nisse Andersson of Sweden at London's Harringay Arena last Tuesday although only a few weeks before fight fans were clamoring for tickets to any show.

The promoter of the Woodcock bill, Jack Solomons, will not hear of any suggestion that a slump is on the way. In fact, he insists the peak has yet to be reached.

Questioned about the empty seats he said they were to be expected in the week before Christmas.

"Although we haven't fixed a date for the Woodcock-Baksi fight, we have enough applications to guarantee £40,000 ($160,000) gate.

Only the time can prove whether Jolly Jack's rosy picture of the fight game in Britain is a true one.

In occer, attendance at league games topped the 1,000,000 mark, never before reached, week after week at the start of the season, but now average 20 per cent less.

BURNED FINGERS

By Kathleen Norris

CHAPTER 31

"Ah, but, Jenny, you're such a wonderful person, you're so sweet....No," Jim said decidedly, "the minute I leave you this afternoon I'll say to myself, 'It's all a dream; she's not for you. It isn't going to be your luck to get a girl that every man wants. Wake up!'"

"Every man has managed to conceal his feelings in his quiet early English way," Jennifer answered.

"Why 'early English,' darling?"

"I was thinking of the play."

"You were going to erudite on me again."

He had stopped the car; they were squared about facing each other, their hands gripped tightly, their adoring eyes close together.

"So," Jim said. "I go back to Pasadena. I'll try to get three or four days before I start for Baltimore, and I'll come up here and we'll announce it. Then I go on to John Hopkins and we write. I'm a rotten letter writer. That goes on for a year, unless, of course, I'm called." He paused, looked into space, scowling. "Gosh, a year," he said in an undertone. "Well, then I come back here and tie up with one or the other of these men here. We want to live here, don't we?"

It was all so deliciously definite; it made her breath come short.

"Oh yes. I'm sure we do. We want to be here."

"Atkins said something about wanting me in Sacremento," Jim went on. "And there's this advantage: he's an old man; he's seventy or close to it. And he's head of his hospital. So there'd be a chance that any day I might step in as head man there. Know anything about Sacramento?"

"No; nor about Gobi or James Bay either. But I'll go anywhere," Jennifer promised recklessly.

"What do you know about Gobi or James Bay?"

"Nothing; that's my capsule culture again," she confessed, laughing. "Monty told me that everyone said 'Kalamazoo' and 'Kamchatka' when it was a question of crazy places to go, and to pick a few unusual ones."

"I suppose," Jim said with a suddenly penetrating look, "you were in love with your Monty?"

"I wish you could see Monty. Bald, thin, forty-something," Jennifer answered, undisturbed.

"He was in love with you, of course?"

"If he was he never told me. He more or less—indicated it toward the end, I suppose," Jennifer said honestly. "Once he came close to saying it, I thought and then—that was why he went away so suddenly. He thought I was—well, carrying on with another man. An old friend of his, Stanislaus Lichtenstein. You know Jim, the violinist."

"I know the name. Russian."

"No born in America. But Russian-German background."

"And he fell in love with you?"

"For a moment. He wanted to give me a very pretty coat," Jennifer admitted demurely; "but I wouldn't take it, and he changed it for one for his wife."

"Oh, there was a wife." Jim's tone was one of relief, and Jennifer felt a little rush of admiratioin for him warm her very soul. If there was a wife, of course everything must be all right. "Did you like the wife?" he asked.

"I never met her. But Monty told me she is very nice."

"But yet he got mad at you for—what? Being friendly with this violinist?"

"It was the violinist who more or less lost his head—as I say, for the moment," Jennifer said, adding the last phrase indifferently. "I've not thought of him for months. But you're not jealous Jim," she went on more as a statement than a question.

"Im afraid I would be, Jen. I've never thought so before. But don't—don't ever give me cause to be. Don't make me unhappy." His tone was pleading, almost frightened.

"Never," she said simply, bringing her upraised face nearer his own. His arms went about her his lips were on hers; he said, as if the words were for the first time pronounced by the first man who ever loved a woman:

"I love you so much. I love you so much."

He did not come up to the city again. It was only a short time later that he had an opportunity to act as driver for the older doctor who would be one of his superiors in the Baltimore hospital on the long three thousand miles to the east, an opportunity too valuable to miss. Jennifer's letters urged him not to think of giving up such a chance to make a friend; it meant that they would know each other when Jim started on his hard first months; he would not be entirely among strangers.

This meant that for a year and a half they would not see each other. Jennifer counted the days and sent him an accurate calculation of them. Jim checked them off seriously one by one. He would head his letters; "91 days gone; 448 days to go."

Letters were not wholly satisfactory, but they were better than nothing. Jennifer grew extravagant; she indulged in correspondence papers delicately striped or crossbarred; she cut from the daily papers anything that might possibly interest him; she managed to see some of his hospital associates now and then to learn what gossip she could of the old hospital with which to amuse him. In reply his letters were less frequent, briefer, and less imaginative. But he never left her in any doubt of his feelings. Jennifer in his heart was already his wife.

She dared not write him that she was tired, blue, discouraged or that she had a cold or a cut finger. His instant anxious replies worried questioning would arrive when she had entirely forgotten the passing discomfort Jennifer saw much of Mollie and the babies and of the whole Evans group; she kept busy, read much, took long walks, beguiled this time of loneliness and waiting as best she could. And the months went by.

A teasing, chilling little thought had come to her often since the idyllic summer days when she and Jim had spashed in Fallen Leaf Lake, taken long rides through the woods, sat on the cabin steps in warm moonlight, or talked themselves into drowsy quiet about the evening fireplace.

At first she had been able to dismiss the thought peremptorily It was all nonsence. It was nobody's business but her own. Foolish to let oneself think of it.

But gradually it gained power. It came more and more often. It began to disturb her night's sleep, riding her like a torturing little imp. Reason as she would about it, it had to be given consideration and then more consideration. There was no saying "That's that" to it and dismissing it. The time came when Jennifer would have given anything in the world except Jim's love, Jim's respect, to be rid of it.

There was something in her own past that Jim did not know; that Jim had a right to know. There was a man named Sid Borrows in the world—indeed, in her immediate world—who had once loved her and whom she had loved recklessly in return.

Unimportant? Of course it was unimportant! Nobody made great shames and secrets in these days of an error a girl of eighteen might have made when she had been carried off her feet, swept far out to sea by the great breakers of her first love. Every newspaper, every magazine article on the subject stated frankly that undergraduate life in all the great colleges was a time of moral freedom for both from a weekly an honest state- girls and men; Jennifer cut from a weekly an honest statement of the case.

"Statistics show that few girls pass through college or early business years without occasional infractions of chasity," said this article, "and while not approved nor even countenanced by the authorities, these facts are recognized and it is conceeded that in most cases adolescent experiences of this type do not leave a permanently deletrious mark upon either the young man or woman nor prevent responsible and enduring martial relations in later years."

All very well. But none of it seemed to apply to her case. Her case was, simply that she felt that her own bitter "experience of this type" was something of which her husband should know and know before marriage and she did not know how to tell him. Once he knew, once he had said that it did not make the slightest difference in his feeling for her, then the blessed waters of relief and oblivion could close over the whole thing then she would not have a care in the world.

Walking down to the shop in the winter mornings, walking home in the cold gritty, windy dust, Jennifer mused upon the thing, half aloud, as if she was talking to Jim.

"No, it's not that. I don't in the least feel myself a Magdalen repentant and reformed. It's not that at all! I made my mistake and I paid for it in humiliation and tears—and I was eighteen. I'm twenty -four now; I've done a lot of living since then. I'm wise enough and strong enough to be any man's wife—perhaps all the wiser and stronger because I was such a fool! If a daughter of mine ever did what I did I'd know I'd been an inefficient mother, I hadn't given her the right values. Well, I didn't have a mother, I had Betty and she was good and kind, Gods knows, but she didn't know all the longings and the dreams and and the disappointments that were in my heart, how I wanted to go places and see things and have things happen to me! He was older and he was rich and he told me that he loved me—that was enough.

"Don't think I want you to open your arms, Jim, and say, 'My little soiled dove, all is forgiven!' You've made your mistakes too, done things, no doubt, You'd give your life to undo. I won't want to hear about them, but I want you to hear about this because we're starting honestly, we're going to try to build a different sort of marriage—all dignity and goodness. I think you've a right to know this about me; maybe you haven't, but whether you have or not you're going to know it. There isn't ever going to be any fear in my heart: 'Suppose Jim hears it.'

"Perhaps Sid and I are the only two persons who know it; perhaps he's forgotten it. Perhaps he's no more anxious to remember it than I am. If I thought that I think I'd keep my mouth shut. But there were elevator boys....waiters.. and Eugene's father knows, I had to tell him, after Eugene died, so he would understand. My God," Jennifer would say, stopping short in her walk, swallowing with a dry throat, "to have it never to have happened! To have it never to have happened!"

There was a friend of Mary Flood, a young childless wife, who used to come to the hospital Flood kitchen sometimes to sit and talk with Mary and her mother. Ellen Tighe had had her tragedy too. Most of the women who came to the Flood kitchen had know sorrow. Ellen was a young wife; her husband had been a year overseas with the Marines. When Harry Tighe had gone away there had been a splendid baby son—their only treasure, for Ellen had been dangerously ill when the child was born and there would be no more.

A few months after Hary's departure, busy in her kitchen, Ellen had heard an odd choking noise from the little pen where Joey was playing in the adjoining bedroom and had rushed out to find that he had drawn from the near-by sewing machine a length of strong wide tape and had tightened it about his seven-months-old throat.

The horror that had followed, the neighboring women telephoning for a doctor, vainly blowing into the limp little mouth, vainly working the dangling little arms, had all but upset Ellen mentally. She came to the Food kitchen for comfor; old Mrs. Flood had known her own heartbreaks and valleys of the shadow; she could tell Ellen that someday there would be peace and even laughter again

"If I'd looked in at him—if I'd thought how close the machine was!" Ellen would whisper, her eyes too dry to need the folded handkerchief that was always in one of her newly unoccupied, newly idle hands. "Oh, if you could go back! I was going to wheel him to market in ten minutes....I was folding his didies on the kitchen table—I could have done it in the bedroom....If I could just have that morning over, take the tape

If I could just have the morning over, take the tape away from his little hands as I'd taken bottles and corks and matches and dear knows what!"

Jennifer Richie looked on seriously when Ellen talked. She knew better than any of them did what that cry meant. "If I could only go back—have that time over!"

Sometimes her heart was young and happy enough to rise above the nagging little misgivings. She imagined herself saying briskly to Jim that she had been a fool about a much older man when she had been a little draggle-tailed, bewildered, discouraged office worker of eighteen.

"I'm never going to mention this again," sht would say. "So I want you to understand me. It hasn't anything to do with me— I am now, with the right clothes and friends and books and ambitions and hopes. I've cried and worried and agonized it all away; it's gone and I'm a different person. I love to go to church with Mary and I love to take long walks and write you show-off letters. ..."

Jewels of Duchess Maybe in Gems Those Recovered

London, Dec. 23. (AP)—The Daily Mail said today that some of the Duchess of Windsor's stolen jewels may be among gems "worth a fortune" that will be laid out for identification tomorrow at police headquarters in Aldershot.

The paper said that the jewels, which are believed to represent parts of hauls in nearly a score of "cat burglaries" perpetrated against London luxury flats, and country manors in the last few months, were found in a lonely shack in the middle of Hampshire Field.

Top Scotland Yard detectives who investigated the $80,000 Windsor robbery, have already been called in on the case.

It is "probable" that a representative of the Duke's solicitors will be among those invited to go through the inventory tomorrow, The Mail said.

The Mail said that Canadian military police are co-operating with Scotland Yard in a search for the users of the shack, on the assumption that a gang of soldiers may have been "operating" in a ring of big houses around the outskirts of London.

OSHAWA GENS AND MARLBOROS TIED FOR SECOND

St. Michael's Majors Leading Parade Eight Points Ahead of Other Two

(By The Canadian Press)

Toronto St. Michael's Majors of course were still topping the O.H.A. Junior "A" loop today, but the weekend games resulted in Oshawa Generals and Toronto Marlboro's driving into a tie for second place, eight points back of the eastern junior champs.

St. Mikes kept up their great scoring record with an 8-1 triumph over Barrie Flyers at Toronto Saturday, while Marlboros trimmed Windsor Spitfires 8-1 in a game that netted them four points.

Stratford Kroehlers beat St. Catharines Falcons 10-4 and Oshawa Generals edged the Galt Red Wings 7-6 in other week-end encounters. There were no senior games.

The seniors open the holiday week tonight with Hamilton Pats meeting Toronto Staffords at Maple Leaf Gardens, and the juniors don't see action again until next Friday.

In the scoring bee at Toronto Saturday Les Costello and Ed. Sandford had two goals apiece for St. Mikes. Fleming Mackell, John McLellan, Bob Paul and E. Harrison got the others. Paul Meger was the lone Barrie scorer.

The other half of the Toronto doubleheader saw Marlboros easily best over the tail-end Spitfires. Marlboro goals came from Frank Kent, Joe Formica, Ram Timgren, Ken Naylor, Cam Church and Bob Hubbard while Gord Hafdy got the lone Windsor goal.

At Galt Saturday night the Generals took command early with three goals in the fifth minute of the game. Galt's closing rally was just one short of tying. Fourteen penalties were distributed, five going to Phil Samsi of Oshawa. Oshawa's scorers were Chuck Blair, Coresino and Ike Hilderbrand, with two each, and Baldy McKay. Jimmy Unlac got two for Galt, the other scorers coming from Clover, Hnatuck, Giesbrecht and McBride.

Calls British, American War Poetry "Bankrupt"

Moscow, Dec. 23. (AP)— The Soviet Literary Gazette today described as "bankrupt" the poetry published in the United States and Britain during the war.

"A confusoin of solitude and deep indifference to the surrounding world" were the only two emotions reflected in the bulk of British and American verse, the Critique said.

The Gazette expressed objection to the inclusion in anthologies of war verse and poems by E. E. Cummings, whom it described as "an old reactionary whose confused, poetryless verses are an outright mockery of common sense," or of Robbinson Jeffers, whom it alleged "cynically attempted to sow the spirit of defeatism".

Cocktail Lounge Plebiscite Awaits Toronto Voters

Toronto, Dec. 23 (CP)—Four major issues to answer "yes" or "no" to—including a cocktail lounge plebiscite—and 89 candidates to choose from in four municipal fields, await Toronto's 366,015 eligible voters New Year's Day.

Number of contestants in the field for mayoralty, controllership, aldermanic and education seats is largest in 10 years and includes 16 lawyers, eight housewives, two doctors, one toolmaker and a clergyman.

Most contentious of questions before the voters is one which asks whether citizens favor city licensing of cocktail lounges. Regardless of the outcome, decision of the people will have no immediate legal effect, but civic officials believe this issue will be the main "drawing card" to lure voters.

They believe total votes will be higher than last year when only 25.60 per cent of the city's voters visited polls. Never in their memory, they add, have Toronto elections drawn 50 per cent of the eligible vote.

Seeking Third Term

Mayor Robert Saunders, seeking a third term on a 17-point post-war civic program, is opposed by two men making their first appearance in the municipal arena—Francis P. O'Hearn who claims "the banks owe the city $45,000,000," and Murray T. Dowson, Revolutionary Workers' party who says he aims to "challenge capitalistic candidates."

All four sitting controllers—David A. Balfour, Hiram E. McCallum, Stewart Smith and Kenneth McKellar—are seeking re-election while three other candidates have entered the Board of Control fray. They are Aldermen John Innes, M. A. Sanderson and Harry Bradley, the latter trying again after 17 unsuccessful bids.

Dismiss Injunction

Soon after the Ontario government announced the legalization of cocktail lounges, city council decided to hold a plebiscite on municipal licensing of all places selling liquor by the glass.

The Property Owners' Association was granted a temporary injunction to restrain council from placing the issue before electors on the ground the vote would "cause substantial damage and costs ($300 for advertising) to the city."

Subsequently the Supreme Court of Ontario dismissed continuation of the injunction on the grounds the new cocktail legislation did not come into effect until Jan. 1.

Other issues before the electors:

1. Should members of the three municipal bodies, including the mayor, be elected for two-year terms. The electors once before defeated this proposal.
2. Approval of a $5,900,000 slum clearance, re-housing project in the centre-east Regent Park district. Tentative plans include erection of 854 low-cost housing units.
3. Approval of a proposed $9,000,000 downtown civic square, including a new police administration building and a courthouse. Provision of such a square, supporters say, would give "the heart of the city a character befitting the capital of the province."

Plebiscite By-law Unconstitutional Says Chief Justice

Without Legal Foundation And Must Be Quashed

Toronto, Dec. 24 (AP).—Chief Justice J. C. McRuer of Ontario today ruled that the by-law under which the City of Toronto proposed to take a plebiscite on the cocktail lounge issue New Year's day is without legal foundation.

"It is not the function of the court to consider the wisdom of the legislation in question," he said. "My only duty is to decide the legality of the by-law. It is clear to me that the by-law is without legal foundation and must be quashed."

Supporters of the proposed vote had argued that it would give Toronto citizens a chance to indicate whether they wanted cocktail lounges opened here. But the vote would have had no effect on the introduction of the lounges as provincial legislation already proclaimed provides for their opening in Ontario's five largest cities — Toronto, Ottawa, Hamilton, Windsor and London—after Jan. 1.

Chief Justice McRuer ruled on an application by R. M. Willis Chitty of the Toronto Property Owners' Association, who sought an order finding that the by-law was illegal.

Mr. Chitty, acting for a member of the association, previously obtained a temporary injunction to bar the Jan. 1 vote. Mr. Justice P. E. F. Smiley of the Ontario Supreme Court declined to make the injunction permanent.

An official of the city's legal department said it would be impossible for the city to appeal from today's ruling. He said the Ontario Court of Appeal will not sit until after Jan. 6, too late for a vote on the cocktail question to be taken on election day, New Year's Day.

William Jewitt Sent to Trial On Murder Count

Windsor, Dec. 24 —(CP)—William Jewitt, 17-year-old Leamington youth, charged with the alleged hammer murder of his mother, today was committed for trial at the next assizes here.

Jewitt, who allegedly killed his mother on the night of Dec. 6, appeared on remand before Magistrate J. A. Hanrahan in county police court and Keith Laird, defence counsel, waived preliminary hearing.

It was indicated by Mr. Laird that the defence would be insanity. Two provincially-designated psychiatrists have examined Jewitt and it is understood their report is ready.

Major Louis J. Brody, acting for the Crown, consented when Mr. Laird asked that the preliminary hearing be foregone.

Mr. Laird said he was asking the unusual procedure "because this court has no jurisdiction to pass on the accused's sanity and there is no object in taking up the time of this court.

"The issue of sanity must be tried before the Supreme Court jury and it alone has the jurisdiction."

NEW SUMMONSES

Bakersfield, Calif., Dec. 24 —(AP)—Traffic law violators today were given tickets in accord with the season. Instead of summonses, Police Chief Horace V. Grayson has equipped his officers with red and green Christmas cards bearing a picture of Santa Claus and a request to obey local ordinances.

Weather Synopsis

Toronto, Dec. 24 — (CP)—Synopsis: The cold air that swept through Ontario Monday has now driven into the Maritimes, accompanied by a large area of rain and snow. Generally clear skies prevail throughout the rest of the continent, except for a narrow band of light snowshowers through Central Ontario and Michigan, which will move south-eastward out of Ontario by evening. Clear continuing cold weather is anticipated for Christmas.

FIREMEN SEARCH CHARRED DEBRIS OF QUEBEC HOTEL

Two Girls Burned to Death and at Least One More Believed Lost

Quebec, Dec. 24 — (CP)—Firemen today searched the charred debris of the Mount Royal Hotel on Lowerton Henderson Street for at least one more body following a disastrous blaze that last night destroyed the four-storey edifice and claimed two lives, climaxing a series of fires that broke out throughout Quebec province yesterday.

The two victims removed from the building—situated near Quebec's Palace Station — were tentatively identified as Jeanne Morin, about 17, and Annie MacDonald, about 25 years of age. At least one man was said to be missing following the three-alarm fire that firemen fought for more than three hours in an icy temperature before bringing it under control.

Firemen rescued several persons by means of ladders. A number of others leaped into nets. Several persons suffered injuries, none serious.

The fire, which caused damages roughly estimated at $30,000, broke out in the second storey of the building and seriously damaged the restaurant of Honore Carrier and the taverns of Ulysse Tremblay and Alfred. Leveille The adjoining Henderson Hotel also was damaged.

Meanwhile, a $200,000 fire Sunday destroyed the furniture manufacturing plant of J. T. Cloutier at Ste. Agathe, 50 miles north of Montreal. Firemen battled the blaze for nine hours as high winds fanned the flames.

At St. Johns, Que., the plant of Waldon Wood Workers Company Limited was partially destroyed in a two-hour outbreak while at Ste. Marguerite's Station, the Laurentian home of a Montreal stockbroker, Jules R. Timmins, was gutted.

In Montreal, more than 51,000 dish and wash cloths were destroyed in a two-alarm fire that broke out in a drying shed in suburban Longue Pointe.

MISSING PLANE BELIEVED DOWN IN QUEBEC WOODS

Airways Craft Carrying Six Passengers And Pilot to Their Homes For Christmas

Mont Joli, Que., Dec. 24(CP)—A ground party was mustered today to join search planes which flew out into the cloudy winter sky this morning to resume the hunt for a twin-engined Quebec Airways plane which disappeared in the mist of the lower St. Lawrence Valley on a routine 60-mile flight across the river.

Men from the Quebec north Shore Paper Company in the vicinity of the north shore lumber town of Franquelin prepared to set out into the rugged, dense bushlands behind the town in the hopes the plane, with its pilot and six passengers, may have crash-landed in the woods.

May Have Reached Shore

The ground search was spurred by the last message from the pilot and by an eye-witness report, both indicating the missing rapide-type aircraft may have reached the shore rather than plunging into the chill St. Lawrence.

A Quebec airways spokesman said the last word from the pilot J.R. Hartley of Mont Joli and St. Catharines, Ont., was "over the river—engine trouble —turning back to Godbout." This came about 11 a.m. 24 minutes after the plane left Godbout on the North Shore for Mont Joli.

Rodercik Grant of Franquelin said last night he had seen a plane laboring with a faltering engine over Pointe a la Croix from the direction of Godbout, which is about 200 miles northeast of Quebec.

The plane, obviously in distress, was 200 feet in the air and turned inland at Pointe a la Croix, Grant said. That was the last he saw of it.

From early morning, 12 aircraft flying from Mont Joli, almost directly across the River from Godbout, took up the hunt they began yesterday from Hartley and his passengers, all believed to be bush workers returning for Christmas to their south shore homes.

The weather today was cloudy and dull but there were none of the snow flurries which reduced visibility yesterday.

Ten of the searching planes were from Quebec Airways, one was supplied by the R.C.A.F., and the other came from the United States Army Air Forces.

Yesterday they concentrated on criss-crossing the river. Today, on the basis of the later information from Grant, they were to scour the wild woodlands of the north shore inland from the coastal point where Grant said he last saw the plane flying back from the river.

You Needn't Open Those Parcels, Pop; They're Your Usual Annual Gift -- Ties

By FRED KERNER
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New York, Dec. 24 (CP).—'Tis the day before Christmas and everywhere — just everywhere — we men have a good idea of what a majority of our gifts will be tomorrow.

Ties!

Some men have enough to wear a different one every day of the year. But that makes no difference. Some loving woman — wife, mother, daughter, sweetheart — will brave the pre-Christmas rush at the tie counter and come up with some new design, color or both that she thinks makes "just the thing".

The worst part of it is their taste in ties. We wouldn't mind a tie or two — or three — under the Christmas tree each Dec. 25, but ladies, do they have to be such startling colors and designs?

Even the haberdashers themselves agree — women's taste is atrocious, in most cases at least.

If my wife reads this, she's an exception.

One Fifth Avenue "class" haberdasher told us just the other day:

"A woman who will haggle with the butcher to save three cents in April, will spend $5 the week before Christmas for a necktie a man wouldn't wear in the woodshed," he said bitterly, though with a sly glance at a clerk ringing up another sale at the tie counter.

Another tie seller whispered out of the side of his mouth to us while serving two female customers.

"A woman usually chooses something she thinks looks well on you," he said. "But they have a leaning to atrocious color schemes."

"Look at what them old girls is choosin'. I wouldn't be seen at a cat show with 'em on."

"Yes, madam," he turned from this reporter, "$7.50 each. Thank you!" and gleefully rang up a sale that carried with it 150 per cent profit or more. The store was empty for a moment and he spoke out loud now:

"The hardest part with Christmas gifts is sometimes in making your appearance at holiday parties you have to make us of these doo-dads the women bless you with."

But don't' despair, ladies.

Interviewer No. 3 came to your rescue. The age of chivalry is not dead—yet.

"Aw wadda ya complaining about," he said indignantly. "Anybody should be complaining when they give you something! It's the thought, man, not the gift!"

Gentlemen, remember that tomorrow morning. Remember it for another Christmas at least.

A Merry Christmas

THE thunder of the guns has ceased. "The war drums throb no longer." Young men and women have returned to their homes. There is peace — of a sort — on earth. We are living in troublous times; in a world of unrest; of suspicion and distrust. For a few days, at least, these things will be forgotten with the magic of Christmas enveloping all. Since the Three Wise Men first discovered the guiding star of Bethlehem shining bright in the midnight sky; this magic has kindled a spirit of kindness and goodwill the world over. Through the ages the spirit of Christmas has shone like a beacon light, survived every tribulation, giving men courage and women hope, children faith.

In this the gr[illegible] season of all, the wonders of the Yuletide unfold. Children's eyes light up with their magical presence. Rainbow lights of Christmas trees twinkle from countless windows. In great cathedrals and simple churches candlelight flickers softly upon rows of bowed heads. In happy homes the shimmering embers of Christmas fires radiate contentment and good cheer. The magic of Christmas brings light to the world.

It is a time for music — the kind which lifts hearts in many lands. People everywhere sing joyous melodies of goodwill, the organ's mighty voice pours forth in glorious anthems, mothers gently humming to their babes.....From the moment the chiming bells peal forth their first carol until the last musical toy is put away, the magic of Christmas is reflected in inspiring music.

It is a time for prayer, too. Prayer for that day when suffering and intolerance will be forever eradicated from the world. Prayer that has long been in the hearts and on the lips of men regardless of race or creed, a prayer that some day they will be allowed to express their faith and enjoy in full freedom, the true spirit of Christmas. On that day when these prayers are answered, when the simple words "Peace on Earth, Goodwill Toward Men" become true in all their meaning, men will realize a more glorious world than they have ever known.

When this day comes the bright lights of Christmas will shine as they have never shone before, the glory of Christmas will ring out in all its symphonic beauty, the magic spirit of Christmas will reign throughout the world, forever.

It behooves us then, to work for that end. By being tolerant, kind, and ever cognizant of our fellowman, his needs, his happiness and his environment, we can go a long way toward that ultimate goal for which so many gave their lives, even as did the Man of Galilee.

Nickel Plans Magnetometer Survey of Air

Ottawa, Dec. 24 —(CP)— The first airborne magnetometer survey in Canada will be undertaken shortly in Northern Ontario by the International Nickel Company of Canada, Limited, it was announced here yesterday.

Reconstruction Minister Howe said in a statement the Air Transport Board had approved an application for a commercial air service licence submitted by Aero Service Corporation of Philadelphia.

The corporation will carry out a magnetic measuring survey by air in the vicinity of Sudbury. Operating from an air strip at North Bay, the aircraft, equipped with suitable oriented total field magnetic measuring devices, will cover approximately 1,000 square miles.

"A recent development in survey methods, especially in mining areas, the proposed plan may reveal valuable information which could benefit the Canadian mining industry considerably," said Mr. Howe.

The corporation is understood to be the only company equipped to perform the survey at present. The methods used are similar to those in operation for the United States government geological surveys.

Under the terms of the licence the air line will conduct only its survey work. No other form of commercial service has been authorized.

NINE FORMER NAZI CHIEFS TO DIE

Belgrade, Dec. 24 —(AP)—A high Yugoslav military court in a special session yesterday sentenced nine former Gestapo chiefs in Serbia to death by hanging, nine former Nazi S.S. (Elite Guard) officers to death by shooting and other former Nazis to prison terms. Two former S.S. men were sentenced to 20 years at forced labor and an ailing 74-year-old colonel received a five-year sentence.

Parcel Post Rates To Be Reduced ToUnitedKingdom

Ottawa, Dec. 24—(CP)—Postmaster General Bertrand announced today that after Jan. 1 there will be "considerable reductions" in parcel post rates from Canada to the United Kingdom.

Under the new scale the rate will be 25 cents for the first pound with an additional 15 cents charge for each pound up to 10 pounds; a $2 charge for parcels over 10 pounds and up to 15 pounds; and $2.50 for parcels over 15 pounds and up to 20 pounds.

The existing parcel rates are 24 cents for the first pound with 18 cents per each pound up to 10 pounds; $2.50 for parcels over 10 pounds and up to 15 pounds; and $3 for over 15 pounds and up to 20 pounds.

Mr. Bertrand said the appreciable saving made possible by the new postage rates will "greatly facilitate the sending of gift parcels by Canadians to friends and relatives in the United Kingdom."

Police Constables Cited for Bravery

Chatham, Dec. 24. (CP)—Three members of the Chatham police force have been cited by the Commission for meritorious service "beyond the line of duty".

Constables Clayton Carey and William Graham were honored for keen observation and alertness which resulted in the detection and arrest of Laurent Godin early Oct. 22, resulting in the recovery of a stolen car and $700 cash.

Constables Carey and Owen J. Collins were highly commended for the capture Oct. 25 of Harry James Fontaine, Frank Edward Matthews and George Thomas Kell, of Windsor, and Roy McLeod and Lloyd Ernest Lochner of Detroit, while they were returning to Windsor following a break-in at Bothwell.

POPE SEES EUROPE IN GRAVE DANGER OF NEW CONFLICTS

Pontiff Urges Early, Just and Definite Peace, Says Tensions Must be Removed

Vatican City, Dec. 24 (AP) — The Pope declared today, on the eve of the second Christmas since the Second Great War ended, that Europe stood in grave danger of new conflicts.

Addressing the resident members of the College of Cardinals, whose 95-year-old dean, Gennaro Cardinal Granito Pignatelli Di Belmonte, had just presented their Christmas greetings, the Pontiff called for an early, just and definite peace.

Otherwise, he said, the "constant agitation" of Europe's peoples, their "disillusionment and discontent" over the war's aftermath, might give rise "to the flames of new conflict."

The Pontiff's address was broadcast by the Vatican's short wave station and re-broadcast over the Italian and Spanish long wave stations.

Tension Must be Removed

In "the gravity of the present hour," the Pontiff invited the rulers of the world to base their policies on three considerations:

1. "To remove dangerous international tensions" and "and the present intolerable state of uncertainty," he urged "the advent of a definite peace amang all states."

2. To the labor of peace, he pleaded, let the rulers apply "the seal of a true justice, of a farseeing wisdom, of a sincere service to the common interests of the entire human family."

3. Let them finally, he said, establish in their instruments of peace "a procedure clearly determined" for correcting them, so that the "voice of reason and equity" demanding modifications might be heeded.

There was emotion in the Pope's clear, strong voice as he lamented the fate of the Atlantic Charter in the years since President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill promulgated it.

"All people listened," he said. "At last they could breathe.

"And what is now left of that message and of its provisions?"

Speaking of the antagonism that the church confronts today, the Pontiff said that "no Christian has the right to abstain from the fight against the enemies of Christ."

No one, he said, must rest "with folded arms, with head bowed and with knees weak."

The church, the Pontiff said, did not fear and today, as yesterday, remained solid against trials.

The Holy Father again directed his attention to the needs of war-ravaged countries, referring to his appeal of last spring.

"Much," he said, "has been done" for children and the aged, and much help given has "saved the honor of humanity."

"But," he said, "it was not enough — and we are compelled to renew our appeal of last spring.

"Bread—in the literal sense of the word—is lacking for whole populations."

Unusual Clinging Mists Blamed For Crash Against Peak

Technician of Peruvian Air Force Sole Survivor

Rio De Janeiro, Dec. 24—(AP) —The Rio De Janeiro Fire Department announced today that 20 persons were killed and one injured when an air transport of the Argentine Fama Line, en route from London to Buenos Aires, crashed yesterday near this city.

The sole survivor was identified as Claudio Mendonca Rios, 27, a technichian of the Peruvian Air Force. A doctor said Rios' general condition was good.

(Reuters News Agency said there were two survivors of the crash and named them as Claudio Mendoza of Lima, Peru, and Henrique Lecoq, an Argentinan. Reuters said six Britons, including two women, were believed killed and gave the death toll as 19.)

Unusual clinging mists were blamed for the crash of the plane against the Pico Do Papagaio (Parrot's Peak) about 30 miles from downtown Rio de Janeiro.

Experimental Flight.

An Argentine embassy spokesman said the plane was on an experimental flight and had left London Saturday afternoon, landing en route at Paris, Lisbon, Dakar and the Brazilian port of Natal.

The crash was in mid-afternoon, but the region was accessible only by foot. Bodies were not removed until early this morning. Two farmers heard the plane hit the mountain, ran to the scene and then summoned authorities. There was no explosion.

Enrique Lecroix, an official of the Fama line, was taken alive from the wreckage, but he died later.

The Argentine embassy said the crew consisted of Norman James, crew commander; Enrique Martinez Del Valle, co-pilot; Jorge Cratee, navigator; Jorge Rotger, mechanic; Jorge Liate, radio operator, and Lilia Bustafa, stewardess.

Listed Passengers.

Passengers from London to Buenos Aires were listed as Agnes Greer Jonson, Adolfo Lucinaga, Claudio Mendonca Rio, Richard Pearse and Dorothy Pearse. Passengers from Paris to Buenos Aires were Pedro Fontela, Giovani Quaglia, Marina Quaglia and Jesus Borras. Passengers from Lisbon to Buenos Aires were Arturo Fassio, Argentine Minister to Portugal; Miguel Guissasola, Edgardo Bosdoars, P. Arrozarena and Maria Arrozarena. Lecroix boarded the plane at Natal. Addresses were not available.

The hospital to which the bodies were taken said they could be embalmed and sent to their home countries.

The plane crashed in the same area where a United States military plane went down recently, killing several War Department employees.

2 Million Annual Payment Accepted By P.E. Island From Dominion Govt.

Charlottetown, Dec. 24. (CP) —Premier J. Walter Jones announced here last night that his government had accepted "in principle" a financial offer from the Dominion Government based on a minimum annual payment of $2,000,000, with the province foregoing certain taxation fields.

Premier Jones disclosed few details of the new agreement, but said that it meant an additional $177,000 revenue to the province in 1947, when the total amount available through various Dominion concessions will be about $2,400,000.

He said, without elaboration, that the annual grant would be subject to gross production, a clause which, he added, was not contained in the Dominion's original offer.

The Federal Government had already agreed to restore 30 per cent of awards under two Royal commissions which investigated Maritime economy at the behest of the dominion. Grants from this source will total $82,000 annually. Release of the gasoline taxation field by the Federal Government means the island will have an additional source of income totalling about $150,000.

The wartime agreement between the Dominion and Province expires Dec. 31, but the new arrangement will not come into effect until April. Premier Jones said that interim financing was now being considered by his cabinet.

The Dominion's proposals have formed the basis of agreements—now awaiting ratification—with New Brunswick, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia. Alberta is striving to find a common basis of agreement.

Ontario and Quebec, the two wealthiest provinces, have made no move to accept the proposals.

Nova Scotia has asked for resumption of the Dominion-Provincial Conference, and that the Dominion produce new proposals in the light of departures which Premier Angus L. Macdonald claims have been made from the original plan outlined in the last federal budget.

LIBERALS GAIN QUEBEC SEAT BY BIG MAJORITY

Montreal Lawyer Defeats Other Two Candidates Almost Two to One

Sorel, Quebec, Dec. 24 —(CP) —Liberals counted today a solid victory in the Richelieu-Vercheres by-election after their setbacks in Pontiac and Portage La Prairie.

With six polls yet to be heard from, the young Gerard Cournoyer had piled up a total vote that came almost within 1,000 votes of the 12,873 polled in 1945 by P.J.A. Cardin, who represented the riding in the House of Commons 35 years. Mr. Cardin died Oct. 20.

When returning officer Osias Cousineau closed his office last night, 108 of the 114 polls in yesterday's by-election showed: Mr. Cournoyer, 11,749; Roland Corbeil, Union des Electeurs, (Social

Senator Urges Thorough Probe Into Incident

Washington, Dec. 24 (AP) — Senator Tom Stewart (Dem.-Tenn.), declaring "we've been entirely too easy" with Russia, today urged a thorough investigation into the "verbal ultimatum" which forced an unarmed United States navy ship to leave Dairen.

Stewart referred to the edict which sent the vessel, on a routine, courier mission, hurrying from the Manchurian port after receiving the warning from Russian military officers:

"Unless you leave within 20 minutes we will not be responsible for the consequences."

Commenting on a Dairen dispatch in which Scripps-Howard reporter William H. Newton told of the incident for the combined world press, the Tennessee Senator told a reporter:

"This is a matter which ought to be gone into thoroughly. I will be much interested to see what the State Department and the navy have to say."

The State Department has been silent pending an official report from H. Merrill Benninghoff, the American Consul General at Dairen. A spokesman said that if the report is not received shortly, efforts will be made to speed it up.

The only navy comment thus far has been an acknowledgment that the landing craft described in the Dairen dispatch had left there for a U.S. base in China last Friday, the day the ultimatum was issued.

"Russia ought not to have been allowed to enter Manchuria in the first place," Stewart declared. "They have done nothing but pillage the whole area."

The Tennessean contended that Russia had "made no contribution of any consequence" to the war against Japan, since "the atom bomb already had been dropped" when Russia entered the Pacific war.

"We've been entirely too easy with them," Stewart said, "and this incident shows their attitude toward us."

Newton's dispatch said the ultimatum was issued while the navy vessel was on a second routine courier mission to Dairen carrying diplomatic mail and supplies.

It added that before handing down the dictum the Russian military commander in charge of the city had refused to permit an American businessman and two American newspapermen to land.

DISEASE PERIL IN QUAKE ZONE UNDER CONTROL

Official Count Gives 2,395 Casualties and Left Nearly 100,000 Homeless

By RUSSELL BRINES

Tokyo, Dec. 24 — (AP) — The United States Army reported today that disease was under control in Japan's earthquake disaster, which by official count caused at least 2,395 casualties and left nearly 100,000 homeless.

The greatest disease peril remained in the prostrate city of Shingu, on Wakayama's east coast, where 14,000 Japanese, whose homes collapsed in the first shock or burned in the fires that followed, huddled on the beaches in Japan's inhospitable winter.

These refugees were living on boiled creek water, while overworked Japanese doctors treated 500 hopital cases in any shelter they could find. Their hospital vanished in the first shock that swept the city.

Getting In More Serum

The U. S. Army and Japanese authorities, who had rushed serum and food to all other danger areas, were arranging to get more serum into isolated Shingu, which already had one boatload of supplies.

The official casualty toll, compiled by the Japanese home ministry, remained at 2,395—including 1,088 dead, 165 missing and 1,142 injured. That was its figure as at 11 o'clock Monday night.

The ministry began a check of property damage of Saturday's violent quake and tidal waves. It was expected the total would reach billions of yen.

12,491 Homes Wrecked

Its survey so far showed 12,491 homes wrecked, buried by debris or washed away, 9,555 partly destroyed, and 2,502 ships of various sizes wrecked. Some ships were picked up by the tidal waves and hurled half a mile inland on Wakayama's western shore, U. S. air observers reported.

Relief trains were rolling into the area, ships were arriving at stricken ports, serum was distributed against typhoid, typhus and other disaster-stalking diseases, and two U. S. Army emergency hospitals were moved in to handle overflow cases.

Release Materials

The Japanese Welfare Ministry released housing project materials sufficient to build 5,000 homes in the disaster area.

One big factor in getting relief quickly was that the southern island of Shikoku, which with Wakayama Peninsula was the hardest hit, was able to handle its own situation from supplies on hand.

Another was that Japanese military food and clothing were stored in many parts of the area for just such an emergency and were quickly made available.

Priorities also were given for food and clothing in the city of Kochi, hard hit on Shikoku's east coast, but British Commonwealth headquarters said civilian morale was high and there was enough food for three days.

HOMESICK FOR THEIR FROZEN NORTHLAND

It may be the season of good cheer for many of us, but Alayuk Annguzuk, 1½-year-old Eskimo boy, and his dogs, "Rowdy" (the big one) and "Sonya" (the pup) don't seem to be very happy with all this Christmas spirit flying about. They came to Newark, N.J., from Whale's Island, Alaska, with Alayuk's parents to participate in the exhibit arranged by Dave Irwin, Jr., noted Arctic explorer, at a Newark department store. "Alayuk, "Rowdy" and "Sonya" would much rather be back where it's nice and cold.

Post Office Staff Wearily Distributes Last of Yule Mail

Members of the busiest and probably one of the most efficient public staffs in the city rested more or less weary limbs late this afternoon as they despatched the last of one of the heaviest volumes of Christmas mail in years.

They are the men of the Post Office whose life for the past month or so has been just one letter or parcel after another.

"The general efficiency of the staff as a whole is exemplified with the quickness of despatch of local mail. Night and day these public servants have toiled to give the public the best service possible, and to their credit it must be said that they have come through with flying colors.

"Practically every piece of Christmas mail with the exception of a small 'hangover' will be despatched today," Postmaster J. C. Waddell said this morning.

The "hangover", he added, is in the main a small quantity of mail that is insufficiently addressed, and the staff in the general holiday rush has not had time to get it away. However, Mr. Waddell said, everything will be on its way by Thursday.

This year's volume of mail was decidedly heavier than that of a year ago, he said. "The public has co-operated in a fine manner and thus has made the usual heavy lot of the staff much easier."

All Canadian Warships Will Spend Christmas Day in Port

Ottawa, Dec. 24 — On this, the eighth Christmas Day since Canada entered the war, all Canadian warships will for the first time spend the holiday in port.

Just one naval vessel will be at sea — the Fleet oiler, H.M.C.S. "Dundurn," which is on her way from Halifax to Esquimalt and which Christmas will find somewhere off the coast of Oregon. "Dundurn" is due in Esquimalt on December 29.

Warships in port will be able to carry out fully the traditional naval observances of Christmas.

The outward evidence of the festivities on board will be the Christmas tree at the masthead. Below decks the mess-decks will be festively adorned.

If tradition is closely followed, the youngest member of the ship's company will trade places with the captain, wearing his uniform and carrying out the commanding officer's routine duties. The custom is said to date back to Roman times when the masters exchanged places with their servants on Christmas Day.

Officers are assembled in the wardroom shortly before noon by the (real) captain and they then make the rounds of every mess in the ship, exchanging good wishes and enjoying Christmas fare.

Christmas dinner is usually served in the early afternoon and it is a point of honor with the cooks to make it the best meal of the year.

Ship customs are closely paralleled at naval shore establishments where men are living in barracks.

Another typically naval custom is observed with the coming of the New Year. At midnight, as the Old Year ends, 16 bells are sounded on the ship's bell by the youngest member of the crew. Midnight is normally eight bells by the shipboard method of reckoning time, but an additional eight are struck for the New Year.

Few Customers; Small Offerings On the Market

City housewives showed but small interest in the pre-Christmas market as only a few scattered customers and an equally few farmers turned out.

Even the prospect of obtaining a Christmas turkey failed to arouse too much interest from the customers' standpoint as the few vendors who offered the traditional Yuletide fare seemed to be doing anything but a rushing business. Fully drawn turkeys were available on the inside market at 58 cents per pound while in the rough dressed state could be had at the ceiling of 48 cents. A few geese were also available, one vendor offering geese at $5 each.

Chicken was also displayed at conventional prices with capons bringing up to $3 each and others ranging around 40 cents per pound.

Strategists Study Election Results In Quebec

By GEORGE KITCHEN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Dec. 24 —(CP)— Political strategists today studied the results of yesterday's by-election voting in the Quebec constituency of Richelieu-Vercheres which returned a Liberal member and boosted the government's majority in the Commons to five.

Election of Gerard Cournoyer, Liberal candidate, left the standing in the 245-member House as follows: Liberals, 125; Progressive Conservatives, 67; C.C.F., 28; Social Credit, 13; others 11; and vacancies, one.

Late results from 108 of the 114 polls in the riding showed Mr. Cournoyer with 11,749 votes against 5,948 for Roland Corbeil, representing L'Union des Electeurs, and 1,873 for Etienne Duhamel, Progressive Conservative.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King commented on the result with a statement in which he said Mr. Cournoyer's "overwhelming" majority spoke "emphatically of the place which the Liberal party of Canada continues to hold in the Province of Quebec."

He added:—

"The insignificant vote polled by the Progressive Conservative party is an effective reply to much that has been said of late by the leaders and members of that party as to any fears by the electors of the Province of Quebec of any of the right of the provinces being sacrificed at Ottawa."

Bracken Not Surprised.

John Bracken, Progressive Conservative leader, commented briefly that the result was "not surprising" and noted that the seat had been traditionally Liberal for the last 50 years.

M. J. Coldwell, C.C.F. leader, declined to comment. His party did not contest the by-election.

Mr. Cournoyer's election gave the government a majority of five members in the commons, not including Speaker Gaspard, Fauteux, who votes only in the case of a tie.

The remaining vacancy in the House is in Halifax riding and yesterday's victory stirred speculation as to whether a by-election might not soon be held there. However, it is not customary for a by-election campaign to be conducted during a parliamentary session. The House opens Jan. 30.

It was thought possible that Mr. Cournoyer — a law partner of the late P. J. A. Cardin who held the Richelieu-Vercheres seat previously — when he takes his seat at the approaching session, will be in line for appointment as a parliamentary assistant. This was based on pre-election statements by cabinet ministers in the hustings that he would become a cabinet minister within a few years.

The death of the Halifax member, W. R. Macdonald, opened the post of parliamentary assistant for naval affairs and the Prime Minister is believed to be considering creating similar positions in other departments.

Miniature Chapel Used to Broadcast Christmas Carols

One of the newest Christmas innovations to be seen in the city this year is that of the miniature chapel seen on the lawn of the Martin Funeral Home.

Complete in every detail the little edifice is equipped with electric lights and a small radio speaker. At night it is lighted up and from its tiny doors and windows pour the well-known Christmas carols which emanate from the organ inside the funeral home.

The organ music and the small chapel attracted a large crowd of people last night, as the management put on a Christmas concert of organ music.

All the King's Spectres

Wraiths That Haunt Royal Palaces

By ARTHUR NETTLETON

According to old tradition, Christmas is ghost-time, the season when wraiths as well as mortals make merry. The reason for this belief is somewhat obscure, but if King George wishes to have a Yuletide "spook hunt," he need venture no further than some of the royal residences in Great Britain.

The royal palaces, indeed, are said to have a whole army of spectres. Moreover, the list lacks nothing in variety. The ghosts include those of many historic figures.

Rivals for the record number of wraiths are Windsor Castle and Hampton Court palace, the resplendent residence which Henry the Eighth took from Cardinal Wolsey, and which is still numbered among Britain's royal homes. By royal consent, many of the apartments in Hampton Court today are tenanted by royal pensioners, but it served as a home for British royalty during a dozen reigns.

Unofficial residents nowadays are stated to include so many ghosts that the Office of Works, the Government Department responsible for maintaining the place, disclaims all responsibility in that direction. An affirmation, still preserved in the Government archives, declares that "the jurisdiction of the First Commissioner does not extend to the spirit world."

The most famous of the wraiths is that of Katherine Howard, fifth wife of Henry the Eighth. Her spectral form, dishevelled and terror-stricken, rushes screaming through the Haunted Gallery each February 12th—the anniversary of her execution 300 years ago.

Anne Boleyn and Jane Seymour, too, are reported to haunt certain apartments, though their appearances are less terrifying than those of Katherine Howard. Less widely known, but no less sinister, is the occasional manifestation of a black coffin.

This awesome spectacle has sometimes been seen resting on trestles in one or another of the oak-panelled rooms. None of the persons who have seen it have ever been able to pluck up courage to approach it, and what it contains is an unsolved mystery.

But there is a belief that its appearance portends the impending death of some important individual in the royal household. It is said that anyone who is brave enough to peep into the coffin will see the ethereal form of the one concerned.

Hampton Court's wraiths, in fact, are so numerous that they are reputed to appear in groups as well as singly. This is the report of a policeman who, while on guard at this royal residence some years ago, encountered ten spooks at once. They were lords and ladies in old-style attire, and as there had been a fancy dress ball in progress during the previous evening, the constable at first saw nothing extraordinary in the encounter.

But when, after he had dutifully opened a garden gate for them to pass through, the figures vanished into thin air—well, the astonished beholder did think the incident was remarkable. He was cool-headed enough to examine the footpath for footprints, and when he found no such marks he reported the happening to his superiors.

The outcome was an official inquiry, but the most detailed investigation failed to produce any explanation other than that the figures were wraiths. The affair was fully reported in the newspapers at the time, and it enhanced the reputation of Hampton Court as "the most haunted home in England."

Windsor's most famous spectre is "The Lady in Black". She has been seen many times in various parts of the Castle, both indoors and in the grounds, and there are detailed descriptions of her dress and her features. Yet, oddly, her identity has never been definitely established. The belief most widely held is that the phantom is none other than that of Queen Elizabeth.

Compared with some other royal residences in Great Britain, Marlborough House, Queen Mary's London mansion, is quite a modern building, being less than 230 years old. But in that period it has nevertheless acquired a goodly company of apparitions.

Charles the Second and Nell Gwynne are among them, for at one time Nell lived in a house quite close to the site of the present Marlborough House. It is thought that she and Charles sometimes walked in the neighborhood of the mansion now existing; the land on which it stands was formerly ground attached to St. James's Palace. So the Marlborough House gardens are one place where King George might go today if he wishes to meet the wraiths of earlier royalty.

The other alleged ghostly occupants of Queen Mary's home are the wraiths of Lord Mohun, a hot-tempered scion of the 18th century who was killed in a duel, and that of an ancestor of Lord Byron. Both these men were closely connected with Marlborough House, since the mansion did not become Crown property until early last century.

It was bought by the Crown for £200,000 evidently with the ghosts included as part of the furnishings. But if any spook has a right to practise there, it is the ghost of the Duchess of Marlborough. It was she who bought the site in the eighteenth century and had the mansion built.

The royal ghosts may also in one sense be said to include a ship. At least, that spectre of the seas, the mysterious Flying Dutchman, is said to have been seen by one British Sovereign in recent times. When the late King George the Fifth was Prince George, and was undergoing naval training, the phantom craft was seen from H.M.S. Inconstant when sailing from Melbourne to Sydney.

The incident is briefly recorded in the royal diary of the voyage, although King George himself never attempted to provide an explanation of the affair.

But the oldest story connected with royalty's ghosts concerns the site of Sauchiemuir Castle, Scotland. King James the Fourth of Scotland gave this fine stronghold to Sir James Murray, with the proviso that three glasses of port, some cake, and fruit be set out in the banqueting hall each New Year's Eve.

The wine and food were intended for the ghost of the King's grandmother. Her wraith was said to return to Sauchiemuir once every year, and the provision of a small feast for her on this annual occasion was the only rent asked by James for the castle.

Although the fortress was burned down last century, local folk declare that the old lady still returns about Christmastime to claim the rent. Moreover, the superstitious says that the castle was swept by fire because, one year, the wine and food were not provided for the apparition.

Further, it is stated that if the stronghold is ever rebuilt, the new tenant will be obliged to provide for the ghost, and will have no other dues to pay to the reigning British Sovereign.

In that event, there arises the question whether King George is not entitled to a glimpse of the apparition. This unique wraith would certainly make a useful addition to the long list of phantoms associated with royal homes and royal personages today.

New Year's Blessings An Ancient Swiss Legend

According to Swiss legend, the Holy Family is abroad during the hour of midnight mass on Christmas Eve.

Therefore, a bowl of fresh milk is placed upon the dining table and each member of the household carefully lays his spoon upon the table cloth.

The person who, returning from church, finds his spoon has been moved may anticipate special blessings during the coming year: for surely Mary and Joseph have rested within the abode during their Flight into Egypt and the Virgin used that spoon to feed the Infant Jesus.

NEW YEARS AT THE CORNERS

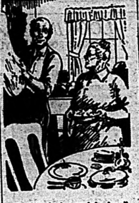
"Pop," Maw Lewis called from the kitchen, "you get your lazy bones out of that chair and wash up! Dinner'll be ready in two shakes of a lamb's tail."

Pop managed to lift his six feet of bone and sinew to his feet and headed for the kitchen sink.

"Don't you go usin' that clean towel, neither," Maw admonished. "That's for company. Use the roller towel. Sakes alive, I do believe you'd wipe your dirty feet on the front door mat if I'd leave it out."

"What's a door mat fer," Pop flared, "if it ain't to wipe feet on?"

Pop gave the roller towel a vicious jerk. "Y'know tonight bein' New Year's Eve, Maw, you 'nd me ought to step out somewheres. They're having a big shindig over at the Corners store. Jed Hafey's openin' a keg."



'Jedd Hafey's openin' a keg.'

"If it's anything like that keg he opened Thanksgiving, you ain't gettin' any nearer to it than you are right now. Pretty howdy-do, you comin' home six o'clock in the mornin' and shootin' off the shotgun through the roof so it leaks like a sieve. No, siree, you ain't even gettin' near enough to have a smell of any keg Jed Hafey opens," Maw said.

Suddenly Pop looked up from his plate. "Well, consarn! What you cryin' about, Maw?"

"I ain't cryin'," Maw denied. "I'm just thinkin'—thinkin' back fifty-two years. You was payin' attention to me and kind o' jealous like. I couldn't turn 'round but what you was kissin' me. You was jealous o' Jed Hafey—jealouser than anything."

Pop snorted disdainfully. "What'd I have to be jealous o' Jed Hafey fer? tell me that."

"Plenty," Maw said, "I was going to marry him."

Pop dropped his fork. "You was a-goin' to marry Jed?"

"Sure. Only his folks wanted him to marry Edda Stout. She owned all the bottom land nearly in Clarke county. He couldn't marry me until he was of age, on account o' his folks wantin' him to marry Edda. In a year he figures he can get all her money and then divorce her and marry me. Meanwhile he said I might as well marry you, then when he got all Edda's money I could divorce you and marry him. Said you was about the most harmless male bein in all Clarke county and no harm would come to me marryin' you. He said if I married anybody else I might fall in love with him and then he'd lose out."

"So that was the way o' things! I remember. Jed did divorce Edda a year or so later. How come you never told me this before, Lil? And how come you not to divorce me and marry Jed after he got his divorce?"

"How come?" Maw said. "Well, Pop, I guess maybe you was kind o' responsible for that. Ain't no tellin' how a woman looks at things until she's hogtied to a man. I just kind o' forgot about Jed. Money didn't matter so much, after all. I found out it was the man that mattered. You kind o' had good ways about you, Pop. Different kind o' ways, only they was the right kind. Made a girl think twice afore jumpin' from the fryin' 'pan into the fire. You was good enough for me, I found. If there was any better men'n you, I wouldn't have no way o' knowin', o' course. Everything was so nice I didn't think it could be any nicer, so I just decided to hang onto you and let Jed root for himself."

"By gum!" Pop exclaimed after a moment's reflection. "Now I am a-goin' to that keg openin' tonight if it kills me. And you're a-goin' with me, Lil. I won't have Jed thinkin' he didn't get cheated in the deal, consarn his danged hide! If I go without you he'll think I don't care none about you, and I want to make him feel right good and jealous."

"Jed jealous after fifty-two years?" Maw said increulously.

"Well, if he ain't he ought to be! Happy New Year, Maw!"

"I'll go," Maw said, "but remember, Pop Lewis, if you get drunk tonight I'll break the mop handle over your head when we get home—that is, if I'm still able to tell a mop handle from a crowbar."

New Years' Eve Festive Occasion For Native Scots

Christmas never aroused much enthusiasm in Scotland — but on New Year's eve the Wassail bowl goes around, filled with savory liquid nostalgically fragrant.

Floating atop the Wassail bowl, apples stir memories of the "apple-howling" when boys switched the trunks of fruit trees petitioning "a good howling crop"; somehow, the "lamb's wool" (as the decoction of the Wassail bowl is often called) seems reminiscent of young folks rushing to the nearest spring at the stroke of 12 to drink the "cream of the well" —the first one so doing, might expect good luck during the ensuing year.

Handsel Monday — the Monday after New Year's, is traditionally the "big Day" for Scotch boys and girls: and, in addition to being the Scotch day of gift-giving, it is a day of feasting and gaiety.

Small wonder, that families and friends gather on New Year's eve to "Drink a cup of kindness yet For Auld Lang Syne."

Legends of Holly

Holly was much admired by the Druids who believed that its evergreen leaves attested to its favor with the sun god.

Legends related that the crown of thorns was plaited from the holly. Before the crucifixion the berries were white, but turned crimson like drops of blood.

Another is that holly is hateful to witches and is therefore placed on doors and windows to keep out evil spirits.

A more modern legend is that whoever brings the Christmas holly into the house first, either husband or wife, is the one who will rule the ensuing year.

MIRACLE PLAYS STILL HELD

Among more tradition-observing communities of the world, old-time miracle plays are still performed, often in the form of elaborate dances, in solemn, but lavish, settings against the colorful background of tropical foliage.

Red and Green Decorations

The use of green at Christmas time is understandable when it is recalled that the idea of decking churches, houses, shops, etc., centres around the use of evergreen. This custom antedates the Christian era and apparently is a survival of the Roman Saturnalia when inhabitants of Rome ornamented their temples and dwellings with green boughs.

Red, which is regarded as the most cheerful of all colors, is said to react most quickly on the optic nerve. Decorations available at the winter solstice include holly, the berries of which are red.

brings is for all time and for all mankind. This spirit has helped to mold the course of progress as the world well knows. Its message is speaking in these days as it has ever spoken in history in all climes, that human brotherhood should and will reign over all the earth. Out of the event of nineteen and a half centuries ago the anniversary of which is celebrated have come influences which are as potent today as ever in the history of the entire world. The message of good will speaks in the great international conferences of this time which seek peace settlements that will recognize the brotherhood of men on earth and is heard in whatever men strive and do for human betterment.

At this time from far and near have come the members of families for the annual reunion which is one of the joys of the season. The merriest and happiest time has come when the stocking and the evergreen tree yield their precious burdens of gifts in the bright colors of the festival to the little boys and girls, who are the centre of the fireside gatherings. To them Santa Claus represents the spirit of kindliness and goodness, the spirit of giving and spreading cheer, which is characteristic of every person. So potent is the influence which has come among men.

The child is at the heart of the Christmas feast. It could not be otherwise. The happiness which the little boy and girl feel is the natural response of their pure lives to the noble influence and inspiration of this greatest of all the festivals. In very truth the child has a lesson to give his elders in his pure joy, his gratitude expressed in shouts and his interest shown by his wide-open eyes which indicate how deeply this Christmas spirit has found its way into his young nature.

There is a spirit of expansiveness abroad at this season. Good will is expressed and meant. All feel the good of this outpouring of self and of their sympathies and interests and man and boy and woman and girl are infinitely richer and better for the coming of Christmas. Hearts beat faster, there is good will and there is a widening and deepening of friendship. In the mood of Christmas man finds the spirit of brotherhood, which solves all problems.

Britain's Need of Exports

Britain's imperative need to increase her exports to "hard currency" areas was stressed by Sir Stafford Cripps, President of the United Kingdom Board of Trade in a speech to the Canadian Chamber of Commerce in London last week.

Sir Stafford referred to the prewar trade position when, although Britain's imports from Canada were three times her exports to the Dominion, she was able to achieve payment of the balance largely by way of multilateral trade. That is to say, Canada received payment in goods indirectly, namely from the U.S.A. whence great imports passed into Canada. The U.S.A. in its turn received payment not directly from the United Kingdom but from many countries in the world to whom the United Kingdom in its turn was sending exports. Thus the payment made by Britain for its imports from Canada was by means of a very roundabout multilateral path.

"Today unfortunately that system is not yet fully restored because there is no interchangeability between many of the soft currencies we receive and the Canadian dollar, and until that interchangeability is re-established, we have to try to send as much as possible direct to Canada and other hard currency countries. At the moment, though 50% of our imports come from the American continent, only 17% of our exports go there, and there is practically no triangular or multilateral payment to balance the rest—hence the need for loans. All this points to the need both for Canada and ourselves to re-establish multilateral trading as soon as possible. It is indeed the only way in which we can maintain the volume of trade in the world that is necessary for the prosperity of both our countries."

Parking on Curves Dangerous

A warning to motorists to refrain from parking at curves in roadways has been issued by the police at Fort Erie, and the same warning might apply in Niagara Falls and other centres. Many times autos have been observed parked at curves along River Road and other winding streets in the city. When cars are rounding the curves they must swing out wide to avoid striking the parked vehicle. Often there is traffic in the other direction and this parked machine blocks the view, frequently causing near accidents when motorists pull out around and into the path of oncoming vehicles.

Breakfast In School

Norwegian food experts are fully in accord with their Canadian colleagues who say that children should have one meal a day served them at school, but they believe that the meal should be breakfast, not lunch, says Ottawa Citizen. The successful resistance to wartime diseases among young people in Oslo is attributed to the fact that breakfasts were served in schools there from 1931 to 1940. The meals consisted of whole grain bread, whole milk, vitaminized spreads, an orange and a carrot—eaten slowly in quiet surroundings.

Words Hide The Real Meaning

Maj.-Gen. Leslie Groves, chief of the Army's Manhattan Project, has made the interesting statement that though 2,000,000 words have just been released on the atomic processes, this enlightening flood will not reveal the secret of the atomic bomb. Thus does one miracle pile upon another. Two million words of explanation that don't explain the thing they're most concerned with! This is indeed something. It proves what every last one of us has had proved to his own satisfaction time and again, namely the amazing power of words to hide what they're talking about, says Providence Journal.

Drink Your Beef Steak?

Dr. James B. Allison, of Rutgers University, in a recent address told how a man may now drink the "equivalent of pounds of beef steak." The predigested proteins, called "hydrolysates," are soluble in water and are now mostly used to prepare patients for operations, to cure stomach ulcers—in fact, to do various types of healing jobs and to build up resistance to disease. They may also be fed into the veins of people who for some reason cannot take food into their stomachs. Thus lives may be saved and recovery speeded up, says Rotarian Magazine.

FIRST CHRISTMAS EVE

Oh, had I been a shepherd then
And hear the angels sing,
I wonder with my fellowmen
Had I gone wandering?

So often doubt now troubles me;
Had I been one of them,
I wonder had I gone to see
The child at Bethlehem?

Had I, though guided by a star,
On that first Christmas morn,
Have with my comrades gone so far
To see Him, stable-born?

Oh, shepherds who have shown the way
God's bidding to receive,
For courage, such as yours, I pray,
To hear and to believe.

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

Why are firecrackers used at Christmas in the South?

In the Northern States firecrackers and other fireworks are used almost exclusively on the Fourth of July; in the Southern States they are used almost exclusively at Christmas and New Year's time.

There are several reasons for this difference in practice. During the 14th century firecrackers were introduced from the Orient into Italy, where they were used from the first on Saints' days, Christmas and other religious festivals. This custom, which met with no opposition from the Catholic Church, spread to France, Spain and other Latin countries, where it still survives to some extent. The custom of shooting firecrackers on religious festivals was never common in England, although it is not likely that the Church of England, as originally constituted in the 16th century, would have objected to it seriously.

The early English settlers in the South appear to have borrowed the practice from the Spanish and French inhabitants of Florida, the West Indies, Louisiana and Mexico. The fact that the Puritans of New England frowned on the practice while the Church of England did not object to it no doubt had much to do with establishing the custom in the South and preventing its introduction in the North. Both in England and New England the Puritans were opposed to Christmas observances of any kind and in the latter part of the 17th century forbade them by law.

In the North firecrackers and other fireworks were used on patriotic and military occasions in Colonial times. On July 3, 1776, John Adams wrote to his wife that Independence Day "ought to be solemnized with pomp and parade, with shows, games, sports, guns, bells, bonfires, anl illuminations." After the Revolution firecrackers came to be used in the North chiefly on the Fourth of July, generally regarded by Northerners as the most important holiday on the calendar. In the South Christmas was regarded as a far more important holiday than the Fourth of July. From the beginning Southerners looked upon the Fourth of July as a day for political oratory and observed but did not celebrate it. Since firecrackers were used at Christmas time it did not seem natural for Southerners to use them on Independence Day.

In his "Autobiography" David Crockett wrote: "I hunted on till Christmas, having supplied my family very well along with wild meat, at which time my powder gave out; and I had none either to fire Christmas guns, which is very common in that country, or to hunt with." During the Civil War General "Stonewall" Jackson wrote to his wife: "The enemy are celebrating the 4th of July in Martinsburg, but we are not observing the day."

Thus firecrackers became peculiarly associated with Christmas in the South and Independence Day in the North. So many children were injured while shooting firecrackers that their use has been greatly restricted by local ordinances in both sections. Duties were levied on firecrackers from the Orient as early as 1859.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Theft of Yule Trees Annoys Farmer

Editor Ontario Intelligencer,

The Christmas season that should be filled with happiness and good will toward men is fast getting to be something else for the man who owns a wood lot. Farmers are naturally generous; but when they see people come in cars and help themselves to evergreen trees, often cutting several to get one to suit, it makes them see red.

With the large number of trees on Belleville market at reasonable prices, there is no need to buy gas and drive ten miles to steal one. The owner of this wood lot would like to keep the trees; but should feel relief when they are gone.

Also many are accompanied by young children. It is instilling in their minds a disregard for other people's property, and it is making a farce of the most beautiful festival; for why should anyone want to hang gifts on a stolen tree.

It is time something was done about this nuisance and the farmer given some protection.

Thanking you,
A disgusted farmer.

Sevigny Family All But Wiped Out By Tragic Blaze

Ottawa, Dec. 24. (CP)—From the side of an R.C.A.F. hospital cot, Joseph Sevigny looked down at his wife.

Unconscious, seriously injured by cuts and burns, she was all he had left.

Earlier in the day he had gone to work with his horse and cart, collecting junk through the streets of the capital, his 28-year-old wife and four young children sheltered in the temporary housing of an Air Force H-type barrack block. All four were burned to death in the blaze which flashed through the wooden structure and drove seven other families into the snow.

The family, which formerly lived in a shack at the edge of a city dump, had been moved to the wartime huts at Rockcliffe Air Station only a few weeks before.

But an electric grill, toppled into a sewing basket by the children, had started a sequence that spelled Christmas horror for the family Mrs. Sevigny tripped as she ran to the window, was caught in the jagged glass as her children died, and suffered painful burns. She struggled with firemen to return to the flames to rescue her children after being rescued herself.

It was the day before Christmas. Prime Minister Mackenzie King conveyed, through Mayor Stanley Lewis of Ottawa, his sympathy to Joseph Sevigny. And Mayor Lewis added the sympathy of the city.

The fire, inspectors learned, had flashed through the wartime building familiar to every serviceman, when it ignited a Christmas tree. In an hour it demolished the entire structure.

Sevigny, 52, was previously married, and has seven grown children, one of whom was a daughter among the 95 families sheltered in the Air Force barracks suburban to Ottawa.

Dead in the fire were Jean, six years old; Andre, four; Louis, three, and Michael, four months.

PERSONAL HEALTH TALKS

By WILLIAM BRADY, M.D.

FOLK MYTHS IN MODERN MEDICINE

1. Rubbers Indoors

One day I said to one of my eight year old pupils (writes a school teacher) "You must take off your rubbers or you will ruin your eyes"—whereupon the class laughed merrily. "How can it hurt your eyes to wear rubbers?" the infants asked. I had to admit I had always heard that as a youngster, but I didn't really know how to explain it. So, please, is there any truth in it or it is just an old wives' tale? I promised the class to find out. (Signed—and the name is almost identical with the name of the sainted Miss ———, primary school teacher in Chapel Street, Canandaigua, long ago.)

It pleases me no end, Teacher, to know that your pupils laughed outright at that quaint myth. When I was eight years old, I remember well. the teacher brooked no nonsense about that—none of us kids ever ventured to wear rubbers in school. The teacher was vigilant in the protection of our precious eyesight—as all parents expected her to be.

It is indeed encouraging, in a way that I find very little encouragement, that your pupils laughed merrily at the notion that wearing rubbers has any effect on the eyes or the eyesight. It indicates that we have made some progress anyway—and it makes me feel that it is not wholly useless to go on butting my head against the stone wall of ignorance and prejudice.

No. There is not an iota of truth in the notion that wearing rubbers indoors has any effect on eyes or eyesight.

The very fact that you submit the question to me in behalf of your class tells me, my dear young teacher, that (1) you have a fairly strong suspicion it is the bunk; or (2) you are the kind of teacher youngsters are lucky to have; or both.

I'd feel honored, Teacher, if you and your class will permit me to send you, with the compliments of the author, a complete set of Little Lessons in the Ways of Health, consisting, at last tally, of twenty-five volumes—but don't let this language throw you, for you can carry a volume in your purse without crowding out anything essential and the whole works packed for mailing will weigh less than two pounds. You will find numerous useful lessons in practical health education, sanitation, natural breathing, good teeth and the like, with scientific information your pupils can assimilate and apply in the education of their parents, grandparents, uncles, aunts, neighbors and (keep this under your hat) occasionally the "leading" specialist in the community.

The distinguished author of "Nutrition and Physical Degeneration" (Weston A. Price, D.D.S.), which is "must" reading for every dentist and as instructive as it is entertaining for every layman who has an intelligent interest in health, adopted a commendable plan when he published the fourth printing of the book in 1945, namely, that for every copy sold he places a complimentary copy in a public library in the U. S., Canada, Australia or New Zealand. Not that I have the temerity to emulate Dr. Price, but in my small way I do like to insinuate the works of Ol' Doc Brady into a school here and there when I get the chance.

No, children, it can't affect your eyes or your eyesight if you wear rubbers indoors, but I do not advise wearing rubbers indoors or outdoors except when such foot or leg covers, — rubbers, overshoes, boots, waders, etc — will keep your shoes or stockings dry. Wearing rubbers has nothing to do with health.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Crippled Teeth

Dentist filled tooth a year ago, but said he feared the filling would not prove successful because there was so little tooth to hold it. Now again having pain in that tooth. I am 34, have all my teeth and hate to lose this one—is it advisable to have the nerve killed and keep the tooth?

(Mrs. W. F. A.)

Answer—If it were mine I'd leave it to my dentist to say which course is likely to give the most satisfaction. If extraction were decided upon, it would be only on condition that a functionally efficient denture can be immediately installed. No vacancies.

Old Country Letter

Editor's note: Alison Dauphinee, wife of the London superintendent of the Canadian Press, who is spending her second Christmas in the United Kingdom, herewith compares Christmas, 1945 and Christmas 1946, and finds conditions earlier this year.)

By ALISON DAUPHINEE
Written For The Canadian Press

A year ago I wrote a holiday story on the difficulties of making a real Christmas-no decorations for the tree, poor selection of toys for children, and the problem of getting goods for the Christmas dinner.

This season all that is changed. The only thing showing no improvement is the level of prices.

Last year's homemade decorations are being used again in our mews flat on colorful Kinnerton Street—but from choice rather than necessity. We have a trim five-foot Christmas tree which cost 12s 6d (about $2.50) and were able to buy some shiny ornaments, tin foil and icicles. Electric lights for the tree still are unobtainable but one can find almost anything else.

Christmas cards, gift wrapping paper in bright colors, stickers for parcels, and Christmas crackers are available in profusion. Red candles for the Christmas table and the mantel can be found in almost any store and holly and mistletoe are on sale, although rather costly. We were able to find plenty of wild holly on a Surrey hillside at no expense.

Most people will have to use beef, lamb or some other substitute for turkey as their main course. But there is more turkey than last year—at 5s 6d ($1.10) a pound.

Vegetables of all kinds are abundant. Iced Chrismas cakes, puddings and mincemeat are on sale again but supply is limited There will be bacon and eggs for breakfast. The three-ounce weekly bacon ration continues until Jan. 5 before being cut to two ounces. Earlier this month one shell egg for each Briton was sent from Canada.

Gifts still are the biggest problem but there is no comparison with 1945. Now there is plenty to buy if the bank account holds out. Stores are well-stocked with gifts at reasonable prices which people are most anxious to have. But when the price is controlled so is the supply. The necessary clothing coupons are not available when you have only 30 coupons to last six months and a pair of stockings take three.

Last year's toys were scarce and poorly made; this year toy departments are loaded with beautiful things, particularly for boys. There are clockwork automobiles, construction sets galore, and even steam engines that really work. But prices average three or four times the pre-war level. Every time you turn around a pound is gone.

But for all that is is going to be a homelike Christmas. Even the weather is playing the tune with sub-freezing temparatures, although there is no snow.

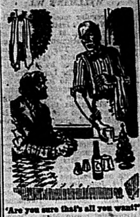
A drizzling rain seeped through Mike Duncan's threadbare coat and soaked him to the skin. Snow had preceded the rain that afternoon and the going was pretty tough. He wearily trudged along, endeavoring to keep out of the way of reckless herds of last-minute Christmas shoppers who thought of him only as a bar to their progress.

Ordinarily Duncan would not have thought of his wet skin, his tattered clothes, or even of his empty stomach. They were all part of life on the road—but this night was different. It was Christmas Eve.

It must have been the holiday season—why else would someone thrust a fifty-cent piece into his hand and then vanish into the shadows? He could only murmur a grateful "Thank you, sir, and a merry Christmas to you" before the donor disappeared into the swirling crowd.



'Are you sure that's all you want?'

Duncan reached into his left pocket, pulled out two dimes and five pennies, laid them with the half-dollar in the palm of his other hand and stared at his entire fortune of seventy-five cents.

He smiled sardonically when it occurred to him presently that the building in front of which he stood was the United States Mint. He turned and, with a laugh that had a hysterical ring to it, jingled his handful of coins. His mirth attracted the cop who had been standing on the corner watching him. The officer said to him in a brogue so thick that it could have been cut with a knife, "Move on, blasht ye!" Mike wandered off down a deserted side street, clinking his money.

After about an hour of aimless roaming through endless alleys, he found himself directly opposite a brightly decorated restaurant. He crossed over and from sheer curiosity looked in the window.

There were only two patrons inside—an elderly man and woman seated at a front table who were avidly devouring with much relish a whole roast turkey with all the side dishes.

Duncan's mouth began to water—his stomach seemed hollow—he felt his legs go weak, and his ever-present hunger was getting the best of him. Suddenly he remembered the seventy-five cents.

He thought quickly. A bed for the night at a flophouse would cost fifteen cents—that would leave him sixty. He decided to go in and order a roast turkey sandwich. He gave his hat a few deft pats and opened the door. He hung his battered hat and coat where he could grab them in case of an emergency, and made himself comfortable at a table in a corner. Duncan knew that his appearance was none too prepossessing and that a waiter would not dash up to some one from whom he could not get a tip. After a while a vinegar-faced man deigned to come to him. "What'll you have?" he asked, stifling a yawn.

"A hot roast turkey sandwich," replied Duncan.

"On toast or rye bread?"

"Rye."

"Anything else?"

Duncan shook his head. "No, nothing else."

"Are you sure that's all you want?"

"Yes, that's all. Just a roast turkey sandwich."

The waiter returned with the order, placed it before him, shook his head wonderingly and withdrew. Duncan virtually devoured the sandwich in three bites. He delicately wiped his mouth with a napkin, then beckoned the waiter. "Check, please," he said.

"Yes, the check." Duncan raised his eyebrows.

"But there is no check."

"No check? What do you mean—no check?"

"There are none tonight. This is Christmas Eve. Didn't you see the sign in the window? Customers can order anything they want. It's on the house. You're the only guy who didn't order the whole darned menu. Well, merry Christmas," he added.

Duncan's jaw dropped. His gaze fell on the half-dollar, two dimes and five pennies still clutched in his hand. Slumped in his chair, his eyes followed the back of the retreating waiter.

New Year's Mummers Parade Big Event

The Mummers' Parade on New Year's Eve is to Philadelphia what the Tournament of Roses is to Pasadena—only the Mummers have a priority on tradition.

The earliest settlers in the vicinity of present-day Philadelphia were English and Swedes. The English cherished the traditional Mummer play "St. George and the Dragon," while the Swedes were fond of masquerading informally on New Year's Eve. The two customs had merged long before the Revolution and it was customary—even among the Quakers—to extend hospitality to the masqueraders or give them a dole for refreshments.

After the Revolution, George Washington replaced St. George as the central figure of the festivities which continued along the path of spontaneity until 1886 when the parade was sponsored by the Silver Crown New Year's association.

The Municipal administration officially recognized the parade in 1901, and representative citizenry begin turning out to watch and participate in the festivities.

The number of organizations sponsoring the parade, the divisions and elaborateness thereof increased through the years. On New Year's Eve in 1930, 12,000 participated in the line of march down Bond street and 300,000 spectators watched the parade which lasted from early evening through the wee hours of the New Year.

PRAYER FOR THE NEW YEAR

Dear Lord, I ask Thee
For this New Year,
An extra gift of courage
My little trials to bear.
I ask not for success;
For wealth or fame or power;
I ask for added faith
To live life, hour by hour.
Give me kindly thought, Lord,
To use for charity.
I want no gold to give,
I'll spend kind thoughts for Thee.

Three Wise Men Historical Puzzle; Relics at Cologne

Biblically we know very little about the Wise Men who came from the East bearing gifts to the Christ Child and, having adorned Him as the King of the Jews, returned to their own country.

It is generally accepted that there were three Wise Men because of the three specifically mentioned gifts: church tradition has identified these as Melchior, Casper, and Balthasar: Melchior, king of Arabia, brought a casket of gold; Casper, king of Tarsus, brought Myrrh; and Balthasar, king of Ethiopia, brought frankincense. These gifts are considered symbolic of what Jesus was to become—gold for a king, frankincense for a high priest, and myrrh for a great physician. Collectively, the Wise Men received the gifts of charity and spiritual wealth, perfect faith, truth and meekness.

When they returned to their own country, the three Kings reputedly sold their possessions and went about preaching the Christ-King. Legend continues, that they were martyred in India for their faith.

The bodies of the Wise Men, transferred to Constantinople in the fourth century—by the Empress Helena, mother of Constantine—were enshrined at Milan for a while after the first Crusade. Frederick Barberosia authorized removal of the relics to Cologne where they remain to this day deposited within the magnificent Cathedral of Cologne.

Rich and Poor Mingled During English Yule

During the 1400s and 1500s before the Puritans got the upper hand, the golden age of English hospitality reigned. At Christmas time castles and manor houses were filled with guests by the score and the hundred.

Kinsmen and neighbors were there and on certain days the tradesmen and tenants, for all were equal at this season. The 'ostler could dance with the mistress if he had the nerve to ask her. And he usually had — after the wassail.

The great halls were a din of geniality. There was light— almost enough to pierce the wood smoke. And there were the savory aromas: Roasting beef, roasting mutton, fowl and brawn (the flesh of the wild pig, which had been caught and fed good grain to the point of arousing his suspicions; too late of course).

The dark ale flowed and added its voice—by proxy—to heighten the noise. At the peak of all this there was brought in the Yule log—a relic, incidentally, of the Scandinavians' pagan worship of Thor. With a brand from last year's big log the new one was fired.

The light from these roaring flames would shine out through portals opened to the knocks of caroling and wassailing bands who, more often than not, were brought into the hall to eat of nutmeg cakes and brawn and mustard.

Observe Holiday In Many Ways

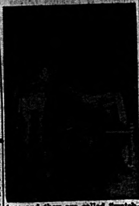
The name January is derived from the two-faced god, Janus. He was originally the god of light and day, however, he gradually became the god of the beginning of things.

The beginning of the year was sacred to Janus and a festival in his honor called Agonia was celebrated. At the beginning of any important undertaking his aid and advice was sought.

He was worshiped as the guardian of trade and shipping and he was the inventor of agriculture.

In addition to secular celebrations, many religious denominations hold special services on New Year's Eve from 9 to 10 or 12 o'clock.

The Methodist Episcopal church was the earliest to adopt this custom and they are called "watch-night services."



In 1944, St. George's Methodist Episcopal church in Philadelphia held its 175th watch night service. The church was founded in 1769 and in 1770 held what has been called the first such services in America. Many other churches are holding such services today.

January 1 is a legal holiday in all of the states and the District of Columbia. It was not until after 1918, however, that the date became a legal holiday in Massachusetts.

With the exception of war time, the date is a legal reason for liberty for the sailor and soldier. Yes, army and navy regulations specifically state this fact.

To quote from the navy regulations: "The first of January—and such other days as may be designated by the President, including the day of national thanksgiving, shall be designated as holidays on board ships of the navy and all naval stations.

New Year's Compliments

Danish families save their broken crockery — to toss against their friend's doors on New Year's Eve.

The crockery tossed, the tossers run; but not too far, they expect to be invited in for doughnuts.

The most popular household in the community is so designated on New Year's morning by the debris around the doorstep.

WEDDINGS

BENEDICT—ABRAHAMS

At eleven o'clock on the morning of December 21st., a marriage of some local interest was solemnized at the Tabernacle United Church parsonage, 246 Church Street, when Betty Abrahams, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. Abrahams of London, England, became the bride of Leslie F. Benedict of Belleville, with Rev. J. W. Houston officiating.

A JOYOUS

Hands, Hands, Hands,
Generous thumbs,
Mean, close-held digits,
Little fingers bearing signs of artistry,
Nervous, bitten nails,
Hands.

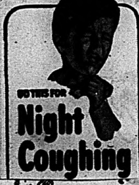
What kind of hands are these,
Raised to God Almighty?
My hands?
Your hands?
Hands.

I trow, these hands
Nailed Him to the Tree,
Hands like yours —
Like mine —
Hands.

Hands raised for mercy —
Grudging-given to His little ones.
Lustful hands, aping innocence
We never knew since childhood.
Hands.

Hands of Golgotha,
Hands of Coventry,
Bloody hands,
Groping hands,
Hoping hands,
Hands.

But yet the hands of Bethlehem,
The Wise Men's hands —
And Mary Magdalene's —
And those who, dying, won Victoria's Cross.
Hands.



May this season bring you joy
And loads of good things too,
A good old-fashioned Christmas
Is our fondest wish for you.

Canadian Missionary Played Big Part in Reclaiming Flooded Land

By BRUCE LEVETT
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Vancouver, Dec. 24 —(CP)— In Chinese he is Fan Ming Te— "Growing in shining virtue"—but in English he is Rev. Donald K. Faris, 48, of Brantford, United Church of Canada Missionary and second-in-command of one of the biggest reconstruction jobs in the world.

Mr. Faris is making his home in Vancouver for the short time he has left until he returns to his work in China with U.N.R.R.A. when he goes, he will leave behind his wife, the former Marion Fisher of Vancouver, and three sons, Don, 16; Ken, 15, and Doug, 11—all born in the Orient.

Mr. Faris tall and sparse, first went to the Orient in 1925.

He was repatriated to Canada by the Japanese in 1942, and served two years as a Chaplain in the R.C.A.F. He joined U.N.R.R.A. at the end of the war as the quickest means of returning to the Orient.

He returned to Canada a month ago to visit his mother, who was ill in Toronto. When he returns to China, he will be responsible for rehabilitating thousands of Chinese in 10,000 square miles of territory flooded in 1938 when Chinese troops broke the dykes of the Yellow River east of Kaifeng to stop advancing Japanese armies.

"Deaths never were estimated," Rev. Mr. Faris said. "They must have amounted to hundreds of thousands. That are held 1,500 people per square mile."

Great Military Feat

The stroke was heralded as one of the greatest feats of modern militay strategy. The Japanese were held back in the Kaifeng area for six years.

In 1945, Mr. Faris was assigned the job of closing the mile-long gap in the dyke. He worked as second-in-command to Col. Oliver J. Todd of Palo Alto, Calif., the advisory engineer. It was Mr. Faris' job to act as intermediary between Nationalist and Communist armies fighting in the district.

"The gap is scheduled to be closed by Jan. 5," he said.

How well he did his job is seen by the fact that in three weeks, 400,000 Communist troops moved 10,000,000 cubic metres of earth into the gap, even though it gave the Nationalist troops a decided advantage in the fighting.

"Repairing these dykes is an important step in getting better co-operation between the two parties," he said. "The flooded area can produce 100,000,000 bushels of grain per year."

But he hasn't forgotten his original work—teaching the Chinese how to grow more and better food. When he returns in January he will take with him 1,500 fruit trees of as many varieties as possible to test in the Oriental climate.

After that back to his missionary work.

A Christmas Carol

As I gaze on the fields of December snow
When the stars are shining bright,
I think of the shepherds, who, long ago
Kept watch o'er their flocks by night;
I fancy I hear the gentle sweep
Of angels' moving wings,
I catch the light of God's glory bright,
Hear the tidings the angel brings . . .

Of the Christ Child born in a manger rude
In distant Bethlehem;
Hear the gladsome song of the Angelic host,
Of peace and goodwill to men;
And the heart so harassed with earthly care,
Long closed to the heavenly light,
Flings wide its doors and welcomes there
The Prince of Peace tonight.
—Helen B. Anderson.

noted homemaking authority

Unless you're unique, you are just like the rest of us whose stock of lingerie is at an all-time low. This means more frequent, more careful washing of girdles, panties, slips and stockings. So along comes VEL to the rescue.

VEL is not a soap and does not act like a soap. It's a wonderfully gentle new cleansing agent which is safe for the most delicate garments . . . yes, even for precious nylons.

HOW TO USE VEL

Here's what you do . . . sprinkle a little VEL into a basin and pour on lukewarm water. Never rub or wring fine lingerie—just squeeze repeatedly. VEL dissolves instantly making light, foamy suds. As you wash through your undies one after the other you'll find the suds subside, but don't add any more VEL. Unlike the milky-white appearance of soap and water, VEL leaves the water as clear as soft water in a rain barrel. This clear water literally lifts out the dirt, which you'll see (with alarm!) at the bottom of the basin.

NO SOAPY FILM

VEL guards and brightens colours and makes clothes smell sweet and fresh. Also, at long last we've found something which leaves no soapy film even on black underwear. Stockings stay sheerer looking, and all your fine things feel softer, untarnished by "soap scum dinginess". Here's to soapless VEL!

Christmas in "Ye Olden Tyme"

LONDON, Dec. 24 — The first thing you must agree to do if you want a really old-fashioned Christmas is not to keep it on December 25th at all, but eleven days later.

Until 1752, when the English calendar was brought into line with the Continental by cutting out all dates from October 5th to 15th, Christmas was kept on what is now January 5.

Decorations were being put up about the time we now take them down, on Twelfth Night.

That is why the old-fashioned Christmas was usually a snowy one. For, as every one knows, "January brings the snow."

The oldest Christmas rites are hanging holly and mistletoe and burning the Yule log. December 25 was a holy night in pre-Roman Britain. They called it the Mothers' Night, and was part of their ceremonies of Iol, or Yule, meaning a wheel, which suggests the revolution of the seasons.

They hung their dwellings with evergreens, to encourage the coming of spring, and were given by the Druids a piece of the sacred mistletoe, which had been cut with a golden knife.

If the mistletoe is cut in any other way, or touches the ground, it loses its magic.

You may have as many kisses under the mistletoe as there are berries on the bunch. After each kiss a berry must be plucked.

Any girl who is not kissed under the mistletoe at Christmas will not be married during the next twelvemonths.

Married people must be just as careful about choosing holly as the unmarried must be about mistletoe. Holly is not something you can safely leave to the greengrocer to send along. For if the house is decorated with prickly holly then, said the Druids, the husband will rule throughout the year, but if it is smooth the wife will "wear the trousers."

Yule Log

A Yule Log has to be brought home by the menfolk on Christmas Eve and kindled by the women with the remains of last year's, kept specially for the purpose. The girls must first wash their hands before setting the log ablaze.

The devil is powerless to do mischief to households where the Yule log has been properly burned.

In Scotland the Yule log must be of birch, stripped of its bark and dried beforehand, while in the north of England a large lump of coal will serve.

Where to hang your stocking on Christmas Eve is also important. It is useless, for instance, to hang it at the foot of your bed.

Stocking hanging is one of the practices that come to us from Santa Claus, the original Father Christmas.

Santa Claus

Santa Claus isn't a Laplander at all, and never saw a reindeer in his life. Actually he was a Greek bishop, Nicholas of Myra, who lived in the fourth century. He was both generous and shy, and hated to be thanked for the presents he was continually making to those in need.

Once he climbed to a roof top and dropped a purse of gold down the chimney so that he would not be seen. The money, instead of falling in the fire, lodged in a child's stocking that had been hung up to dry on the mantelpiece.

That is the origin of stocking hanging. Whenever unexpected gifts came from unknown sources they were attributed to St. Nicholas.

His vogue was spread in America by German and Scandinavian settlers, and introduced from there to England at the end of the eighteenth century. His name, St. Nicholas, became corrupted to Santa Claus. His gown of scarlet, trimmed with white fur, is a Swiss idea.

Turkey, Plum Pudding

If you want a really old-fashioned Christmas dinner you must put aside all thought of turkey and plum pudding.

Turkeys of course, are another American innovation, and have nothing to do with the English tradition.

Plum puddings were unknown until about 1730.

Real Christmas fare would include of necessity plum porridge. This was a strong broth of shin beef, spiced, with raisins, currants and prunes, double refined sugar, and "strengthened" with two quarts of old hock and sherry. It was thickened with bread crumbs and served in a tureen.

Barring turkeys, almost everything should be eaten at Christmas, but particularly, if you can get them, peacocks and swans — the bird that Disraeli so enjoyed eating. In the middle Ages the Christmas Feast began about three o'clock in the afternoon and lasted until midnight.

Swan was the standard dish. In 1512 the Earl of Northumberland had five swans for Christmas, three for New Year's Day and four on Twelfth Day.

Peacocks were skinned before roasting and then reclothed in their feathers. The most beautiful women in the company always had the honor of bringing in the peacock. But it was dry eating. Three fat sheep, it was said, were needed to make gravy for one peacock.

Women today don't bake for Christmas as they did in the past.

Mince Pie

But the one thing you must not fail to eat is mince pie, which Pepys, good Englishman that he was, well knew. On Christmas day, 1662, he tells us: "I dined by my wife's bedside with great content, having a mess of brave plum porridge and a roasted pullet for dinner, and I sent for a mince pie abroad, my wife not being well to make any herself yet."

Mince pies should really be made of minced beef or mutton mixed with plums and sugar, but imperceptibly, over many centuries, the meat has grown less and less.

There is no luck in store for the man or woman who does not eat a mince pie at Christmas. To eat one is to be sure of at least one happy month. But if you wish for a happy twelvemonths then you must eat a mince pie on each of the twelve days of Christmas.

Traditional Amusements

Among traditional amusements are the waits, dancing, dicing and "keeping Christmas." The waits were companies of musical watchmen—the early police—who were ready to play and sing at all feasts.

Dicing was Queen Elizabeth's way of amusing herself at Christmas time. She enjoyed it as she always won, since she had the good sense to play with a loaded dice that always turned up the highest numbers.

Card-playing at Christmas became fashionable after Queen Anne's death because it was favored at Court. George II was particularly fond of cards. "His attachment to cards," his biographer says, "was transferred to his attachment to the ladies, and it is said that what he gained by the one he lost by the other."

Pantomimes were invented by Mr. John Rich, of Lincoln's Inn Theatre, who produced the first on Boxing Day, 1717. What he did was to space out, between the acts of a serious play, the story of Columbine and Harlequin.

From the first he gave theatregoers surprising transformation scenes, and Harlequin, with a wave of his wand, would turn palaces and temples into huts and cottages, men into wheelbarrows, trees into houses, and workshops into animals.

Between 1717 and his death in 1781, Rich brought out a pantomime every year, and each ran between forty and fifty nights.

Christmas Trees German Origin

Christmas trees are German, and the Hanoverians failed to make them popular in England. Even as late as 1789, when Mr. Papendick proposed to entertain his children with an illuminated tree, mamma shook her head.

"I objected," she confided to her diary. "Our eldest girl, Charlotte, being only six, I thought our children too young to be amused at so much trouble and expense."

Princess Lieven had a Christmas tree at Penshanger in 1829, but it was not until Prince Albert introduced one to Windsor Castle in 1841 that they became essential to an English Christmas.

The forties of last century saw Christmas reborn in England. The first vogue of Christmas trees 1841; the first Christmas cards—a thousand of them — on sale 1846; and in 1843 the issue of the greatest Christmas books, Charles Dicken's "Christmas Carol."

The idea came to him in Manchester, and he began work on it during the second week of October, He had always been fond of wandering about in poor neighborhoods on Christmas Day, watching the dinners preparing, and all the bustling excitement.

He put all that he knew of Christmas into his book, writing in a state of mental incandescence. He wept over it, and laughed, and wept again as he wrote, and walked at night for fifteen or twenty miles about the London streets thinking of his book.

It was completed by the end of November and published a few days before Christmas. Six thousand copies—the complete edition —were sold on the first day. But Dickens was disappointed. He had aimed to make £1,000 clear, but his profit by February was only £230.

When the [illegible] obligingly made urn-about-face, the joy of annt folk were unbounded and estival was held with sacrifices. ere was the abundant use of ens for decorations, such as ly, laurel and especially tletoe.

Mistletoe, which is used so frivy today at Christmas time, ging in the most unexpected ces above one's head, and d in jest by every radio coman, was held in the highest eration by the Druids, ancient abitants of Gaul and the Brit- Isles.

Then came the dawn of the ristian era and the pagan fesals took on a new meaning to more enlightened people. In a nner it became the pattern for religious celebration commorating the birth of Christ.

However, a century or two ssed before much thought was en to the matter and the exact nth and year of Christ's birth not known for a certainty. ntually, Dec. 25 was chosen. e authorities say that in annt Britain the 25th was regardas the beginning of the new , and it was observed in a val manner.

istory records many outstand- Christmas celebrations in le England, which may account for the noted story tellers of that country who have portrayed this season in such a charming manner. The Yule log, which crackled in the open fireplaces of medieval houses added a cheerful touch to Christmas in the olden days.

English Christmas celebrations were rife with jubilation until the reaction under Cromwell when the other extreme was reached, and gaiety was looked upon as sacrilegious. By an act of parliament such festivities were abolished.

Celebrations Unlawful.

Christmas celebrations in Massachusetts were made unlawful for more than 20 years after the arrival of the Pilgrims. Gradually that strict edict was overcome, but it was not until 1856 that Governor Nathaniel Banks removed the musty law from the archives and made a legal holiday of Dec. 25.

The Dutch brought all their Christmas customs with them, even to the figurehead of St. Nicholas which was on the ship that carried them here. For days on end preparations for the festive season were underway in

St. Francis Was First To Popularize Custom Of Christmas Carols

St. Francis of Assisi is accredited as having been one of the first to popularize the custom of singing carols at Christmastime. He taught the faithful simple and tuneful melodies, and the saying goes that, overjoyed by the success attending his presentation of the first Christmas Crib in 1223, he burst into joyous vocal recitation of the gospel story.

Hymns in honor of the nativity were written as early as the 4th century, but these monotonous church chants neither properly nor musically ante-date our modern carols. Experimentation with modal and intervallic relationships during the 15th century, together with the folk songs and minstrelsy of the times, made definite contributions to the traditions and popularity of Christmas music.

Puritan England forbade public performance of carols; so for a while they traveled "underground" by word of mouth, and "broad sheets," printed annually, served to preserve the texts with a variance of accuracy.

When the restoration of English royalty voided the Roundhead Parliament's abolition of Christmas festivities, residents of colonial Boston placed lighted candles in their windows to welcome the Waits who, resuming the Old English tradition, went about the city singing carols on Christmas Eve:

"It came up on the midnight clear
That glorious song of old . . .
The world in solemn stillness lay
To hear the angels sing."

Tell Me an Indian New Year's Story

The ceremonial for the snow has passed, when enemies are forgiven and harsh words forgotten, as a new trail has been blazed for all through the New Year's festivities.

The story-telling grandmother has taught the ancient chants and customs through the beads of the strings of historic wampum; but now she again has time to entertain the children.

Gathered around her lodge-fire, they plead for another story with their bright eyes and shrill voices. To satisfy them, she tells an ancient legend about the clouds.

"Long moons ago when the world was first made, the sky at wintertime was cloudless much as it is on clear midsummer days. The ground was covered with white snow and the trees, except the pines, stood bare. The cold wind whistled around the bark cabins; and with a cloudless sky, everything above and below looked dreary.

"The children, too, missed the green leaves and changing colors over the landscape and they gave a wish that the sky might have clouds now and then. It is true, dark-gray, fierce-looking clouds came in great masses and covered all the sky and let down snowflakes to amuse the children. But the children also wished for bright clouds and the old bear in the sky heard their wishes.

"So the old bear blew his moist breath into the heavy clouds and broke them up; he even made lumps in some of them, and held on to the corners of others, until when they passed over the village, each cloud had a different shape, some like bears, some like wild cats, some like hills and even some like funny people. Ever afterward, the clouds took these strange shapes to bring smiles and imagination to all children in midwinter."—Dr. E. A. Bates, Cornell.

A Christmas Carol

By Charles Dickens

Marley was dead.

Scrooge knew he was dead. Scrooge and he were partners. Scrooge was a tight-fisted hand at the grindstone, a squeezing, wrenching, grasping, scraping, clutching, covetous, old sinner!

Once upon a time—on Christmas Eve—old Scrooge sat busy in his counting-house.

"A Merry Christmas, uncle. God save you!" cried his nephew's cheerful voice.

"Bah!" said Scrooge, "Humbug!"

One day when asked to give to the poor for the festive season, Scrooge replied, "I help to support the poorhouses—they cost enough: and those who are badly off must go there."

After dinner that night, Scrooge went home to bed. A disused bell that hung in the room started to swing. It was succeeded by a clanking noise as if some one was dragging a heavy chain over the casks in the cellar.

It came through the door, and passed into the room. It was Marley! Marley's chain was made of cash-boxes, keys, padlocks, ledgers, deeds and heavy purses wrought in steel.

The Ghost informed Scrooge, "It is required of every man that the spirit within him should walk abroad among his fellowmen; and if that spirit goes not forth in life, it is condemned to do so after death. It is doomed to wonder through the world—and witness what it cannot share.

"You will be haunted by Three Spirits. Without their visits, you cannot hope to shun the path I tread. Expect the first when the bell tolls One."

Scrooge awoke and the curtains of his bed were drawn by a small, elfish creature.

"I am the Ghost of Christmas Past," it said.

The Ghost and Scrooge went to a bare room where a lonely boy was reading near a feeble fire: Scrooge wept to see his poor forgotten self as he used to be, and glanced axiously towards the door. It opened; and a little girl much younger than the boy came in and, kissing him, addressed him as her "Dear, dear brother."

"I came to bring you home, dear brother!" said the child. "Home, for good and all. Home, for ever and ever. Father has sent me in a coach to bring tyou."

They stopped at a warehouse door. It was Fezzwig's.

A fiddler came and tuned like fifty stomach-aches. They danced and ate. Scrooge found himself by the side of a fair young girl.

"It matters little," she said, softly. "To you, very little. Another idol has displaced me: and if it can cheer and comfort you in time to come, as I would have, I have no just cause to grieve."

"What idol has displaced you?" he rejoined.

"A golden one."

"Spirit!" said Scrooge, "show me no more! Conduct me home. Why do you torture me?"

Scrooge had no occasion to be told that the bell was again upon the stroke of One.

Now his bed became the very core and center of a blaze of ruddy light, which streamed upon it when the clock proclaimed the hour. Living green so filled it that it looked a perfect grove.

In easy state upon this couch, there sat a jolly giant.

"I am the Ghost of Christmas Present," said the Spirit.

"Spirit," said Scrooge, "conduct me where you will."

Perhaps it was the Spirit's sympathy with all poor men that led him straight to Scrooge's clerk. On the threshold of the door the Spirit smiled, and stopped to bless Bob Crutchit's dwelling.

In come Bob, Tiny Tim upon his shoulder. Alas for Tiny Time, he bore a little crutch.

Master Peter, and the two whiquitous young Crutchits, went to fetch the goose, with which they soon returned in high procession.

There never was such a goose. Bob said he didn't believe there ever was such a goose cooked.

"God bless us every one!" said Tiny Tim.

Scrooge was taken from Crutchits by Christmas Present to another end of town.

It was a great surprise to Scrooge to have a familiar hearty laugh. Scrooge recognized it as his own newphew's.

"He said that Christmas was a humbug, as I live!" cried Scrooge's nephew to the party. "He believed it too."

The bell struck again.

Scrooge looked about his bedroom once more, and beheld a solemn Phantom, draped and hooded. He went with the Phantom into an obscure part of the town, and into the presence of a man, just as a woman with a heavy bundle entered.

She explained that the blankets belonged to Scrooge, but being dead he was not likely to take cold.

Scrooge shuddered at the revelation that this would be his fate in retribution for his unkindnesses during life.

Holding up his hands in a last prayer to have his fate reversed, Scrooge saw the Phantom shrink, collapse and dwindle down into a bedpost.

Yes! and the bedpost was his own.

The bed was his own, the room was his own. Best and happiest of all, the time before him was his own, to make amends in!

Running to the window, he opened it and put out his head, calling to a happy urchin in the street.

"Do you know if the Poulterer's have sold the prize turkey?"

"It's hanging there now."

Scrooge had the turkey delivered to Bob Crutchit's. Scrooge then went to church and in the afternoon he went to his nephew's house.

"It's I. Your Uncle Scrooge. I have come to dinner. Will you let me in, Fred?"

Let him in! It is a mercy they didn't shake his arm off. He was at home in five minutes. Nothing could be heavier.

He went to the office early the next morning. Bob was eighteen minutes behind his time.

"I am not going to stand this sort of thing any longer. And therefore," said Scrooge, leaping from his stool, and giving Bob a dig in the waistcoat: "I am about to raise your salary."

Scrooge was better than his word. He did it all, and infinitely more; and to Tiny Tim, who did not die, he was a second father. He became as good a friend, as good a master, and as good a man, as the old city knew, or any other good old city, town or borough in the good old world.

Ancient Celebrations of Winter Solstice Reflected in Christmas Festival of Today

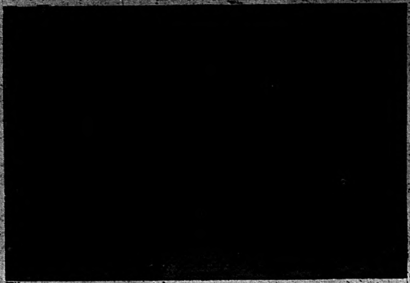
By LAURA FENNER
Central Press Canadian

Sunday, Dec. 22, was one of the most important dates of the year. Sunday morning at 5.53 the sun stood at the bottom of that long hill, figuratively speaking, which leads steadily upward to June 22, 1947. The almanac states briefly: Winter solstice, entrance of the sun into Capricorn.

Immediately there begins a steady lengthening of the days, imperceptive at first to the ordinary human, but not many weeks will pass before someone exclaims, "The days are getting longer!" And he will be as pleased as if he had made a new and startling discovery.

However, in ancient times the lengthening of the days was not just casually noticed. That event was watched for by our pagan ancestors with a high degree of trepidation.

The timorous feared that the days, which gradually had been diminishing since late June, might just keep on growing shorter and shorter and the sun farther and farther away until the sun and daylight went out altogether, leaving the earth in perpetual darkness.



THE YULE LOG — In medieval times the great baronial halls glowed with the light from a bright blaze in the fireplace, the heart of which was a massive length of timber which was called the Yule log.

Appeased the Sun.

When the sun obligingly made a turn-about-face, the joy of ancient folk were unbounded and a festival was held with sacrifices. There was the abundant use of greens for decorations, such as holly, laurel and especially mistletoe.

Mistletoe, which is used so frivously today at Christmas time, hanging in the most unexpected places above one's head, and used in jest by every radio comedian, was held in the highest veneration by the Druids, ancient inhabitants of Gaul and the British Isles.

Then came the dawn of the Christian era and the pagan festivals took on a new meaning to a more enlightened people. In a manner it became the pattern for the religious celebration commemorating the birth of Christ.

However, a century or two elapsed before much thought was given to the matter and the exact month and year of Christ's birth are not known for a certainty. Eventually, Dec. 25 was chosen. Some authorities say that in ancient Britain the 25th was regarded as the beginning of the new year, and it was observed in a festival manner.

History records many outstanding Christmas celebrations in Merrie England, which may account for the noted story tellers of that country who have portrayed this season in such a charming manner. The Yule log, which crackled in the open fireplaces of medieval houses added a cheerful touch to Christmas in the olden days.

English Christmas celebrations were rife with jubilation until the reaction under Cromwell when the other extreme was reached, and gaiety was looked upon as sacrilegious. By an act of parliament such festivities were abolished.

Celebrations Unlawful.

Christmas celebrations in Massachusetts were made unlawful for more than 20 years after the arrival of the Pilgrims. Gradually that strict edict was overcome, but it was not until 1856 that Governor Nathaniel Banks removed the musty law from the archives and made a legal holiday of Dec. 25.

The Dutch brought all their Christmas customs with them, even to the figurehead of St. Nicholas which was on the ship that carried them here. For days on end preparations for the festive season were underway in Dutch households, and the best of everything obtainable was none too good.

The Christmas spirit was hale and hearty as long as good food held out and during that time all possible business and toil that could be dispensed with was forgotten. Their trees were laden with gifts, every nook and corner was decorated with Christmas green, the poor were not forgotten.

The Christmas tree — the Tannenbaum — was the all important feature of the German celebration. It was not unusual for a household to have several of them.

Along with their other festivities, Norway, Sweden and Denmark have the pretty custom of putting out sheaves of grain for the birds, as well as giving extra rations to the animals and looking after their comfort in general.

In Sweden, an old custom is that of the Lucia Bride. At Christmas time the youngest daughter of the household, crowned with lighted candles, serves food and drink to her family.

The Russian Christmas, before the 1917 revolution, was celebrated in a more serious manner. There was good cheer, but the religious significance was emphasized. France also celebrates in a quiet manner, although there is no mistaking the season should one chance to visiting that country at this time of year. In France New Year's Day is a more festive occasion than Christmas.

An attractive Christmas Eve custom which seems to be disappearing was the "party" in church or Sunday School hall. After religious recitations and playlets each Christmas Eve at the church, all the children, and sometimes the grown-ups, too, received a bag of candy and perhaps an orange, and frequently other gifts.

Christmas and Oranges.

School teachers, too, especially in the rural districts, were expected to give a "treat" at the close of the Christmas program. Again the bag of candy and an orange played a prominent part, and it still does, especially in the small country schools.

An orange at Christmas, in the days when the "treat" was in full flower, was vastly different from the half-dozen or so which commonly reposed in the fruit dish at home. To this day the pungent odor of an orange brings back memories of Christmasses of long ago to many an old timer.

Christmas Eve many of us will listen to "The Christmas Carol," even as we have listened to it since the radio became a home institution. And as we listen perhaps the book itself will lie on the table, taken from its shelf to be a part of our observance of the day, open at the page where Scrooge makes the thrilling discovery that it is Christmas morning.

Superstitions Told About New Year's In Many Lands

New Year's Day affords everyone the opportunity to bring himself good luck throughout the year. At least that is supposed to be true according to several old superstitions concering the beginning of a new year.

The "First Foot"—the first person to enter the house on New Year's morning — plays a significant role in the family's future fortunes. He must be a dark man to bring good luck, but if he also brings a gift and "carries in" more than he "takes out," then the house is assured peace and plenty for a whole year. The most auspicious gifts as luck-bringers are a lump of coal and a red herring.

Unmarried persons are advised to look out of the window on New Year's morning. If you see a man, it is a sign that you will be wed before the year is out. Should you see a horse, you can have a wish, and it will be realized within the year. To see a dog is lucky, but a cat foretells worry.

A little care will make it possible to bring oneself good luck for the entire year. Wear something new, if possible, on New Year's Day, but the garment must be put on when you first dress in the morning. Receipt of a gift is certain to carry luck. Wish everyone you meet "A Happy New Year" but remember when the greeting is given to cross your fingers for luck. Be sure to say "rabbits" as the first word when you wake before anyone has had a chance to speak to you.

Love's progress will be aided on New Year's Day if you are careful to put on the left stocking before the right. The potency of this charm is supposed to be increased if you do all things as far as possible left-handedly during the day.

To open a bank account on New Year's Day was considered lucky in Old England, the custom growing probably from the belief of many centuries that whatever you do on the first day of the year will be an indication of what will happen during the months that will follow.

In some parts of England and Scotland it is supposed to be unlucky to leave a house until some outsider has first entered it.

No Welcome Mat Out for Americans At Port Dairen

(Richard Cushing spent several years in China as a member of The Associated Press Staff there and as a War Correspondent)

By RICHARD CUSHING

San Francisco, Dec. 24. (AP)—Russia still has no welcome mat out for Americans at the big Soviet-occupied port of Dairen, Manchuria.

Her "verbal ultimatum" to a United States navy vessel to leave Dairen within 20 minutes without disembarking an American businessman and two correspondents was the same method she used to eject three American newspapermen last February.

Only we had an armed escort then—to make sure we caught the train. No American correspondent has been in Dairen since that time, and the American Consul General, H. Merrill Benninghoff, has met with great difficulty attempting to set up shop.

Associated Press photographer Julian Wilson, and Sgt. Dick Wilson, reporter for the China edition of Stars and Stripes, rode with me into Dairen on a Soviet train last Feb. 26 after covering the Russian stripping of Manchurian industries in the Mukden area.

Full-scale Red army manoeuvres, complete with tanks, artillery and foot soldiers, could be seen from our train window as we passed the soft rolling hills north of the city.

Collared by Red army officers as we registered blithely at a hotel, the Red Star, we were hailed before Lt-Gen. Georg Kirilovitch Koslov (later relieved of his command). Koslov expressed considerable displeasure at our presence but was uncertain what action to take.

"Protective Custody"

He put us in "protective custody," restricting us to our hotel under guards with orders to see that we made no sight-seeing tours of the area.

However, I managed to slip out the next morning and talk with a few civilians, including the former Danish Consul, to find out the reaction of neutrals to the Soviet occupation, and thereby roused the ire of our reluctant host, who quickly made arrangements for our departure.

Flushed with anger, Koslov gave an interview and said we definitely were off our beat since Dairen was "as Russian as the Red Square in Moscow" as long as the war was on—and the war was still on, in his view, until the peace treaty with Japan is signed.

Our stay was only 24 hours old when we were escorted out of Dairen by three armed Russians, after a parting tongue-lashing from Koslov, whose words left no doubt that Dairen was an unhealthy place for Americans.

Especially so, we concluded, when an inspection of our baggage disclosed that carbon copies of stories we had written about the Russian stripping of industries had been filched during our stay there.

Basic Industries Top All Records in Thriving 1946

By JOHN LEBLANC
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Dec. 24 (CP)—Canada's primary industries enjoyed a thriving year in 1946 with production records shattered in many directions as the post-war boom rolled on to the year-end without letup.

Foundation of the nation's economy, the basic industries of agriculture, mining, lumbering and fishing probably never experienced a better year. Output, employment, prices and wages all were high, and there were no signs of lowering as the new year loomed.

In agriculture, a bumper crop year was experienced all around. Several field crops were well above the five-year averages and in spite of the heavy production, a ready market was available for all that was grown.

The wheat crop at an estimated 418,758,000 bushels was 37 per cent up from 1945. Output of oats, 389,900,000 bushels, showed an increase of five per cent. Barley was up one per cent at 160,000,000 bushels and field crops generally were better than average, though down in some provinces. While the 1946 yield of hay was smaller than 1945, it was of better quality. A big increase of 32 per cent was registered in the 48,000,000 hundredweight potato crop, while increased returns also were brought by sugar beets, fodder, corn, dry peas, dry beans and mixed grains.

On the other hand, shortage of feed grains coupled with transportation difficulties threatened meat and dairy production. Milk production was expected to drop five per cent, or 500,000 pounds, while a decrease of 25 per cent in cheese production was indicated.

Prospects Bright.

For 1947, Department of Agriculture surveys point to another good year, particularly in view of excellent weather that has permitted full fall plowing in all sections of the dominion.

In the fishery, a record fo landed value of the Canadia catch was in prospect, topping la year's high mark of about $100,000,000.

While figures for the inlan catch had not been compiled, un revised estimates on the coasta commercial catch compiled by the Department of Fisheries indicated a jump in value of about $4,000,000 in the first nine months of the year. The estimate to the end of September was $46,700,000 against $41,900,000 in the same time last year.

Improved prices brought about the higher returns, for, the department calculated the actual weight of the catch had dropped off, falling to 912,000,000 for the first time in 1945. Heavy decreases in the British Columbia herring and salmon runs accounted wholly for the drop, since the other coastal provinces were up.

Export trade in fish also showed a considerable increase, rising from $60,000,000 in the first nine months of 1945 to $63,700,000 in the corresponding months this year. This included both coastal and inland fish.

Record Year.

The lumber industry enjoyed the greatest year in the nation's history, and estimates at the year's close were for a cut of just about 5,000,000,000 board feet. This would be about 100,000,000 up from last year's total, which also is still an estimate.

The breakdown — all estimated — shows 4,580,000,000 board feet as the 1946 softwood cut, against 4,495,000,000 for 1945, and in hardwood 420,000,000 against 405,000,000.

Paper production was well up, the 10-month total of 3,437,137 tons showing a 28 per cent jump over the same period of 1945.

Employment in the woods was slightly higher than in 1945, though in December there was still a shortage of about 10,000 men, 5,000 of which were needed in Ontario.

Canada's mining industry had a big year and, on the basis of available figures for the first eight months, appeared on the way to exceeding the $514,222,000 figure for the value of the 1945 output.

Coal production showed a jump of around 800,000 tons in the first eight months, while the output of gold, silver, lead and some other minerals also was up considerably. Among the major minerals, copper, nickel and zinc were down.

United States loans, the foreign currency problem is well on the road to permanent solution. Though higher prices add to the cost of food and raw material imports, export gains during 1946 have been sufficient to keep the adverse trade balance down to the permissible margin.

Satisfactory arrangements for the settlement of sterling balances have been included in new commercial agreements, though in some cases only after hard bargaining. Foreign balances in London seem, on the whole, to have increased during the year, but the wartime currency restrictions were put on a permanent basis.

The budget deficit has been cut sharply. Government expenditure fell by 35 per cent and revenue was well up to the mark. With customs and excise duties and purchase tax likely to yield more, further income tax concessions are likely next year, possibly in combination with a reform of the companies [illegible] grams calling for £168,000,000 and £150,000,000 in capital outlay. Transport and housing will also absorb much capital.

Markets Undisturbed.

So far nationalization has had little effect on the financial markets. The Bank of England stock was changed into 3-per-cent treasury stock giving the same yield. The coal companies have not yet received their £200,000,000 compensation stock, which will be subject to disposal restriction, and the nationalization of inland transport and electricity production is not yet law. Meanwhile, new investment has been seriously retarded in industries scheduled for public owbership.

The cheap-money policy and the scarcity of most types of merchandise inevitably created inflationary tendencies. Money circulation, bank deposits, wholesale and retail prices, wages and other cost elements all tended upwards, but the increase during 1946 was not larger than had to be expected in view of the higher prices in the United States and the rise in employment and civilian production at home.

The floating debt rose during the second half of the year, but did not inconvenience the treasury. Small savings made a steady contribution to state finance although growing withdrawals caused the authorities to appeal for postponement of spending and to rely more on institutional sources.

The Labor government's cheap-money policy reached a culminating point in October when a 2½ per cent stock without fixed redemption date was issued to a far-from-enthusiastic market. The 2½ per cent level was enforced for local loans, and Dominion issues also profited from the possibility of conversion to lower interest rates.

Forceful Conversion.

While the city's dislike of the "tap" technique and temporary "unfunding" forced the public buyer at times to intervene, the treasury's forceful conversion methods on the whole achieved their object. Bank rates followed the downward trend of gilt-edged yields, but many share dividends were raised despite the government's appeal to the contrary.

Smaller government calls for long-term credit permitted relaxation of restrictions on private capital issues and investment of new and ex-conversion funds, but industrial extension schemes were financed largely out of liquid reserves, swollen by excess profits tax refunds.

Stock markets derived great strength from the declining yield of gilt-edged securities and showed surprising resilience in face of gilt-edged securities and showed surprising resilience in face of adverse Wall Street influences. The demand for equities and fixed-interest securities was especially strong, apart from short spells of political uncertainty, and the abundance of money also helped speculative counters. After a sharp advance in spring, stock exchange prices fluctuated for the rest of the year without big changes, but the undertone remained firm.

New Cook Undaunted Tho' Two Predecessors Vanished at Sea

Liverpool, England, Dec. 24—(CP Cable)—The liner Bantria sailed Sunday for the Mediterranean with a new cook who was undismayed by the fact that his two predecessors had disappeared overboard on similar trips.

"I'm not worrying," said Fred Mather, "I don't believe such things. But if I don't come back you'll know there's something in it."

Maher, married and father of two children, said he did not know about the other cooks until he signed on but he added cheerfully: "We've beaten subs and we'll beat the hoodoo."

The first cook on the Bantria to disappear was Clarence A. Laurie, who vanished last September off Genoa, Italy. On the Bantria's next trip to the Mediterranean, the ship's new cook, Frank McNaught, also disappeared.

"Each cook vanished during the night and nobody knows how," one crew member said recently.

Tokyo, Dec. 24 — (AP)—The skipper of a Japanese-manned United States tank-landing ship which was 12 miles off Shingu at the time of Saturday's earthquake reported Monday the feeling was "as if the hull had hit a mine — a tremendous shock." The vessel was not damaged. This was the first report from a ship at sea during the quake.

Secret Nesting Grounds of Great Whooping Crane Sought by Naturalists

Toronto, Dec. 24 (CP). — Because the whooping crane has decreased in numbers—dangerously near the extinction point—in recent years, extensive research has been instituted to try and save the bird from the fate of the passenger pigeon. Part of this project was a search by plane for the nesting grounds of the cranes in Canada.

Piloted by Terris Moore, president of the Boston Museum of Natural History, and with Dr. Olin Sewall Pettingill, Jr., zoology professor at Carleton College, Northfield, Minn., who headed the hunt for the crane's nesting ground, as passenger, the plane covered thousands of square miles of the Northwest Territories, vast areas in the Lake Athabaska district, in northwestern Saskatchewan and northeastern Alberta.

But the whooping crane succeeded for another year in keeping its nesting grounds a big secret. Not a single nest, not even a solitary crane was found in this extensive region. It is now thought possible that the birds go farther northwestward in the breeding season, and in the spring and summer of 1947 a wider and more intensive survey will be made.

The crane, a large bird named after its resonant call, stands more than four feet tall and has a wing spread of approximately seven feet. The adult bird is white except for the black tips of the wings. Once the nesting grounds of the whooping crane are discovered, protection will be given it in the hope that the species will increase in numbers. The rare bird once nested in the prairie marshes in Minnesota, with the last known nesting record at Thief Lake in 1889. Civilization apparently has pushed the extremely wary bird from its more southerly breeding grounds to northern Canada.

Only known wintering ground of the crane is on the Aranses Bird Refuge in Texas. Reports said 17 of the birds arrived there recently and that three of the birds were young, hatched this year. A hundred years or so ago the whooping crane was present in impressive numbers and seen yearly in migrations along the Mississippi River.

Canadians who have been winter visitors to south Florida will remember the cocoanut palms growing at all sorts of odd angles along the shores and keys. These palms are not natives of that state but were planted long ago when a ship, laden with cocoanuts, was hopelessly wrecked and its cargo floated ashore.

It is a seashore palm widely distributed throughout the tropics. Its seed, the cocoanut of commerce, floats readily, and protected by fibrous tissues, is not harmed by salt water. "Cocos" is the Portuguese word for monkey, and the nuts with their "eyes" at one end, suggest rather strikingly the head of a monkey.

Many bluebirds return unerringly to the same box-nests after wintering amid the waving palms of the warmer regions. This has been established by Alfred Bunker, Ontario naturalist, who year after year has leg-banded the blue birds which occupy boxes he has placed in his orchard.

Ottawa Kinsmen Club Wins Appeal Against Judgment

Toronto, Dec. 24 —(CP)— An "occasional bingo" as it's described in the Criminal Code remains just that — the Ontario Court of Appeals in a judgment here yesterday refused to define the word "occasional" specifically. What might be legally "occasional" in one set of circumstances might not be so in another.

The court allowed the appeal of the Ottawa Kinsmen Club and quashed the conviction registered against the club on a charge of keeping a gaming establishment, arising from a bingo game it conducted. Magistrate Glenn Strike had entered a fine of $10 and costs.

William Parrott, chairman of the bazaar committee of the Ottawa Kinsmen Club, conducted a six-day carnival last September at which there were bingo games each night. The Ottawa magistrate held that six nights constituted more than the "occasional bingo" game which is allowed for charitable purposes.

The appeal held that under the wording of the order the Ottawa bingo still was an "occasional game." Proceeds were for charitable purposes and no member of the club was paid for conducting the carnival.

29 Civilians Including 11 Women Killed

Paris, Dec. 24. (AP)—French troops attacked Viet Nam positions in the city hall and post office and the Indo-Chinese quarter of Hanoi today in the swelling battle for control of the battered capital of the Viet Nam Republic, Agence France-Presse said.

French authorities were quoted as saying 29 French civilians, including 11 women, had been killed in the fighting and that their bodies were brutally mutilated.

The French onslaught was opened with bombardment by planes and field guns of Viet Nam troops in a strongly fortified barracks which formerly housed Indo-Chinese guards, the semi-official news agency said.

Viet Nam batteries were reported shelling the French-held citadel with old 75-millimetre guns which Japanese took previously from the French.

French armored units and infantry battle for possession of the Rue Coton, main thoroughfare of the Indo-Chinese district to the north of the capital. Other French troops were reported advancing down the Boulevard Gambetta, south of the downtown district.

French engineers struggled to repair the damaged power plant and restore electrical service. The city also was described as without water.

The agency announced the proclamation of a state of siege in Tonkin and northern Annam.

French official circles, the agency said, announced that the bodies of some Japanese were among the guards killed defending the Hanoi residence of the Viet Nam president, Ho Chi Minh, when it was stormed by French troops Dec. 18.

Princess Sophie, a stately blonde clad in a beige dress, black coat and hat, and black calf-length boots, testified in English. She identified various items as the property of Princess Maria Alexandria of Hesse and of Prince August Wilhelm of Prussia.

Portal-to-Portal Pay Liabilities Strongly Opposed

By HAROLD W. WARD

Washington, Dec. 23 —AP)— The United States Chamber of Commerce disclosed plans today to marshal its 3,000 member organizations behind a drive in Congress to relieve employers from possible "portal-to-portal" pay liabilities dating back to 1938.

The chamber will submit a referendum Friday to its entire membership.

These members in turn will poll some 30,000 companies on a series of proposed amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938.

It is that act which makes the back-pay suits possible. It established a 42-hour work week for two years, then a 40-hour after 1940 for employees engaged in producing goods for interstate commerce.

Earlier this year the Supreme Court — in a case involving 1,200 United Pottery Workers (C.I.O.) at Mt. Clemens, Mich. — held that employees are entitled to pay for time spent preparing for their jobs on company property.

(This became known as the portal-to-portal decision, because of the contract arrangement John L. Lewis won for his coal miners, covering pay for time spent in travelling from the pit mouths to the scene of actual digging operations.

Court Makes Ruling.

In the Mt. Clemens case, the court ruled that the pottery workers had been putting in more than 40 hours a week since 1940 and hence had extra time coming to them at overtime rates. Under the law these automatically are doubled when the employee has to go to court to collect.

The amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Act which the Chamber of Commerce hopes to present to Congress with the overwhelming support of American business would:

1. Limit to some period, less than eight years, the time during which employers could be held liable retroactively.
2. Define clearly what occupations are in interstate commerce and thus covered by the act.
3. Validate compromise settlements with groups of workers for back pay under the decision.

Following up the 6 to 2 Supreme Court decision in the Mt. Clemens case, unions have filed claims for upwards of $450,000,000 in behalf of its employees thus far. And the end is far from in sight. Some estimates say a total of $6,000,000,000 may be sought from employers under the court's interpretation of working time.

The Dow Chemical Company of Midland, Mich., already has come to terms with members of Lewis' District 50, United Mine Workers (A.F.L.), with a settlement of $4,056,000.

OFFERS EYE TO BLINDED VETERAN

Grand Rapids, Mich., Dec. 24—(CP) — Precluded from military service by a 4-F draft classification, Cecil Buck, 19, has offered one of his eyes to restore sight to some blinded veteran.

He first offered an eye to fulfil the Christmas wish of Cpl. Chester R. Perkins of Phoenixville, Pa., for "two bright, blue eyes." But Perkins' doctors said the soldier's eye nerves were too badly damaged to permit successful transplanting of a cornea. Buck said the offer is still good — to any blinded veteran.

Office or Lodge Decorated With Little Effort

Have you been chosen to arrange your office or lodge Christmas party this year?

Don't look at it as a chore, or something that can be done in the last few days before the actual holiday. Make preparations for it ahead of time—and you will see how much more enjoyment everyone will get out of it.

[redacted]

Christmas is the season for parties when people spend much of their time indoors either entertaining or being entertained. It is during this season that everyone is looking for new ideas for decorating homes, offices, recreation centers or gathering places.

Christmas green are the favorite decoration and most universally used in all countries. In America, the pines, holly and mistletoe are displayed in wreaths or hung about the room to give a holiday atmosphere.

Other natural materials may be added, such as pine cones, shells, seed pods, ground pine or fruits.

If color is to be added, paint the gourds or pine cones with poster paints and fasten them on the pine boughs with wire or string. Pine comes painted in white and edged with red or blue are especially striking when hung against a dark green background.

Three dimensional posters make effective decorations, and are easily made from cloth, stiff paper or other material. This type of decoration is particularly effective made up in the traditional Christmas scenes such as the bringing in the Yule log, Nativity scenes, or caroling.

Christmas cards are a good source to go to for suggestions if you need a design for a poster or bulletin board as a central place.

Syria Camel of Jesus Blessed by Child Christ

In Syria, water and wheat await the Gentle Camel of Jesus who travels over the desert on Epiphany Eve bringing presents to good children.

Legend says the youngest of the camels which bore the Wise Men to Bethlehem was exhausted by the pressing journey and, as it lay moaning before the Stable, the Christ Child blessed it with immortality.

BEAR GIFTS

Angels, sent by the Christ Child, bring presents to Hungarian children—that is, if they have been good. They believe the angels are listening long before Christmas. If the youngsters happen to find bits of tinsel on the floor they are certain of it, as this is angels' hair.

ARMY STORY TOLD IN ALLEN'S NOVEL

War Correspondent and Soldier "Covers" Emotional Background of Volunteer Army

Toronto, Dec. 24 (CP)—Ralph Allen, in his third try, has finally got into print what he has to say about Canada's wartime army.

When Allen trained in an anti-aircraft battery he tried to write, but "got paraded by the major and told to lay off". That was at a time when various degrees of cajolement were being tried out to make Reserve recruits "go active".

Later, when he worked as a war correspondent on the Northwest Front, censorship washed out what he would have liked to say at the time of the "conscription crisis" in Canada.

He has said it all now in a novel called "Home Made Banners" (Longmans Green).

The book is not a political tract, but an effort to tell objectively the war story of an individual Canadian soldier, Mike Tully from Saskatchewan, who might be Frank Williams from Ontario or Angus MacNeill from Nova Scotia. Through its reporting of the barrack-room and slit-trench thinking and the battle-field action of Mike, it translates all the sense of worry and loneliness and exhaustion, and the combat initiative and interdependence of the men who fought from Pachino to Bremen.

Always, from the time you find Mike trying to make up his mind, in Canada, until you see him meeting Tina on his return, the emotional problem of the volunteer army is a thread in the story's fabric.

Mike, in 1940: "It wouldn't be that way if we had conscription. It would still be hard, but every time a man went away, some woman wouldn't have to start figuring out whether she's finished second to a brass band."

Tina, in 1946: "I envied all the girls whose husbands waited to be drafted . . . there was some mean streak in me all the time, asking me if you weren't putting me second to something foreign and far away . . ."

And Old Pop: "Think hard about those home-made banners. Maybe your banner will only be the conviction that, whether what you started out to do is turning out the way you hoped it would or not, it was still necessary for you to start. Maybe it will be the conviction that, whether the world ever reaches the place it's aiming for or not, the little way that you helped to push it was in the right direction."

A Dickens Favorite

Christmas in Britain would not be complete without the radio version of the Dickens story "A Christmas Carol".

For many years now this has featured in the Christmastide programs of the British Broadcasting Corporation. The evils which the great nineteenth reformer-novelist describes have, of course, passed away — Bob Crachit's fifteen shillings a week and one day's holiday a year as Scrooge's clerk would be impossible in present-day Britain. But the Christmas spirit of the novel remains.

The story opens with Ebenezer Scrooge seated in his counting house on Christmas Eve, returning "Bah! Humbug!" to his nephew's seasonable good wishes. But when he returns that night to his gloomy, solitary lodgings, the ghost of his former partner appears to him and tells Scrooge, shivering with fear, of the miserable fate that awaits him if he does not change his ways — an eternity of loneliness and regret.

Then come three more ghosts — the Ghost of Christmas Past, who takes the old miser back to the scenes of his childhood and earlier manhood, showing him what might have been had greed not become his master; the Ghost of Christmas Present who shows Scrooge the simple happy Christmas festivities of his despised and poverty-stricken clerk, Bob Crachit; and the Ghost of Christmas Yet To Come, who shows him his own death, lonely and unwept.

When he awakes on Christmas morning Scrooge hears the church bells ringing

Here's How To Select a Tree

"How can we select a Christmas tree that holds its needles?" is a question fathers and mothers ask year after year.

The answer depends on the type of tree you buy and the care you give it once you set it up.

All trees tend to drop their leaves after they are cut and stored in a dry room. But some kinds naturally hold their needles longer than others. Trees used most commonly on Christmas are the spruces, fir, hemlock, pine and red cedars.

Spruce are the first to shed their needles. A spruce can be identified by grasping a branch tightly. Its sharp needles will prick your hand.

The ideal Christmas tree is the fir. It resembles the spruce except that its needles are not sharp. The needles stay on the tree for a long time, and become a golden brown before they finally drop off. Needles of the Douglas fir are flat and soft to the touch. This popular tree can be easily identified by examining the cones which have small appendages on each side.

Pines have never been very popular as Christmas trees, in spite of the fact that they do not shed their needles easily. This is most likely due to their unsymmetrical appearance which does not closely resemble the traditional Christmas tree.

No matter what kind of Christmas tree you select, it will hold its needles longer if it is standing in water. Place a little water in the base of your tree stand and you will be bothered less with falling needles than you were last year.

APPLE CUSTOM

Apples play a great role in Christmas customs. In parts of England they are pared and the peeling, taken off in one spiral, is thrown over the left shoulder. Tradition has it that the peeling will form the initial of the person whom the parer is destined to marry.

Telescope Memorial of Son

New York, Dec. 24—(CP)—As a memorial to FO. Walter Bigelow Rosen, New Yorker killed while piloting an R.C.A.F. bomber over Europe in 1944, his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Walter T. Rosen, have presented an eight-inch telescope to the Harvard College Observatory.

A locomotive, railway gun and tank-in-transit—all made of wood—delight the heart of this young man. It was just what he needed for his war games.

Beauty of the Bells

Many lands will hear the Christmas message rung on bells which owe their tunefulness and beauty to a "lost art". Ancient craftsmen knew the secret of true harmonic tuning, but for a long period the formula was lost. Knowledge of it had died with the craftsmen. Much experiment was made to rediscover the skill of accurate tuning, but not until about 30 years ago was the lost art finally found again in the bell foundries of Britain. This explains the supremacy which bells from Britain have gained throughout the world. One foundry alone in London has made bells for Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Union of South Africa, Palestine, Argentine, the West Indies, Egypt, Persia, Holland, Belgium and Malta.

Old bells have been sent to Britain from many lands to be retuned according to the re-discovered formula, which has been improved upon since first it yielded up its ancient secret. The casting of bells has not changed basically since medieval days, though it has advanced technically. Tuning is still the most important process in bell-making.

. . . . SAME OLD SANTA

Same old Santa, same old joys,
Same old dolls and sleds and toys;
Same old holly, same old tree,
Same old gifts for cherubs wee;
Same old carol, same old light,
Same old stockings hung at night;
Same old words of merry cheer,
Same good wishes for the year.
Same old Christmas! Seems to me
That's the way it ought to be.

Hawkers Bustle In Bethlehem

In Bethlehem, the place of the Nativity, Christmas is also observed on January 6, and in peaceful years, it has one of the most picturesque of all celebrations. Tourists do not see in Bethlehem the reverence they logically expected to see. On the contrary, the most sacred spot in the Christian world on one of the most sacred days in the Christian year becomes a virtual fairground.

Sellers of miscellany cry their wares at the very door of the Church of the Nativity, built on the sight of the Manger. Hucksters of mother-of-pearl crosses hawk their goods among the throng of visitors. One-eyed beggars tell their tales of woe to would-be contributors while Moslems persuade pilgrims to buy bright-colored and sticky sweets brought from Damascus. In the throngs are Jews, hundreds of them.

The legend is that the Moslems left this church standing when they destroyed or converted all others in the Holy Land because of the legend of the Three Kings which was worked over the main door. When these Arabs saw the Arab-looking king bringing presents to the Infant Jesus they refrained from laying sacrilegious hands on the edifice built where He was born.

Book Describes Canadian Birds

Ottawa, Dec. 24 (CP)—A book on Canadian birds by Rt. Hon. Malcolm MacDonald, governor-general of Malaya and former British high commissioner to Canada soon will be published in Toronto (Oxford University Press).

Mr. MacDonald said he expected the book will come out some time this spring.

Entitled "The Birds of Brewery Creek", the book is based on studies of birds around Ottawa. Brewery Creek is a tributary of the Ottawa River.

Traditional New Year's Gifts Were Sacred

The Druids distributed branches of the sacred mistletoe, cut with peculiar ceremonies, as New Year's gifts to the people and the Saxons observed the day with gifts and festivals.

The Roman custom of taking gifts to the emperor was introduced into England as early as the time of Henry III. Queen Elizabeth is supposed to have supplied herself with her jewels and wardrobe almost entirely from these gifts.

As late as 1692 the English nobility were accustomed every year to send to the king a purse containing gold.

Under the Tudors and the Stuarts it was the habit of all classes to give presents to friends with the best wishes for the New Year.

Ladies received presents of gloves or pins which were then expensive. Sometimes the gifts were wrapped in money and from this practice we have the term "pin money."

Gaudy Boulevard Pauses as Santa Claus Goes By

(By W. H. Colclough, Vancouver, writing from Hollywood in the Stratford Beacon-Herald.)

"We're in luck," cried our good-natured American friend, as we turned into Hollywood Boulevard. "Santa Claus is coming".

For twenty odd years, we were told, Santa Claus parades down Hollywood Boulevard, in Hollywood, every night for a month before Christmas. It is something like a triumphal entry with all the glory and pageantry of a king. And here he comes!

The columns of cars, three abreast, facing towards the oncoming Christmas visitor came to a slow stop. We held the inside lane and therefore enjoyed a ringside seat. Crowds packed the sidewalk and flowed over among the cars. Santa Claus was coming.

Preceded by a machine filled with cops, a huge float rolled toward us at about four miles an hour. Everything is measured in terms of dollars and cents in this "In God We Trust" land, and the float cost $28,000. It looked like a mediaeval fort crawling along the ground on invisible feet, for the edges of the chassis barely missed the pavement. Box-like windows opened along the side, and from somewhere came the stentorian tones of Santa Claus (or his deputy) roaring out good wishes to the crowd.

Probably ten feet above the pavement, Santa Claus sat in all his gilded glory, holding in his hands the reins which guided the prancing deer before him. The deer, life-sized, were held in place by some spring contraption which permitted them to gallop along in a realistic manner, and they were the spearhead of the mechanical cavalcade.

Still higher up and behind Santa Claus, upon the silk and plush seats of an imitation carriage, gaily lighted and festooned with drapes and tassels, were four celebrities—two men and two women—smiling and bowing to the crowd. Usually the travelers in the carriage are movie personnel, with the obvious implication that when it comes to Santa Claus, Christ or Christmas the movie kingdom is one step higher up. In this case Will Rogers Junior, a recently defeated politician, was one of the smiling guests.

Near the centre of the float, at the top, the black snout of what looked like a metal smoke stack poked up, but instead of rolling out smoke or bubbles, it disgorged a steady drift of artificial snow, which curled and sifted upon the sightseers and streets in a very realistic manner. All the time a running background of Christmas songs and quips supported the voice of Santa Claus, with sacred songs strangely absent.

The float soon floated past, and immediately a couple of cops dashed up with: "Get moving fast. Don't block the traffic. Keep going."

If lights and floral designs make a street beautiful, then Hollywood Boulevard should be tops. Down the street, as far as the eye could see, ten thousand lights blazed and twinkled. Every fifty yards on each side of the street a simulated Christmas tree had been erected, loaded with hundreds of lights, each tree shedding a different shade of color from its neighbor. As you looked ahead, the lighted trees took on the form of two lines bisecting each other in the far distance. In addition, electric balls, bells, stars, and subtle talking signs embellished lamp posts, windows and building cornices.

We swung away from the boulevard and skirted the hills overlooking the city of Los Angeles which, like an electrically marked quilt, stretched far below and beyond, losing itself in the haze of night. We worked our way down through the never-ending traffic which flowed here and there, well into the city itself.

"Lock your window," warned our driver. "This is the toughest section of the city. I wouldn't slow down or stop for a light here without locking the doors."

What a contrast! Even the city itself had conspired to make and keep this section tough, for street lights were far apart and dim. A small park decked with olive trees held the mystery of the night in its dark shadows. We caught the glimpse of people sitting on a bench, and there seeped into the car that pungent smell associated with dirt and the slums.

Once while we stopped for a red light, a voice, not unmusical and with a slight foreign accent, sang a few bars of "Silent Night". In spite of the sordid surroundings it seemed a trifle more Christian than the pagan ostentation up on the Hill.

Christmas Season Radio Broadcasts Link Whole World

Canadians to Hear King's Message While CBC Brings All Canada Into Homes on Christmas Day

By JOHN SMALLEY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Developed through the last decade to its present-day high level, Christmas season radio programs are a welcomer adjunct to the festive period in all homes. Station staffs everywhere spend much time preparing for the season and without exception — whether at 500-watt or 50,000-watt stations—succeed in making the event memorable for the inveterate radio fan or the casual listener.

Feature of Christmas Day, and again the result of years of experience, is the world-wide Empire broadcast. The British Broadcasting Corporation has organized a world-wide hook-up beginning with the bells of Coventry Cathedral and followed by the annual Christmas message from the King to the world. The program, to be carried in Canada largely by Canadian Broadcasting Corporation networks, will be carried in part by other stations as well.

Circling the globe in the space of an hour, the Empire broadcast will bring to Canadians the voices of British occupation troops in Hamburg and Tokyo and then switch to the Church of the Nativity in Bethlehem. There will be exchanges of Christmas greetings among friends and kinsmen of the Commonwealth and the Empire, and two-way conversations between Glasgow in Scotland and Milan in Italy, between the Shetland Islands and Norway.

Christmas Day on the Atlantic, from remote Bishop's Rock lighthouse; the day in Labrador; a party in New York; Germans in Hamburg, and a party of children of Nazi concentration-camps victims—all will be described at first hand. From "down under" will come the broadcast of a midnight bathing-party in Australia and from Canada a ski-camp at Gray Rocks Inn, St. Jovite, Que.

To Hear From Moscow.

A special Christmas-time transmission of choral and folk singing from Moscow's grand opera house will mark the first "live" relay from that city since the war and will be a feature of the program.

CBC networks will combine on Christmas Day and, in keeping with the spirit of the day, there will be no commercial programs. CBC's own feature is the linking of all Canada on the one program. Christmas celebrations in a French-Canadian home at Cap Rouge, a fisherman's home in the Maritimes, one of Montreal's leading hotels, a veterans hospital in Winnipeg—these are some of the places CBC microphones will visit to present a picture of "Canadian Christmas, 1946".

All Canadian stations have full-day schedules of special Christmas programs. From the oldest church in Western Canada, St. Andrew's Anglican in Lockport, Man., will come a special Christmas morning service. United States networks will also carry special Christmas broadcasts many of which will be heard in Canada.

A Merry Christmas to All From The Management and Staff of Radio Station CJBQ

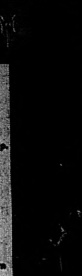
FIRST CHRISTMAS



The baby toddled to the tree.
Her eyes danced at the mystery
Of starry lights and tinseled pine
And gifts bow-tied with silver twine.
The baby spoke her own strange word,
Excited and, to us, absurd.
But quickly at the tree's bright tip
The white-gowned angel touched her lip.

We heard a voice, bell-like and clear
Yet barely tinkling in the ear.
"Dear child," it said, "this is the night
Above all others fair and bright.
This is the night when children know
White secrets of new-fallen snow.
This is the night when children hear
The hoofbeats of St. Nick's swift deer.

"This is the night a Child was born
Who grew and taught a world then torn
As now by strife that all men live
In the same measure as they give."

—Ken Woodman

EMPIRE BROADCAST

Friends and kinsmen throughout the Commonwealth and Empire will exchange greetings on the traditional BBC "Empire Broadcast," presented this year under the title "Home Again." The program will conclude with the annual Christmas message from the King.

Another broadcast from overseas will tell the story of Canadians abroad; and Matthew Halton, CBC's, European correspondent, will report on Christmas in post-war Europe. From Australia, listeners will be given an account of Christmas "down under;" and here at home CBC microphones will take them in spirit to many parts of the Dominion for a picture of "Canadian Christmas, 1946." This year, a Christmas morning church service will be broadcast from St. Andrew's church in Lockport, Manitoba — one of the oldest churches in Western Canada.

MUSIC

A performance of Handel's "Messiah," part of the Christmas tradition throughout the English-speaking world, will be presented from Vancouver. Winnipeg will present "Dances of the Nations;" chorus and organ will be heard in another program, from the Pavilion in Stanley Park, Vancouver; and the "Four Gentlemen" will provide a half-hour of "The Old Songs," from Toronto. Other specially arranged periods of music for Christmas will be heard during the day.

IN LIGHTER VEIN

Network stars will club together to present "CBC Christmas Party" from Toronto, an hour of varied entertainment with a Christmas sparkle. 'Prairie Christmas Party,' from Winnipeg, will bring a flavor of the old-time barn-dance celebrations.

FOR CHILDREN

A repeat performance of the "Inkameep Nativity Play," written by children of the Inkameep Indian school, and adapted for radio, is to be presented with special music from Vancouver. For Christmas Day, Mary Grannan, the CBC's "Just Mary," has a special story to tell children about a little boy and a little girl, named David and Rebecca, who play on a hillside near Bethlehem. Other programs for young listeners will be a Christmas edition of Ray Darby's "Alan and Me," and a special Christmas production of "Cuckoo Clock House."

ROCKET RICHARD STILL ON TOP IN SCORING RACE

Shifty Montreal Player Snipes 17 Goals and Has 13 Assists

Montreal, Dec. 24 —(CP)— Maurice (the Rocket) Richard, shifty Montreal Canadiens right winger, continues to lead the National Hockey League individual scoring race with a total of 30 points, league statistics released today revealed.

Richard has sniped 17 goals, which is tops in the goal scoring section, and registered 13 assists for a total of 30 points, two ahead of Detroit's Billy Taylor who took over sole possession of the runner-up position after being tied with Toronto's Teeter Kennedy last week.

Billy (the Kid) Taylor, Detroit forward, has sunk nine goals and earned 19 assists to lead the league's playmakers, while Leaf's Kennedy, tied with Boston Bruins' Milt Schmidt for the third place berth with 26 points, is runner-up in the goal scoring department with 15 tallies. He has 11 assists to his credit.

Schmidt, who has been gradually climbing the scoring ladder column, moved from the fourth rung to a tie with Kennedy. The hard-working Boston pivot-man finds himself with 12 goals and 14 assists for a total of 26 points.

Detroit's Roy Conacher follows in fourth position with 24 points.

Lanky Bill Durnan, Montreal Canadiens' net custodian, has the best goals-against record among the goalkeepers. Durnan has allowed 53 goals to slip by him in 24 games while Turk Broda, in the red 57 times in 25 games, leads the shutout artists with three.

Wild Bill Ezinicki of Toronto leads the bad men of the circuit with a total of 53 minutes spent on the penalty bench, two minutes more than defenceman Johnny Mariucci of Chicago.

Toronto Maple Leafs still lead the standings with 36 points made up of 16 wins, five losses and four ties. Canadiens follow one and half games behind with 33 points as a result of 15 wins, six losses and three ties.

Chips Off The Sports Block

By George H. Carver, Sports Editor

In this great festive season, the sports department wishes to wish to its many readers, the best, happiest, jolliest Yuletide of all time.

* * *

To baseball, softball, hockey, golf, swimming, basketball, tennis, in fact all phases of athletic endever we extend our wishes that next year will see a brighter, better phase in recreational endeaver.

* * *

We in Belleville have been working under a more or less handicap during the past year. But the new year brings promise of better things. We have reason and good reason to believe that 1947 will see this city with lighted recreational parks and in the latter part of the year an artificial ice plant.

* * *

In the meantime, thanks a million to you fellows and gals who sent us the season's greetings. We have tried to do a job and at times have slipped a bit. But we are not all perfect.

* * *

So, may the best of everything be yours because we think that the sports fraternity, fickle a bit at times, but sincere in the majority, is just about the best gang we know.

* * *

And in closing, just a reminder to that grand guy who conducted this column before we arrived, Ken J. Colling. The best of everything chum, and before another year rolls around, may you be back in the old haunts, running this column the way it should be operated, and basking in the smiles and fellowship of your old friends and colleagues.

Krol Chosen as Outstanding Athlete in '46 by Sports Writers

By WILLIAM H. DUMSDAY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Dec. 24—(CP)—Four-year-old Dickie Krol stretched in his crib today, unenthused because his daddy — football's Joe (King) Krol — had been chosen as Canada's outstanding athlete of 1946. Santa Claus would get Dickie's vote, even over Daddy, if that football he asked for is under the Christmas tree tomorrow.

But among the 10-year-olds and up there wasn't a protest against the decision of sport writers across Canada in crowning Krol, backfield star of the Dominion champion Argonauts. The lazy-looking backfielder received 59 of a possible 75 votes in a poll conducted by The Canadian Press.

Seldom has an athlete rated such acclaim, with 14 of 25 participating writers giving Krol their first of three choices. Henry Martell of Edmonton, Canadian amateur golf champion, placed second with 15 votes, three more than received by Bill Durnan, goalie of Montreal Canadiens, world hockey champions.

It's difficult to figure anybody besides Krol to head the poll as he's Canada's finest footballer and that's the game which produces most of sport's glamor boys. Maybe it's because other pastimes are not so fresh in their memories when the writers vote, but in the last four polls, interrupted by war, gridiron greats headed the list three times.

Krol topped all scorers in Canada as he led Argos through a tough season, climaxed by the successful defence of the Grey Cup against Winnipeg Blue Bombers. The 27-year-old backfielder did everything — run, punt, place kick, pass and receive passes — a quintuple threat.

Born in Hamilton, of Polish extraction, Joe became a citizen of Windsor at six months and once he became old enough to pull on moleskins, moved about the province trading on his gridiron ability.

He attended University of Western Ontario and tried out with Detroit's professional Lions before he joined the Argos last year. He'll likely receive other pro offers but you'll probably find the 210-pounder hereabouts when the first whistle blows next fall. Krol turned down more money to play with another Eastern club last fall because he thought Argos were "a nice bunch of guys."

Just what makes Krol tick in such a big way he doesn't know himself, but his main secrets seem to be trigger-quick-thinking, perfect timing and complete relaxation between plays and when he's tackled. In his career Joe has suffered but one fracture and he thinks it's because "I let go" instead of resisting the impact.

KRAMER'S FEET BOTHERING HIM BEFORE MATCHES

Australian Team Believes it Has Excellent Chance to Retain Davis Cup

By GAYLE TALBOT

Melbourne, Dec. 24 — (AP) — The United States' chances of winning the Davis Cup were not helped today by disclosure that the team's siege gun, Jack Kramer, had injured a small bone on the bottom of one of his feet.

Kramer insisted it would not handicap him, but nevertheless the trainer at Kooyong advised him to take it easy in final practice sessions today and tomorrow. As a result, the American champion did not play a regular set, but concentrated on hitting various types of shots set up for him, and did little running.

The Australian players already know of the mishap and have expressed regret that Kramer might not be able to play his usual smashing game right to the hilt.

Walter Pate, non-playing captain of the American team, and the other members of the American squad appeared unperturbed. One of them said:

"Jack never plays real well unless he's got something wrong with him."

Meanwhile, Australian tennis writers almost unanimously agreed today that the nomination of Ted Schroeder instead of Frank Parker for the second singles post had enhanced Australia's chances of retaining the cup.

Typical was the comment of R. E. Schlesinger, former Australian star player, who wrote in the Melbourne Sun:

"Before it was announced that Schroeder would be America's second singles representative I felt confident that Australia would defeat America by three rubbers to two. I still predict that we will win by the same margin, but there is now a decided possibility that the final tally will be four rubbers to one in favor of Australia.

Parker is still very morose about it and Gardnar Mulloy is not exactly imbued with Christmas spirit.

Manitoba Will Make Strong Bid For Hockey Honors

Winnipeg, Dec. 24 —(CP)— Manitoba will make strong bids this year for both senior and junior Dominion hockey honors. Always strong contenders in the junior division, Manitoba, for the first time in more than 10 years, is operating a classy senior league.

Current leaders in the three-team loop from which local fans hope to draw an Allan Cup contender, Winnipeg Flyers are a collection of former juniors and hardy veterans forming a well-balanced organization.

Flyers' strongest opposition comes from Winnipeg Stylists, last season's Orioles who lost to Calgary Stampeders in the Western Canada senior final. Coached by Joe Krol, former New York Ranger, Stylists impressed rail-birds in their latest appearance against Flyers, winning 5-3 after having dropped their first two starts to the leaders.

Selkirk Fishermen, third team in the league, have dropped all five starts to date.

In the junior league, Monarchs, starting out this season as in last, dropped the majority of their exhibition games but to date top league standings with six wins and one loss. Brandon Elks, strong favorites to dethrone Monarchs, hold second spot, three points down on the leaders. Winnipeg Rangers are tied with Brandon. St. James Canadiens with four points and the winless Portage La Prairie Terriers round out the league's other two spots.

Play Against Lakehead

Manitoba's first opposition following their own provincial playdowns will be against the Lakehead winners. Both senior and junior hockey teams at the Lakehead are just beginning their regular season's schedules, although squads of both leagues already have seen action in numerous exhibition games with outside clubs. Juniors, too, have just completed the McLeod Memorial series, a regular pre-season competition involving all teams in the league.

Four teams comprise the Lakehead junior circuit—Port Arthur West-End Bruins, Port Arthur Juniors, Fort William Hurricane Rangers and Fort William Columbus Club. Bruins and Columbus Club lead the circuit to date.

With practically all members of last year's championship Port Arthur Flyers gone to other centres, the outlook is not bright for a strong Memorial Cup contender from the Lakehead although a better-balanced league appears to be shaping up.

Fort William and Port Arthur senior teams have hooked up with Duluth in an international league and generally are expected to have stronger clubs than last year.

CLUB FIELDING CROWN GOES TO ST. LOUIS CARDS

Schoendienst Tops Second Basemen and Kurowski the Third Sackers

By JOE REICHLER

New York, Dec. 24 (AP)—It was not only their batting and pitching but their high efficiency rating in the field that enabled the St. Louis Cardinals to win the 1946 National League flag in a photo finish with the Brooklyn Dodgers.

The official National League fielding averages, unveiled today revealed that the Redbirds led in club fielding with a percentage of .980 and committed the fewest errors, 124.

The Cards' fine defensive play enabled the league to establish a Major League fielding record of .9741, surpassing the previous best mark of .9733 it had set in 1942. The loop also bettered its previous lowest error total from 1,312 to 1,259.

From an individual fielding viewpoint, the circuit's all-star infield included two Cardinals, Al (Red) Schoendienst and George (Whitey) Kurowski. Schoendienst topped the second basemen with a mark of .984, and Kurowski headed the third basemen with .968.

Made Only One Error

The most remarkable fielding performance was turned in by Frank McCormick of the Philadelphia Phillies, who led all first baseman with a record of .999. He participated in 134 games and made only one error in 1,284 chances to better the old mark of .999 made by Walter Holke, Boston in 1921.

John (Buddy) Kerr of the New York Giants, set a couple of records in pacing the shortstops with .982 and failed by one percentage point to tie Eddie Miller's Major League mark of .983 set in 1942.

Kerr finished the season with an unbroken string of 52 consecutive errorless games, surpassing the mark of 51 compiled by Leo Durocher, of the 1931 Cincinnati Rids. Kerr also wound up with an unbroken string of 286 consecutive errorless chance, eclipsing the old mark of 251 held by Miller with the 1940 Boston Braves.

Muller Heads Catchers

Ray Muller of the Reds, who headed the catchers with .994, extended his league consecutive game record for receivers to 223 by catching his team's first 16 games.

Chicago's Johnny Schmitz, with 61 errorless chances, led the pitchers, but his teammate, Claude Passeau set two standards by going through his 233rd game before finally being charged with an error May 28. His streak covered 145 consecutive games.

Tennesee Team Refuses to Play Against Negro

McKeesport, Pa., Dec. 24. —(AP)—More than 2,600 fans were left waiting last night when the Tennessee Basketball team refused to take the floo rbecause Duquesne Coach Chick Davies wouldn't promise not to use a Negro player.

Davies and Coach John W. Mauer of the Tennessee Vols team hel da two-hour conference before the game was finally cancelled and the disappointed fans sent home.

Davies said he had agreed not to use freshman star Charley Cooper "unless he had to win a close game," but that this did not satisfy the Vols coach.

Mauer said: "When there was no assurance the Negro player would not appear, my boys said they wouldn't play. They are all Southern boys and you understand the situation which confronted me."

Davies said he had put Tennesee's ultimatum up to the squad in the dressing room.

"Cooper told the team he wouldn't mind if they decided to play without him because 'he didn't want to be cause of any trouble.'"

The Duquesne mentor said, "but the boys told him he was a member of the squad and as long as he continued a member of the squad he would play in their games."

Canadian Sport Snapshots

By DOUGLAS AMARON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Montreal, Dec. 24 (CP)—The first real snowfall of the season—12 inches in the Montreal district during the weekend—brought joy to the hearts of skiers whose most welcome present at this time of year is a white Christmas.

All signs point to the most active ski season since before the war, both competitively and from the point of view of the novice. The competitions will begin early in the New Year and continue every weekend on hills all over the province until the warm spring sun melts the snow.

Highlights of the season will be the Canadian championships, being staged in February on big Mont Ste. Anne, about 15 miles east of Quebec. A ski advancement society, under the presidency of Hon. Gerald Martineau, Quebec sportsman and member of the legislative council, has been formed in the provincial capital to assure the success of this meet which will draw competitors from all over North America and from Europe.

Everything possible is being done to stimulate interest in these championships and reports from Quebec say the meet will be one of the largest, if not the largest, ever staged in this province. Already hotel accommodation is at a premium for the week of the championships.

Another boost to skiing this winter is the fact that this will be the testing year for Canada's Olympic team. This has given more than usual significance to the competitions for skiers know the eyes of the men who pick the team will be upon them.

While competitions make the news in skiing, they involve only a fraction of scores of thousands of Canadians whose favorite winter sport is sliding down hill — often with a tumble at the bottom—or gliding for miles across country along tree-lined trails.

Railway companies, who carry the skiers to the mountains each weekend expect this will be a record season. The first extra ski trains to the Laurentians will run next Saturday and from then until the spring every weekend will see a trek of men, women and children, in their brightly-colored winter togs heading north.

The Movie Column

It looks as though the future holds fewer serials, a fact which is causing alarm in the suburbs and smaller towns where the patrons dearly love to watch the good guys and the bad guys whooping it up.

Universal, one of the three studios which have been making serials, has cut them off its production schedule in an attempt to step up the quality picture field.

It's serials like "Hop Harrigan", "Jesse James Rides Again" and "G-Men Never Forget", which have kept the small town turnstiles clicking. Universal itself was built on the profits of a serial, "Lucile Love", and during the depression serials kept the studio's financial head above water.

In spite of present high production costs, serials make gratifying amounts because large numbers of people everywhere but in Great Britain like having their nerves frazzled to exhaustion by the suspense of the weekly episode.

Present-day serials generally cost between $200,000 and $300,000 and return two or three times their cost. Republic's "The Lone Ranger" eventually brought in $1,150,000 for an investment of $285,000. This serial even made a hit in Great Britain where it was pasted together into a feature-length film and renamed "Hi Ho, Silver".

Million-dollar earnings were common when serials were younger and cheaper. "Lucile Love", made in 1914 for $30,000, drew $1,500,0004 "The Perils of Pauline", starring Pearl White, was another big earner of the time and brought Miss White herself an income which finally totalled $10,000,000.

Miss White was the only serial queen who became rich from them. In her contract calling for a salary of $60 a week she had inserted a clause giving her a small percentage of the picture.

Republic and Columbia, the two studios still making serials, have no intention of stopping.

The only rule for making them is "keep it moving!" Characters speak only as a last resort so as not to hinder the action. One serial writer working on "Flash Gordon Conquers the Universe", suggested one of the hero's friends be allowed to say before rushing to get him, "I'll be back in a flash with Flash". When last heard of he was in the United States Marines.

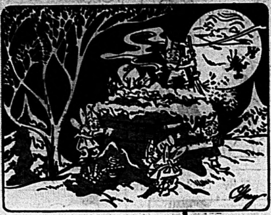
The Little People of Santa Claus Land

Gay Little Elves and Happy Little Dwarves fix Santa Claus' sleigh.

EDITOR'S NOTE — These stories, written for the children, will find a place in the hearts of their elders—who, like adults around the world, enjoy reliving the fantasy that Santa Claus and his land of "little people" spells.

By JANE NILES, Central Press Staff Writer



EPISODE FIVE

Merry Little Muncheons and Gay Little Dwarves clean the chimneys.

Now that everything is ready in Santa Claus Land for Santa's big trip on Christmas Eve, there is just one job left before Santa cracks his whip and rides into the sky with his reindeer.

This last job is so important that all the Little People of Santa Claus Land — the Wee Tiny Fairies, the Merry Little Muncheons, the Gay Little Elves and the Happy Little Dwarves — have to work together to get it done.

This is the night for the last and most important job of all.

First of all, Tinkle Bell, Santa's personal, private secretary, calls all the Little People together and tells them just what each is to do. Then off they fly from Tinkle Bell's headquarters at the end of Toy Factory Row in Santa Claus Land. Of course, they ride the moonbeams — for that's the swiftest way to travel.

Tinkle Bell has sent the Wee Tiny Fairies to check the addresses of every little girl and every little boy — just to be sure that no little child has moved to a new house since the toys were checked.

If the Wee Tiny Fairies do find that some little girl has gone with her parents to spend Christmas with grandmother, then they fly the moonbeams right back to Santa Claus Land to tell Tinkle Bell to change Santa's list. This way, Santa will not miss the little girls and the little boys that are visiting during the holidays.

While the Wee Tiny Fairies are checking all the addresses, Tinkle Bell sends the Merry Little Muncheons off with their carpenter tools. With hammers and nails, the Merry Little Muncheons check each chimney in the whole world. And, if they find that a certain chimney will be too small for Santa to get through, they put their hammers to work. First they build a chimney stretcher, and they put it on the chimney. … and pound, until fin… …ney is stretched big …nta will not have any …l.

They are doing a very, very important thing. Because if it was not for the Happy Little Dwarves, Santa and his reindeer might slip when they land on your housetop.

Tinkle Bell sends the Happy Little Dwarves out to the housetops, and they put their tiny brooms to work. They sweep a big, wide path across the roof — right up to the chimney. Then, if there is any ice on the roof, the Happy Little Dwarves put gold dust all over it.

When the reindeer — wearing their special Christmas shoes of gold — fly over your housetop, they know just where to land, safely, so that Santa can climb right down your chimney.

As soon as all the Little People of Santa Claus Land have finished their very important jobs, back they fly on the moonbeams to the little house at the end of Toy Foctory Row. They report to Tinkle Bell that everything is ready for Santa's sleigh-ride.

Over at Santa's house, not very far away from Tinkle Bell's headquarters, Santa Claus and Mrs. Claus are sitting by the fire.

"What's that?" chuckles Santa. "Do you suppose Tinkle Bell is coming?"

Sure enough — tiny bells are ringing outside Santa's door. And there is Tinkle Bell chirping excitedly in her silvery tones:

"Everything is ready, Santa, dear. "Everything is ready!"

NEXT—Santa Claus' Own Party.

Mrs. Charlotte Vanderwater has gone to Shawinigan Falls for Christmas.

Recent guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Clayton Vanderwater included Mr. and Mrs. Roy Holgate, Helen, Ruth and Mary of Cooper and Mr. and Mrs. Davis McDonald and Stewart of Stockdale.

Mr. R. Stewart had dinner on Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Percy Cooney.

With the Christmas season so near at hand the yearly bustle and mysterious preparations are reaching fever heat. It is hard to say which gives more pleasure to the child's heart, the anticipation of gifts to be received or the actual joy of spending some of the hard-saved year's earnings on a gift for a beloved relative or friend. Where however a name has been drawn, as is often the custom, that purchases is made with only tepid enthusiasm and is indeed often left to the mother. Christmas concerts are now in progress. The Red School concert will be held Thursday night and Moira on Friday night. There has been a wretched epidemic of colds the last two weeks but every child is making heroic efforts to get rid of the infection. One youngster who is to play Santa Claus even went so far as to buy himself a nauseous but very effective cough medicine.

Marmora

Sunday Schools Celebrate Christmas

Marmora (Special) — Friday evening was chosen by St. Andrew's and St. Paul's Sunday Schools for the annual treat for their scholars. In St. Andrew's hall an appetizing supper was served to the scholars by the Women's Association. This was followed by a short program beginning with carol singing led by George Woodhouse. Next came a pantomime "Joseph and Mary" which was given by Miss Bernice Young's class. Miss Joyce Potts' class gave a playlet, "The Christmas Story" and the Beginners class sang "Jolly Old St. Nicholas."

Presents were then distributed from the Christmas tree by E. C. Prentice superintendent, assisted by Santa Claus. Later all scholars received an orange and candy.

A sleighride to Marmora C.N.R. station and back opened the program for St. Paul's scholars. Returning to the parish hall games, including musical chairs, were enjoyed. Mrs. P. Gray sang "The Star of Bethlehem." Refreshments were served after which Santa Claus made his favored visit to the delight of the children. After assisting the rector, Rev. J. M. Brownlie, with the distribution of Christmas gifts from the tree, he passed out prizes for best attendance in 1946 to the following scholars: Sandra Neath, Sally Ann Higginson, Margaret Higginson, Shirley Neath, Phyllis Hickey, Roberta McGarvey, Helen Lummiss, Audrey Lummiss, Geo. CHAPTER 30

No use. The miserable gnawing uneasiness would creep in again. There it was, the blot on the scutcheon; and it signified little what it might have meant in the life of some other woman or how general was the prevalence of this same weakness among girls everywhere. Jenifer visualized the years ahead, the position of a doctor's wife. Her husband's growing reputation, his affectionate reliance on her when he was tired and anxious, the children in his home, the position of the Lippincotts as time went by.

They would go up to the lake with dark-eyed, eager girls and tall, tawny-headed boys rioting about them. They would have all the happy times, all the cries and responsibilities, the pride and interest that made married life such a miracle.

And all the time....all the time....all the time .... there would live in her memory the humiliating knowledge that for a few feverish weeks she had been what she had been to Sid Borrows.

When she lay in a hospital bed with a baby in the curve of her arm, would it be in her mind then?

When she looked up from scolding two small daughters for forgetting to comport themselves like little gentlewomen, would she see it in Jim's watching eyes?

When he and she were married and went away from the Evans house in a joyous whirl of laughter and tears, flowers and good wishes, would her very wedding day be clouded by the unforgotten memory, that memory that was to be a chain upon her soul forever?

"No, life isn't like that," Jennifer, walking the cold winter streets, would say aloud. "It can't be as hard as that."

Obviously the thing to do was to tell Jim all about this and just how she was suffering about it, and have it over. But Jim was three thousand miles away, and this sort of thing was not easy to write.

"Dearest Jim," she could say, "since we are both moderns, and take each other for what we are rather than what we were...."

"Dearest Jim, this is going to be the shortest letter I ever wrote you. It is just to say that six years ago, when I was eighteen, I met a man who completely bedazzled and mesmerized me...."

"Jim dear, this may seem important to you; it did to me for a while. It does now, I suppose, or I wouldn't be making myself write it. Years ago when I was eighteen I must have been a peculiarly dumb little character. Looking back, I can't see that I grasped anything or understood anything or had any ideas at all about life. I blundered through school and into a job....and into a love affair...."

Which to write, or to write at all?

"Oh, for heaven's sake," Jennifer would say wearily to her thoughts, "let me stop thinking about it. I will stop thinking about it! And someday I'll make some reference to it to Jim and see just how seriously he takes it. If it seems to knock him silly I'll tell him the whole story. If he just shrugs it off with, 'Why bring that sort of thing up? It's you I love, not the kid you were six years ago,' then it'll be over."

And Jennifer would resolutely plunge into her work, into her reading, into Sunday trips with the Evanses to beaches or parks. Most of the group knew now that she was engaged to Jim; that made it more comfortable all round; everyone liked her, no one made love to her.

One hot March afternoon she was out in the back garden of the San Jose Avenue cottage helping old Mrs. Flood tie up a banksia rose that, heavy with foliage and tiny, fragrant, creamy blossoms, had not only brought its own spraying branches to the ground but also the feeble old lattice that had supported it. It now lay in a great bushy fountain over the path and the hoset and the garden faucet and completely shut off the little woodshed at the end of the walk.

Jennifer, drawn by the old woman's lamentations to the scene, had immediately offered practical help. She raced back into the house to assume her old blue jeans and a worn white sweater, and came out to search for a long rope.

"I'll put the rope under it, Ma," she said, using Mary's name for her mother as had become her custom of late. "and then take the two ends of the rope up the ladder and sit on the roof and pull. And when I get the roses up you straighten up the lattice."

"Well, who'd ever think that out!" exclaimed old Mrs. Flood in simple admiration. With short ejaculatory prayers and much catching of breath she watched the execution of the plan, Jennifer mounting the ladder with the loose ends of the rope in her hands, standing on the flat roof of the woodshed and beginning slowly to draw the rope up.

The great bushy wreck below her stirred, rose a few inches; old Mrs. Flood stepped about anxiously in the path, giving the banksia ineffectual pokes from one side or another.

"The trouble is," Jeanifer gasped, her arms already full of great sprays and yellow roses, "that it'll pull me down before I pull it up. We'll have to get the Moore boys or else wait for Mary!"

"You've got it!" piped Mrs. Flood.

"Yes, I can start it. But I can't get the weight of it pulled up this far! It always slips back."

"Let me get up there with you," said Jim Lippincott from the path. Jennifer gave him one look, dropped the roses, was down the ladder in two springs and into his arms. Flushed, dirty, covered from head to foot with broken leaves and scattered blossoms, she gave him back kiss for kiss and clung to him, half laughing and half crying, while he explained his presence.

"I'm in, dear; in the war, in the Army—Medical Corps."

"Jim!" She pushed him off with both hands, studying his well-fitting uniform. "Oh, darling, since when?"

"Well, they need doctors, and the Office of Procurement classes me as 'non-essential,' so knowing I'd be drafted, I volunteered. I didn't write you until I was sure. But they took me all right. You're not sorry?"

"Oh no...." she said slowly; "you couldn't do anything else. Everyone's in or going to get in. Joe and Martin—all of them. But somehow I didn't think of it as getting so close to me. So you're a captain? My Captain!" When do you go? Where do you go?"

"I don't know yet. But d'you know what this means, Jenny?"

She looked at him with her bewildered, little-girl smile.

"That I break my heart?"

"No, it means we can get married!"

"But then you'll be going away!"

"Maybe—maybe not. I may be stationed here for the time being."

"Where?"

"One of the service hospitals; there's a dozen around the bay area."

"Then we can have a little house of our own?"

"We will. But here," he interrupted himself, "let's get this rose back. If I go up on the roof and pull, could you straighten the lattice? You ought to be ready with a couple of big heavy nails to fix it there to the fence...."

Spring sunset light was exquisite over the plain little back yard when they finished the job. Jennifer had been back on the roof and Jim back on the ground more than once before the banksia was roped into place and the broken sprays cut away and the lattice reinforced. Jennifer's face was warm rose itself, her forehead was wet, her hair tousled into a mop; she finally descended the ladder into Jim's arms with a laugh of triumph, and with the breathless old woman they went into the house.

From then on everything was confused and breath-taking and delightful. They were going over to Mollie's for dinner, and Jennifer could wear her new dress—a real summer dress of vermilion-striped shining organdy. Her slippers were red and she wore a red rose in her hair.

Everyone at Mollie's — and everyone, hastily summoned, was at Mollie's—broke into a roar of approval as Jennifer and Jim came in, and immediately everyone had the news, and plans swept the entire company off its feet. This was Thursday; Jim might be ordered away at any time; days were precious. Why not a quiet wedding on Sunday?

Jennifer could only keep tight hold of Jim's hand and look from face to face. It was all so different from anything they had dared hope. Why, their engagement had never been publicly announced; she had never told Vogelsang's that she was planning to leave....

"My veil," said Mollie; "and we'll get a plain satin dress at the Emporium tomorrow. They have them from sixteen dollars up."

"I always say it's silly to put a lot of money into a wedding dress," some other young wife said authoritatively. "We'll trim this room, Mollie."

"We'll have it at Mom's," decided Mollie. "We car

snow in a confined area between two buildings and there was no chance for swiftly-forming steam to escape quickly. Normally slag is dumped on a pile in the open, far from the plant buildings.

The slag pot, mounted on a railway car, holds some 260 cubic feet or about 10 tons. There was about two feet of fresh snow on the ground just outside the open hearth buildings where it spilled. The blast blew considerable molten slag over the plant area.

There were several other cars on the train pulling the slag car but none of these was damaged.

It was explained that had plant operations been at normal — instead of on a curtailed holiday basis — the snow probably would have been cleared away from th area of the blast.

Harold Oliver, conductor of th blast which occurred at 2:30 a.n

dows out of the cab and he thre himself down to protect himse from flying glass.

Residents living a mile aw from the plant reported that thei homes were shaken by the blas attire to see what happened. Subsequently they heard the shrillin

Another new device reads the amount of carbon dioxide in the air. If close to a person talking the extra carbon from human breath causes the dial to move several inches.

This device reads the carbon dioxide by the minute amount of heat it absorbs from a beam of infrared rays. It was first used in atomic bomb plants at Oak Ridge Tenn., during the war, for reading other gases.

A third guage is about the size and shape of an ice cream cone. If the open end is placed on the skin this guage reads the skin temperature to within 1-100th of a degree.

It reads the temperatures of all sorts of surfaces and helps locate areas where cold is seeping into houses. It has been used to locate underground steampipe leaks by picking up the slight rise in temperature of the pavement over the leak.

Industrial Sugar-Consuming Interests Lobbying For A New And More Selfish Sugar Policy

By CLYDE BLACKBURN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Washington, Dec. 24 (CP)—Industrial sugar-consuming interests are relying heavily on the rank and file who want two lumps per cup of coffee and their cereal smothered in the sweet stuff, to back their lobby for a new selfish national sugar policy.

When the war started and normal sugar sources for many parts of the world were crippled the United States entered into an agreement with Canada and Britain to share the world's available supply. It has been a most successful arrangement.

Now that the war is over there is a lobby developing here to end the arrangement and have the United States quota put back at least to its pre-war level.

The candy-makers, bakers, soft drink bottlers and food processors are allowed 80 per cent of the sugar they used in 1941. They want more and argue that more sugar for them would mean employment, more prosperous small businesses and happier consumers. No one would deny the fact in their argument.

But administration officials to pre-war level would mean the remainder of the world would get 15 to 18 per cent less than it got this year.

It might bring retaliation from countries that help supply this country with such shortage commodities as tin, fats, oils and many raw commodities essential to American economy.

It might also mean an increase in price. Under the world sharing plan the United States buys the entire Cuban crop and thus removes competition and possible high bidding.

The United States oprtion of the Cuban supply this year amounts to about 2,280,000 short tons. Canada and European countries were allotted a combined total of about 1,600,000 tons—of which about 460,000 were refined in this country—and Cuba retained about 300,000 tons for export to other Latin-American countries.

The Cuban crop is divided among the pre-war customers of that country in about the same ratio in which they were supplied before the war. The other countries pay the United States for their share.

Cuba wants the United Kingdom, Canada and other normal customers to go on receiving their share because she wants to hold their patronage in the future when the world supply is not short.

Another possible congressional fight may arise over conflicting policies on the development of cane and beet production on the United States mainland, largely a federally-controlled industry and now reported to be producing less than in some pre-war years.

Indications Many Parts of Canada Will Have A Green Christmas

(By The Canadian Press)

Indications are that Canada's coasts will be green for Christmas while a pattern of white and green with a slight accentuation on white will festoon the remainder of her geography.

Snow-lovers in Halifax and Saint John are worried that perhaps they will have to face a green Christmas as a rain came down to disperse the snow but both centres are in the holiday mood. Last minute shoppers and colored lights are decorating the streets while the citizens are going "all out" to see that veterans are being catered to at the holiday season.

The eastern townships of Ontario jubilantly report the makings of a white Christmas and Ottawa, Cornwall and Brockville say they are struggling through the final throes of shopping with lights blazing and plenty of food and merchandise to be had. They will celebrate Boxing Day as a holiday to give the local celebrants a breather before resuming work.

It appears that "Toronto the good" is going to have a fluid Yule with large queues reported at liquor stores and with few bothering about beer vendors. Last minute shoppers have stormed the stores and ostensibly have remembered even Uncle Jake who they forgot last year.

In Kitchener, Stratford, Brantford and Windsor it is likely the pre-Christmas snow will be gone when Santa arrives but merchants in those centres have no complaints on the Christmas trade. They report a record year for business and will relax on Boxing Day.

Probably a Hazy One

Once in ten years Sudbury experiences a green Christmas and this may be one of the years. A drizzle of rain and rising temperatures have dissipated the snow. Beer has been sold out in the northern city and long queues at the liquor store indicated — if not a white, at least a hazy Christmas.

Sault Ste. Marie, Winnipeg and Regina pick up the pattern of white and while temperatures will not be extreme, it is expected they will enjoy snow for the holiday. Liquor queues are reported from the Manitoba capital but Regina and Edmonton report no special civic celebrations to mark the holiday. House-parties? — yes.

Vancouver, which advertises itself as the evergreen playground will be that on Dec. 25. And its evergreen motif has extended to its civic lamp-posts. The city will retain its festive air while late celebrants are returning from night-clubs which pomise special Christmas Eve "blowouts."

A last-minute burst of spending jammed city streets and stocks of merchandise were ample to accommodate the needs of the spenders.

From coast-to-coast it looks as though Canada is back to par and austerity Christmases are a thing of the past.

Bevin Sees World Mellowed In Time by British Role

By JAMES McCOOK
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Dec. 24 (SCP).—Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin defies disappointment in carrying out a British foreign policy based on faith in the United Nations—and patience.

He speaks for a Britain which does not pretend to be as powerful as the United States or Russia. He and his Labor colleagues often lament that Britain still is looked upon by some as an "imperialistic" nation although it speeds India on the road to independence, proposes withdrawal of all forces from Egypt, is arranging to spend £120,000,000 ($480,000,000) for the economic betterment of the colonies, accepts the dominions as absolute equals and seeks neither war nor territory anywhere.

Mr. Bevin raises his voice for Britain at council tables where he often falls into disputes with Russian and Ukrainian representatives but—as he told the Labor party convention this year — he clings to the patient hope that there will be a mellowing in international relationships when Britain's peaceful counsel will be accepted.

He speaks with the support of most members of the Commons although members of his own party, 60 strong, staged a "revolt" against his policy by suggesting its revision and nearly 100 on Labor benches abstained from voting when the rebels' amendment was called. Afterwards there were heart-searchings in Labor party ranks and in the end the "rebels" said they were sorry and promised loyalty to Mr. Bevin and Prime Minister Clement Attlee who stood by him.

Opposition Commendation.

When Bevin in the Commons makes one of his detailed reviews of foreign affairs, applause comes from opposition benches as much as from his own side. The complaint of some Labor men is that the Bevin policy simply continues that of Conservative Anthony Eden. To this he replies that a Labor victory in a British election does not change the geography at the root of many foreign policy problems.

Some want action to drive Franco from power in Spain although Mr. Bevin protests that Spanish ranks consolidate at any threat of foreign intervention in domestic affairs. He tells other critics that British troops went to Greece at the request of successive Greek governments and that British soldiers served in bloody Java only at the behest of the Allied high command.

Britain's foreign minister envisages economic unity in the German zones administered by the big powers, hopes for increased production of German industries and plans for a Germany able to stand on her own feet but a menace to none.

Britain's foreign minister encourages democratic government in Italy and recognizes the pro-Russian Polish government although he declines to send home against their will more than 100,000 Polish soldiers who fought with the Allies during the war. He protests interference with liberties in eastern Europe where leftist views prevail; and sees that the Arab state of Transjordania receives outright freedom.

Palestine Problem.

Mr. Bevin is behind the plan for a federal Palestine, allowing Jews to continue immigration within economic limits and yet relieving Arabs from the fear of Jewish domination and his hopes of a settlement remain as he laments the violence that costs British soldiers' lives.

With all its hopes for and support of the United Nations, the government still keeps Britain's powder dry. Defence forces are stronger by 185,000 than it was intended they should be if peace treaties were completed and other assurances of world peace effective.

During the year British Commonwealth and Empire representatives held long consultations on defence. The dominions stood against a centralized organization but Britain approved their plans for regional defence systems which can be fitted into a Commonwealth whole. Britain alone will develop forces which can fight anywhere and seek to hold a situation until United Nations reinforcements arrive.

Although the dominions representatives sometimes did not agree with Britain on all subjects before international conferences, consultations among them continued on a voluntary basis, and over-all understanding was not strained.

Spruce Trees On Sanctuary Are Cut Down

Kingsville, Dec. 24 —(CP)— Several spruce trees planted by the late Jack Miner and considered by him his "living memorial" have been cut down. Apparently by Christmas tree hunters, police said today.

The Miner family has offered a $50 reward for information leading to the conviction of the person who cut down the tree. They were on the small strip of land owned by the Miners just north of this Essex County town.

"The late Jack Miner became famous for his conservation of bird life but everyone in Essex County knows he spent equally as much time in planting and growing trees on his famous bird sanctuary at Kingsville," said Manley Miner. "He used to remark to visitors that his trees were his living monuments....

"He personally watered and hoed these lovely trees until today they stand as a tribute and a living memorial to him....it is not only damaging and stealing personal property but it is destroying the trees that were planted by the hands of the late Jack Miner which is a great personal loss to the entire community."

Gold Mine Union Will Press Demands For Wage Increase

Timmins, Dec. 24 —(CP)— Twenty-four gold mine union delegates at a conference of district eight here at the weekend re-affirmed that the international union of mine, mill and smelter workers (C.I.O.) would press for an increase of 16 cents an hour for its members employed by northern Ontario and northwestern Quebec mines.

"The conference was unanimous in stating that an all-out fight will be waged to enforce the minimum and legitimate demands of all workers for a general wage increase of 16 cents an hour, shift differential, vacations with pay, statuory holidays with pay and union security," the union said in a statement issued after the conference.

In the last few weeks, mine operators in the Porcupine and Kirkland Lake areas announced an across-the-board wage increase of 10 cents an hour retroactive to Dec. 1.

The conference also pledged "full and complete moral and financial support" to unionists at Noranda, Que., who have been on strike for more than a month to enforce demands for a 16-cents-an -hour wage boost. The Noranda mines offered a 10-cents-an-hour increase.

The slag pot, mounted on a railway car, holds some 260 cubic feet or about 10 tons. There was about two feet of fresh snow on the ground just outside the open hearth buildings where it spilled. The blast blew considerable molten slag over the plant area.

There were several other cars on the train pulling the slag car but none of these was damaged.

It was explained that had plant operations been at normal — instead of on a curtailed holiday basis — the snow probably would have been cleared away from the area of the blast.

Ran Clear Says Witness.

Harold Oliver, conductor of the train hauling the slag, appeared to be the only witness of the blast which occurred at 2:30 a.m. "I was on slag pot next to the one that tipped," he said. "It was quite an explosion and it scared me and I ran clear."

Len Henderson, the engineer, said the concussion blew the windows out of the cab and he threw himself down to protect himself from flying glass.

Residents living a mile away from the plant reported that their homes were shaken by the blast and they rushed outdoors in night attire to see what happened. Subsequently they heard the shrilling of steel plant whistles known to sound for rescue workers in times of emergency.

The plant's transportation employees who have worked on slag trains for years recalled that there occasionally have been slight explosions when hot slag spilled — but none could recall any as shattering as this morning's blast.

In the streetcar crowded with holiday shoppers Mrs. Weston couldn't see the couple behind her but their words added to her mounting despair and fury. Overhead, tinsel-wreathed placards exhorted to buy fur coats, diamonds, perfume. She shut her eyes to them but she could not shut her ears.

"That was one swell party last night," sighed the man. "Oh, boy!"

The girl squealed. Mrs. Weston cringed. The high laughter was like the whistle in Puppo, the rubber dog they'd given Harvey Jr. his third Christmas. Puppo had become more than a toy. He still lived in glory, a kind of household god enshrined in the whatnot in Harvey's room. "Love to Puppo," Harvey ended his letters. Puppo always topped the Christmas tree. There'd be no tree this year. It was worse than childish to Harv to want one. She wouldn't have it. A package had been sent to Harvey Jr. overseas in October, but there'd be no Christmasing at home.

Merry
Christmas

"Lady, you have the wrong angle"

Wicked, horrible, thought Mrs. Weston, that people are going through all the old motions of a Merry Christmas. No one has a right to be merry.

"You looked super last night," said the man. "You are super, honey. You're so beautiful." Mrs. Weston turned slightly and caught a glimpse of a flat pretty face surrounded by blond curls. "You rate orchids, honey," the man went on, "and you're goin' to have them.

The constant ache in Mrs. Weston's heart sharpened to a stab. For such fools her Harvey was risking his life. Another block of their chatter and Mrs. Weston would say, "The money squandered on orchids, young man, would buy a good many war stamps," or "This is no occasion for whoopee."

"Jack thinks the Army is going to get him this time." It was the girl speaking. "And is he scared!"

The woman next her got off and another squeezed in. "Certainly going to be a big Christmas," observed the newcomer cheerfully. "Were you downtown Saturday? Worst jam I ever saw."

"I was not." Mrs. Weston felt compelled to explain. "I am going to town now only to select a wreath for my mother's grave."

Behind her the young people were still shrilling about Jack and the Army. "Tell him we'll give him a farewell party. Tell him if he gets shot he'll have a pretty nurse." The man was chortling. "Let's get off next corner, beautiful. You can buy me a drink."

Liquor, thought Mrs. Weston furiously. That explained their incessant giggling over nothing. She raised her voice. "I don't see how people can think about Christmas. How they can drink and laugh and waste money on silly things. Life is so terrible—" her voice broke. Heavens, people were staring! "My son—somewhere in the Pacific," she added hurriedly in a low voice. "I — I'm thinking of him."

She felt a hand on her shoulder. "Lady you have the wrong angle." The man behind her leaned forward. Her eyes met compassionate blue ones in a face curiously pale. "It don't help your boy any for you to have no Christmas. Be as merry as you can. Like as not he'll be back, fit as a fiddle—like me." He lurched to his feet.

Something caught in Mrs. Weston's throat. He was limping to the door. The car jolted to a stop and the girl thrust a steady little hand under his arm. Drunk, thought Mrs. Weston, drunk with the joy of being alive. She sprang to her feet, without apology pushed through the crowd. "Wait!" But they were getting off.

She was halted by the crowds on the sidewalk. Standing on tiptoe she saw the couple turn in at the dairy bar. A drink. They'd laugh and make love over an ice cream soda. "Merry Christmas, soldier," she whispered. "Be as merry as you can."

Misty-eyed, she walked to the corner rimmed with Christmas trees.

"A small tree," choked Mrs. Weston. She wiped her eyes and picked one up, testing its weight. "It must be strong." she told the vendor firmly. "Strong enough to hold up a good sized rubber dog, and—and our spirits."

My Daily Prayer

Author Unknown

"This coming year I'd like to be a friend to everyone;
I'd like to feel each day well spent
at setting of the sun;
I'd like to know that I have done
at least one kindly deed,
Before I lay me down to sleep that
I have given heed—
To some one's cry for sympathy, or friendship or that I Have made the day seem brighter to some chance passer-by,
And that the world is better still in just some little way,
Because I've tried to live the very best I could each day.

"I'd like to be a ray of light when skies are overcast,
I'd like to help some one who failed to blot out all the past,
To start again despite the storms,
and find the skies are blue,
To know that in this good old world there's lots that's fine and true,
I'd like to be the kind of person
everyone will love,
And make the world seem just a little more like heaven above;
I'd like in all my dealings to be true and just and fair,
That God will help me do these things shall be my daily prayer."

CHRISTMAS TAX

Christmas Elf Concerned With Well-Being of Cattle

Jule-Nisse was not exactly a Danish version of Santa Claus. He was an elfish little old man who lived in the attic and was primarily concerned with the well-being of the cattle, keeping them quiet and contented, caring for them if the stable-hands neglected their duties.

Nisse's name and association with Christmas probably stems from his legendary tenancy of houses where peace and contentment prevailed. 'Tis said he either avoided homes where contention ruled or played all sorts of gremlin-like tricks upon the occupants thereof.

Danish youngsters, mindful of Nisse's long memory and watchful eye, put themselves upon their good behavior as Christmas approaches.

ST. CATHARINES' GIRL, NINE, MISSING

Wrapping Paper Identified As Carried by Missing Girl

St. Catharines, Dec. 27—(CP)—Police announced today that they had found the red and blue wrapping paper which covered Christmas presents nine-year-old Marion Rusnak carried at the time she disappeared Monday night.

Detective James Anderson said Mrs. John LePierre identified the paper as that she wrapped around a toy drum and two pairs of stockings before giving them to Marion as a gift for the little girl's baby brother.

The spot where the paper was found is several hundred feet from the corner of Welland Avenue and Wellington Street where Mrs. Betty Smythe last saw a child whom she had heard talking to a slim man about 40 years of age. The child carried a Christmas parcel and resembled the missing girl.

Mrs. Smyth quoted the man as saying to the child:

"What would that little baby brother of yours like for Christmas — perhaps a rattle?"

Mrs. Smyth could not hear what the girl replied but she heard the man say:

"Well, let's go to the store and get him something."

The man and the little girl crossed the street and when Mrs. Smyth last saw them they were at the corner of Welland Avenue and Wellington Street.

Discovery of the wrapping paper came during what residents consider the most extensive hunt for a missing child in the history of St. Catharines and Lincoln county.

Believed Seen at Port Hope

Cobourg, Dec. 27 — (CP)—Police said today that a little girl whose appearance was similar to that of nine-year-old Marion Rusnuk, missing from her home in St. Catharines since Monday night had been seen in nearby Port Hope on Tuesday.

BLACK MARKET IN STOLEN USED COUPONS PROBED

Believed Taken From Eddy Plant Where They Were Taken To Be Destroyed

Ottawa, Dec. 27 (CP)—Royal Canadian Mounted Police, moving behind a mantle of secrecy, today were engaged in widespread investigations of black market "trafficking" in used ration coupons stolen from the Hull, Que., plant of the E. B. Eddy Company.

The coupons, taken across the Ottawa river by the local Ration Board for disposal in a chemical disintegrator at the paper plant, were allegedly stolen by employees of the company after they had been apparently "destroyed."

Facts on the story were skimpy, as officials concerned refused to comment on the ground publicity would hinder the investigations. It was believed, however, that the R.C.M.P. were investigating the whole system of disposal of used ration coupons, which are dealt with variously by local ration boards across the country.

The disclosure that a black market was operating in stolen butter, sugar and meat coupons followed discovery by the Prices Board some months ago that coupons were turning up which obviously had come from unauthorized sources.

R.C.M.P. experts found bits of pulp clinging to some of the suspicious coupons and finally traced their source to the Eddy plant.

Company Not Blamed

Discovery of a part of the story by a reporter yesterday prompted the company to issue a 300-word statement in which it stated it had handled the disposal as a favor to the government and disclaimed any responsibility for the irregularities. Officials lauded the company's co-operation in the investigations.

R.C.M.P officials declined to give any information on the extent of the illegal operations but stated: "This is a big thing." It was understood the illicit dealings involved at least two provinces and that investigations were going forward over a wide area.

So far as could be learned, no arrests have yet been made. Donald Gordon, Prices Board Chairman, confirmed that the operations of the group had been uncovered. He said the matter was in the hands of the R.C.M.P. and prosecutions would take place "when the time came."

Beyond this police and company and Prices Board officials declined to go. Reports said some employees at the plant had been dismissed, but company officials denied this. It could not be learned how many coupons had been taken or what methods were used to sell them illegally to dealers.

TREE FIRE IN CHICAGO HOTEL APARTMENT

Portal-to-Portal Wage Suits Now Total $700,000,000

Washington, Dec. 27 (AP). — Portal-to-portal retroactive wage suits now on file in federal courts throughout the United States seek a total of nearly $700,000,000, a survey disclosed today after filing of new actions by unions in behalf of thousands of workers.

Some industry leaders have estimated the claims may total between $5,000,000,000 and $6,000,000,000 for payment to workers for the time consumed in travelling from a company's property entrance to their specific bench or machine where they work.

Suits were filed in nine cities yesterday seeking a total of $114,122,000, and with previous suits brought the total amount sought to more than $579,525,000. Also filed yesterday was a suit for an estimated $30,000,000 against the National Biscuit Company in New York by employees who contended the company did not pay them all of the overtime wages due in the last seven years.

Surprise Claim.

Another suit filed yesterday was a surprise claim for $2,000,000 against the Mt. Clemens (Mich.) Pottery Company whose workers were plaintiffs in the original case on which all other claims are based.

In the pottery case, Judge Frank A. Picard in 1943 ruled in favor of the United Pottery Workers Union (C.I.O.) in its claim that the company had required employees to be on the job before time for which they were paid. The Supreme Court upheld the decision which resulted in the filing of the claims by various unions.

C.I.O. counsel said they are preparing to file a suit seeking $270,000,000 against the Ford Motor Company's Rouge plant and one against Ford's Willow Run bomber plant seeking what a C.I.O. lawyer said will "run into millions" and involve about 300,000 wartime employees.

Largest Claim.

The largest claim in the suits filed yesterday was for $50,000,000, sought by an independent union in Boston against the Bethlehem-Hingham Shipyards, Inc. Other actions were started in Cleveland, Columbus, Pittsburgh, Houston, Tex., Bristol, Conn., Birmingham, Ala., and Evansville, Ind.

Meanwhile, two influential Republicans predicted today Congress will act quickly to limit "portal to portal" pay suits which could cost employers billions of dollars.

Representative Jesse Wolcott (Mich.), who will be chairman of the House Banking Committee in the new House, said distress signals from businessmen are so strong "we'll have to do something about it".

Representative Earl Michener (Mich.) expressed belief the Judiciary Committee which he will head will tackle the issue without delay.

Wolcott told a reporters' congress members have been flooded with mail, telegrams and telephone calls from businessmen protesting that payment of the sums involved would ruin them.

Two Lumberjacks Never Gave up Hope While Drifting on Ice Floes

By BERT ALLEN

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Mont Joli, Que., Dec. 27 (CP).—Two hardy south shore lumbermen, their feet painfully frozen, waited here today for air transportation to hospital in Montreal and told how they never gave up hope of being rescued from the ice floes of the St. Lawrence River on which they drifted for three days and nights after a plane crash on the river.

Last of six known survivors of a Quebec Airways plane which force-landed and sank in the river Monday when its engines failed on a 60-mile hop from Godbout, Que., across the St. Lawrence to this south shore port, Aurel Gagne, 22, of Ste. Urbain and Albert Morin, 29, of St. Louis Du Ha Ha, were brought here last night by snowmobile from Grande Vallee, about 100 miles further east along the Gaspe coast.

A small boat from shore had picked them up earlier in the day after they had drifted with the tide and wind for 70 hours in the ice-filled river. They had spent the first day on the ice itself and the other two days in a dinghy, warmed by bed rolls and nourished by rations from the air.

Poor flying conditions, which grounded aircraft planning to resume the search for the one man still missing from the crash, held the lumberjacks here this morning and they were bundled up in hotel beds.

Gagne was in the more serious condition. His hands and feet both were seriously frost-bitten and a leg cut received while working in the bush was aggravated by his crawling from one ice cake to another.

Morin was in better shape but his feet too were swollen and painful and, like Gagne, one of them had been injured previously in a bush accident. They were cheerful, however, and talked happily about their rescue from the river.

"We never gave up hope, even on the third night, although on that day waves five or six feet high had bounced our little dinghy like a cork in the ice flows," Morin said.

"At dusk that night the wind calmed down somewhat and that probably was the only reason we were able to survive."

"When we were rescued by a boat from shore the next day and were told we had come ashore at Grande Vallee, I couldn't believe it," the woodsman said. "I thought we were still floating off Matane which we had spotted before the plane pancaked on the ice.

"It seemed almost impossible that we had drifted about 120 miles down the coast line towards the gulf."

Morin said the sleeping bags and blankets dropped with the dinghy Tuesday afternoon had helped them withstand the icy sojourn. The men, too, were dressed in their parkas and wore their lumber boots and caps.

Leo Levesque of St. Antonin, picked up Christmas Day, originally was in the dinghy with Gagne and Morin. This husky, 22-year-old six-foot-two-inch lumberjack also arrived here last night and was almost in perfect condition.

He was able to walk about normally and had only a pair of stiff hands to show for his ordeal on the ice. In fact he was so well, he spoke a few words last night at a local Rotary club meeting.

Levesque's remarkable stamina was responsible for his rescue before that of his two companions. He was able to jump from one ice floe to another and reached the boat which came out from shore whereas the other two were unable to make their way to the small craft which could not get near enough to take them off.

When the plane sank Monday, 30 minutes after it crashed, the men had to swim to the ice floes and Levesque said: "Although I can't swim a stroke, I was able to reach the ice."

Icebreaker Combs Gaspe Bay Waters For Missing Man

By BERT ALLEN

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Mont Joli, Que., Dec. 27 —(CP)—The icebreaker Lady Grey, veteran of the St. Lawrence icefields, nosed slowly round the Gaspe Peninsula today, combing the ice floes for the last of the party of woodsmen marooned when a Quebec Airways plane came down in the St. Lawrence Monday.

Although his chances of being found alive appeared slim, airline officials said the search would continue for Florian Simard, who last was seen by the pilot and five other passengers, now all rescued, a few minutes after the plane landed on the ice and broke through, sending the occupants scampering for nearby ice floes.

The temperature last night fell well below zero and officials considered scant the chances that Simard could have survived a fourth night on the ice without food or adequate covering. But were he yet alive, it was estimated the current would have carried him well round the Gaspe perimeter, or out into the St. Lawrence gulf.

Uses Searchlights.

The Lady Grey, for whom missions of mercy are an old story, joined aircraft and small coastal boats in the search yesterday, and through the night kept her powerful searchlight beams criss-crossing the ice-dotted waters.

The pilot of the lost plane, James Raymond Hartley of St. Catharines, urged that the search for Simard go on. Correcting a previous report that he had seen the woodsman fall into the water, he said he had last seen him jumping from one ice block to another shortly after the plane capsized.

Quints, Blissful After Christmas, Plan Second Yule Party--for Parents

Corbeil, Dec. 27 — (CP)—Canada's most famous sisters — the Dionne quintuplets — blissfully sighed today as they viewed a monster bare-to-bone Christmas turkey, happily fondled their identical sets of matched travelling cases and planned a second Yule week party — this time for their parents.

There'll be no let-down after all the Christmas fun. Secrets are still being whispered in the sisters' recreation room — secrets about their gifts for "Maman et Papa" which will be laid out under the huge Christmas tree New Year's Day.

Meanwhile, their eyes are still agleam as they tell of their own Christmas gifts. The sets of monogrammed, matched luggage they considered their "big" present. Along with them they received gifts of money (compensation, since big sisters Pauline and Therese found wrist watches in their parcels.

Extra gifts included permanent waves for each quint and toiletries — dear to the heart of every young lady. Generally, their gifts reflected the fact that the famed five will be 13 years old next May.

However, the great day over, all five remain silent as to what gifts they have ready for Mr. and Mrs. Dionne.

PRICES FOR MANY COST OF LIVING ITEMS TUMBLE

Butter Drops 10 Cents And Clothing Prices Slashed From Third To Fifty Per Cent

New York, Dec. 27 (AP). — Prices for many cost of living items tumbled suddenly yesterday in major cities throughout the United States, led by a sharp break in the New York and Chicago wholesale butter markets.

The decline in the butter wholesale prices brought an immediate drop of nine to 10 cents a pound in some of the principal chain stores in the east.

Egg prices likewise dropped sharply in a number of places, led by a wholesale decline of more than five cents a dozen in New York, and reductions in some food items were reported in New York, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, Atlanta, Kansas City, Los Angeles and San Francisco.

At the same time, a cross-country survey by The Associated Press showed that many of the big department stores in major cities had slashed some clothing prices from one-third to more than 50 per cent in an outbreak of post-Christmas and year-end sales.

Still unsettled, however, was whether the price drops were temporary or whether many of them would continue to hold or even extend their decline.

Urged To Lower Stocks.

It was learned that in Chicago, retailers' associations there now were looking for pronounced general reductions in food prices in February and have been urging their members to get rid of their present stocks.

On the butter market, prices concededly had been maintained at an artificially high level in New York, when this support was withdrawn, prices fell by from one to 10 cents a pound and from two to six cents in Chicago.

The Dairymens League Co-operative Association removed some of the mystery surrounding the break in New York, where charges of "rigging" had been heard.

It said in a statement that it had been active in the butter market in order to keep prices up and thereby "protect" present milk prices.

Milk prices in New York are set by the Department of Agriculture's Milk Marketing Administration on a formula that takes into account the price of top grade butter and skimmed milk powder for a 30-day period. This month expired on Dec. 24 and the price for January was set at $5.46 a hundredweight, unchanged since November.

Hammond Named Division Clerk

Peterboro, Dec. 27 — (CP) — Appointment of F. Douglas Hammond as Clerk of the First Division Court in succession to the late Charles J. Seymour was announced by Hon. Harold Scott, M.P.P. for Peterboro.

Mr. Hammond, born in Peterboro, was educated here and at Trinity College School, Port Hope. In the First Great War he served with the rank of captain with the 38th Battalion of Ottawa and during the Second Great War was campaign secretary of the nine Victory Loan campaigns in the city and county.

New Instruments Measure Roughness On Glass, Weigh Human Breath

By HOWARD W. BLAKESLEE

Boston, Dec. 27. (AP) — New instruments for measuring amazingly tiny things were shown today to the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

With the aid of army gauges you can run your fingernail over a piece of glass and tell whether its invisible roughness is 2-1,000,000ths of an inch deep or 4-1,000,000ths. Actually the smoothness of plate glass is rough by these tests, amounting usually to more than 2-1,000,000ths of an inch.

The meaning of this may be realized by the fact that the smoothness of the world's largest telescope mirror, the 200-inch one soon to go into operation, is not greatly under 1-100,000th of an inch.

The trick is that smooth surfaces are never smooth and a human fingernail can feel the roughness, but until the new gauges were made this quality of touch was of little practical use. The guages were made during the war by the Watertown, (Mass.), arsenal. There are 24, each with different roughness, starting with a low of 2-1,000,000ths.

Records Through Earth

Another new device reads the amount of carbon dioxide in the air. If close to a person talking the extra carbon from human breath causes the dial to move several inches.

This device reads the carbon dioxide by the minute amount of heat it absorbs from a beam of infrared rays. It was first used in atomic bomb plants at Oak Ridge Tenn., during the war, for reading other gases.

A third guage is about the size and shape of an ice cream cone. If the open end is placed on the skin this guage reads the skin temperature to within 1-100th of a degree.

It reads the temperatures of all sorts of surfaces and helps locate areas where cold is seeping into houses. It has been used to locate underground steampipe leaks by picking up the slight rise in temperature of the pavement over the leak.

Pot of Hot Slag Tipping on Snow Causes Explosion

Blast Rocks Sault St. Marie But Little Damage Done

Sault Ste. Marie, Dec. 27 (CP).—A terrific blast caused by molten slag pouring into snow at the Algoma Steel Corporation plant shook this city early today and was heard for miles but there were no casualties and vice-president David Holbrook of the company said damage was only "superficial".

The explosion occurred just outside the open hearth section of the plant—one of the dominion's three basic steel producers. The pot of hot slag tipped over as it was being taken from the open hearth. Steam swirled up as it fell on the snow and an explosion followed almost immediately. The blast upset the pot still further, spilling more slag and creating another blast.

Mr. Holbrook said there will be no stoppage of steel production. "There may be some temporary stoppage in the foundry while we sweep up glass, replace windows and get steel sheets back on the wall."

The open hearth itself—key to the steelmaking process—was undamaged and production continues there.

Windows were broken in the adjacent blooming mill where steel from the open hearth is rolled into billets for further production processes. But damage was insufficient to halt production there.

Heard Across River.

The early-morning blast was heard across the St. Mary's River in Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., and in the area about both cities.

Alarmed citizens of this city, of which the steel plant is the major industry, tumbled out of their beds in the hundreds and hastened to the plant. Many were anxious for the safety of relatives who were at work.

The explosion came at a time when the plant was operating on a limited Christmas holiday basis, only the open hearth and the blast furnace departments being open.

Mr. Holbrook said that earlier reports of extensive damage to the open hearth section were "greatly exaggerated".

Tremendous Concussion.

He added that there was tremendous concussion and it was this which caused the damage to windows and ripped some of the sheet siding off the adjacent buildings in the huge plant which stretches almost two miles on low-lying land beside the St. Mary's River at the westerly end of the city.

Another company official said that the chief reason for the blast was that the slag spilled on the snow in a confined area between two buildings and there was no chance for swiftly-forming steam to escape quickly. Normally slag is dumped on a pile in the open, far from the plant buildings.

The slag pot, mounted on a railway car, holds some 280 cubic feet or about 10 tons. There was about two feet of fresh snow on the ground just outside the open hearth buildings where it spilled. The blast blew considerable molten slag over the plant area.

There were several other cars on the train pulling the slag car but none of these was damaged.

It was explained that had plant operations been at normal — instead of on a curtailed holiday basis — the snow probably would have been cleared away from the area of the blast.

Ran Clear, Says Witness.

Harold Oliver, conductor of the train hauling the slag, appeared to be the only witness of the blast which occurred at 2:30 a.m. "I was on slag pot next to the one that tipped," he said. "It was quite an explosion and it scared me and I ran clear."

Len Henderson, the engineer, said the concussion blew the windows out of the cab and he threw himself down to protect himself from flying glass.

Residents living a mile away from the plant reported that their homes were shaken by the blast and they rushed outdoors in night attire to see what happened. Subsequently they heard the shrilling of steel plant whistles known to sound for rescue workers in times of emergency.

The plant's transportation employees who have worked on slag trains for years recalled that there occasionally have been slight explosions when hot slag spilled — but none could recall any as shattering as this morning's blast.

DURNFORD SMITH GIVEN 5 YEARS ON SPY CHARGE

Judge Finds He Conspired to Communicate Confidential Information to Russia

Ottawa, Dec. 27—(CP)—Durnford Smith, National Research Council Engineer, today was convicted and sentenced to five years in the Kingston penitentiary by County Judge A. G. McDougall on a charge of conspiring to communicate confidential information for Russia. Trial of the accused ended a week ago when the judge reserved his decision.

Judge McDougall based his judgment on what he described as "fantastic explanations" by the accused and "an overwhelming mass of evidence" by the crown which linked Smith with a Russian conspiracy.

The judge said he was convinced that Smith had given a large amount of confidential, highly secret information which could only be prejudicial to the interests of the state.

Smith, speaking briefly from the prisoner's dock, told the judge, "I am sorry, sir, that you have come to this conclusion . . . I still know I am an innocent man."

Crown Counsel Lee Kelley said that Smith had been shown to be "a very active and willing worker" and compared his crime with that of others already sentenced, placing him in the same category as David Gordon Lunan, who has been sentenced to five years.

Aldous Aylen, defence counsel, contended, however, "It doesn't make sense to assert that Smith is a menace to society."

"He is a student and did a magnificent job (in radar development) in the war."

He described the accused as having been "cleverly corrupted", if he was corrupted, and as "a victim, perhaps, of circumstances". He urged a suspended sentence.

14th To Go On Trial.

Judge McDougall told Smith, in passing sentence, "It is extremely unfortunate that a man of your abilities should be guilty of such a crime." He too, placed Smith in the same category as Lunan.

An appeal against the conviction is anticipated. Meanwhile, two other charges under the Official Secrets Act are pending.

The 34-year-old Smith, a native of Westmount, Que., was the 14th Canadian to go on trial as a result of the espionage probe. Seven of the others were given prison terms, another was fined and five were acquitted.

Quiet Christmas For Police Dept.

"One of the quietest Christmases on record" was the way police officers of both the city and Provincial Police departments today described their respective department activities over the Yuletide holiday.

Provincial Police reported no accidents of any nature with the exception of the one fatality in the Plainfield area on Tuesday evening, while activities at the city police office were also merely routine.

"Everyone behaved admirably," commented Police Chief Walter Probert with satisfaction as he noted there were no traffic accidents of serious nature, while the number of residents imbibing too freely in Christmas cheer was also at a minimum.

The Church of St. Michael the Archangel was filled to capacity for midnight Mass on Christmas Eve which was broadcast by Station CJBQ. Before the Mass the usual procession of the children to the crib took place. They presented a beautiful spectacle arrayed as angels and singing Christmas hymns.

The Mass was celebrated by Monsignor J. F. Nicholson, V.G., assisted by Rev. A. C. Wilson, S.J., and Rev. F. O'Neill. Father Wilson, who is Rector of Regiopolis College, Kingston, Ont., delivered the sermon.

The choir under the direction of Mr. Ross Hunter with Miss Dorothy Grant at the organ sang the Mass in honor of St. Sylvester by Marzo.

Soloists were Mrs. J. Truaisch, Mrs. G. Clapp, Mrs. L. Buckley, Miss Anna Lafferty. During the offertory Mr. Edward Brown sang Adeste Fidelis and during the Communion solos were rendered by Mr. Harold Barrett, Mr. I. Shiels, Mr. Edward Buckley and Mr. Edward Brown.

A very large number received Holy Communion at this Mass. The church was beautifully decorated for the occasion.

In conclusion Monsignor Nicholson expressed the wish that the birthday of the Prince of Peace would be the occasion of happiness and peace to all.

Boys' Parliament Opens at London

London, Ont., Dec. 27 (CP) — With pomp and ceremony, the 26th Older Boys' Parliament of Ontario had its formal opening in Convocation Hall, University of Western Ontario, last evening.

Nearly 100 boys representing church groups from all over the province, registered at the university during the morning, and will sit in sessions until Dec. 31. This is the first time since inception of the Older Boys' Parliament in 1920 that the parliament has met at Western.

Feature of the first day was the formal opening, with Dean K. P. R. Neville of the University of Western Ontario acting as lieutenant-governor and presenting the speech from the throne.

Premier is Douglas C. Lapp, University of Toronto, and leader of the Opposition is Gordon Dollar of St. Thomas, a third-year economics student at Western.

Accurate parliamentary procedure was followed at the ceremony, with the house speaker, provincial secretary and clerk of the legislature taking their parts.

In speaking from the throne, Dean Neville said:

"The time has come again for the Older Boys' Parliament to consider the position and possibilities of boys' work in our province. Your duties as representatives of your constituency begin this week with discussion, consideration and planning. They continue in the months to come with vigorous action, consolidation and advancement. I urge you to keep this in mind as you labor for the cause of boys' work in the coming sessions."

Dean Neville announced the plans by which the present parliament would operate under four departments. They are the department of parliamentary affairs, the department of boys' work, the department of devotional and educational affairs and the department of finance.

He announced that the key piece of legislation will be brought forward by the department of devotional and educational affairs in the form of a resolution concerning "church allegiance." Another piece of important legislation will be put forward by the department of parliamentary affairs concerning relationships with other provincial parliaments, which will be a step toward national action in boys' parliament work.

Premier Douglas Lapp announced members of his cabinet are: Minister of Finance, Gordon Bean, Toronto; Minister of Devotional and Educational Affairs, Arthur Waters, Toronto West; Minister of Parliamentary Affairs, Don Hill, Kingston; Minister of Boys' Work, Don Hooper, Peel South; Associate Minister of Boys' Work and Deputy speaker of the House, Ross Anderson, Northumberland East; Provincial Secretary, Otto Ivany, Algoma.

'Better Days Lie Ahead' King's Message to Empire

London, Dec. 27 — (AP) — The King, broadcasting into the golden microphone reserved for his annual Christmas message, told millions throughout the world that "our task is to mobilize the Christmas spirit and to apply its power and healing in our daily life".

Alone in his study at Sandringham Palace, the King called anew for continued courage in the face of great perplexities and unpredictable prospects.

"The world's convalescence can certainly be hastened by our continued endurance and good will," he said. "We showed the way when the bombs were falling. By our discipline, our endurance, our patience, we can show the way again.

"We have survived the greatest upheaval in human history. Our hard-won liberties and our democratic institutions are unimpaired. Our Commonwealth and Empire, though subject to the changes that time must bring, has not been disrupted by the stress and peril of war. We are celebrating Christmas as free men and in peace.

"And though the clouds are still dark, there is light behind them. Better days lie ahead. Let us not concentrate too much on the difficulties of the present—they will pass—so rather let us think of the possibilities that the future may hold for us."

The Queen, with the Princesses Elizabeth and Margaret, Dowager Queen Mary and other members of the Royal holiday party, listened to the Sovereign's words from a loud speaker. Just before the broadcast, all has gathered for a special Christmas luncheon in which the chief dishes were roast turkey and plum pudding.

The King said:

"This Christmas Day, surrounded by our family circle in our own home, the Queen and I are thinking of the world-wide family of the British Commonwealth and Empire.

"To each member of that family, young and old, composed of so many races dwelling in so many climes, we send our heartfelt and affectionate greetings. Wherever you are and whatever your circumstances, our prayer is that this Christmastide will bring you peace and blessing.

"Christmas comes to cheer our hearts and to revive our faith and courage as the old year dies and the new year is born.

"The year that is passing has not been easy. Statesmen and politicians have been burdened with the resettlement of a world that has been shattered and ruined by global war.

"And on the [illegible] of us have been troubled and harassed by the shortages and economic dislocation that always follows in its wake. All of us, instead of getting some well-earned relaxation after years of intensive work, have had to put our shoulders to the wheels of industry and agriculture with redoubled vigor.

"Men and women have returned from wartime service to conditions that are only slowly improving from wartime austerity, while the housewife is perhaps the most gallant figure of all — still bears many of the extra burdens which she bore so bravely throughout the war.

"With all these trials to be faced I am indeed proud that you are able to maintain that energy and cheerfulness that courage — which this difficult time demands of us all."

Christmas was a time for the world to count its blessings. In Britain "many little things" were lacking to give color and variety to life, but the "big things" were restored.

"Our task today is to mobilize the Christmas spirit and to apply its power and healing to our daily life. The devastation and suffering everywhere, and specially in stricken Europe, must move the hearts of all of us, but the reconstruction so urgently needed everywhere is quite as much spiritual as material. It is necessary not merely to feed hungry people and to rebuild ruined cities, but also to restore the very soul of civilization.

"We cannot all think alike amid the dilemma of a changing world. Nor is it right that we should. Opinion striking against opinion ignites the spark that can kindle the lamp of truth.

"But if our feet are on the road of common charity that leads to the ultimate truth, our differences will never destroy our underlying unity and our disputes will not leave us either embittered or unkind. If the coming year has its uncertainties it has also its promises. By God's help and by our own endeavor, let us make these brighter promises come true.

"My dear people, I wish you well. May the new year be full of blessing for each one of you. Welcome it when it comes, with hope and courage, and 'greet the unseen with a cheer'."

Inmates of County Home Enjoy One of Best Christmas Days

The 88 residents of the Hastings County Home were not forgotten on Christmas and despite the fact that Superintendent Elmer Sandercock gave his entire staff holidays, the elderly folks had their Christmas turkey and a full quota of tasty Christmas fare. Dinner was served by Mr. and Mrs. Sandercock and members of their family who willingly volunteered their services to make the day brighter for County Home residents.

Reflecting the fact that money was apparently more plentiful during the pre-Christmas season than for many years, Mr. Sandercock reported today that never during his term as superintendent has the quantity of presents for the County Home residents been so great. Presents of comparatively high monetary value were the order of the day with several of the residents receiving gift radios from relatives and friends.

But it was not only relatives and friends who showed the true Christmas spirit in making things happier for County Home residents. Numbers of local business firms and others made donations which were much appreciated.

True to his custom established in previous years Mr. Fred Gray supplied the Christmas trees under which presents for the elderly residents were piled. Other donations were made by S. Lummis, Dr. Blakslee, Harry Smith, J. W. Wood, Pinkston Funeral Home, Martin Funeral Home, J. Walmsley, Geen's Drug Store, Ladies of St. Michael's Church, Mr. and Mrs. Bunting and Black's Butcher Store.

Traditional Christmas carols were played by the Salvation Army Band, members of which visited the home to provide music of a personal touch.

POLICE BLOTTER

Despite the fact that local merchants reported record sales during the pre-Christmas period, there was at least one local resident who did not spend all his loose change.

At least that is the inference taken by local police over the holiday when a North Front Street resident reported the loss of his wallet "some place on Front Street" on Christmas Day. In the wallet was $65 in cash, together with identification and other personal papers.

A young girl was struck by a motor car on Front Street, but fortunately was not injured, while an Ottawa man reported to police that he had fallen on the icy pavement near Pine Street school.

Enlisting in the 21st. in December, 1914 he proceeded overseas with this famous Eastern Ontario unit, and with his battalion landed in France in September 1915 He was awarded the Military Medal for conspicuous gallantry at Bully Grenay in January, 1917. He was wounded in the battle of Amiens in August, 1918 and was invalided to England. He married Miss Dorothy Rowntree in December, 1918, who, with his two daughters, Mrs. A. Hilman, of Kingston and Kathleen, Reg. N., of the D.V.A., London, Ontario, and his only brother Dave of Toronto, survive.

Sgt. Crerar worked as a fireman on the C.N.R. at Belleville after which he was on the staff of the Entomology Laboratory until he was forced to retire owing to ill health "Bill" Crerar was a good soldier—none had more spirit than he. He could have well been excused any active participation in the Second World War, but the old warhorse did all he could to further the war effort, first as a sergeant instructor with the Argyll's and latterly as an instructor with the local Sea Cadets. And so passes another of the Old Brigade—soldier par excellence—stout comrade—good friend.

The funeral announcement is made elsewhere in this edition.

Only Amateur Seismologist

Hamilton, Dec. 27 — (CP) — Edward Mantle's hobby concerns a field in which he has little or no competition — seismology, or the study and recording of earthquakes. Probably the only amateur seismologist in Canada, Mantle built a recording machine which registered the recent 'quake in Japan. His records have often been used and published by the Dominion Observatory in Ottawa.

B.C. Woman Starts Brush-and-Needle Pottery Industry

New Westminster, B.C. (CP)—A young British Columbia woman, Mrs. Tracey Bond of New Westminster, has disproved the oftheard expression "you need money to make money" and has provided B.C. with one of its newest and most thriving industries.

Starting with an old sewing machine, some laundry tubs, her husband's shaving brush and a darning needle, in eight months Mrs. Bond has produced a pottery plant that can turn out anything from salt and pepper shakers to gigantic vases.

Describing her venture as a "throwback to my childhood days" when she made sets of dishes rather than the tradition mudpies, young Mrs. Bond said she decided to become a potter when she "discovered that as a kindergarten teacher I preferred moulding clay animals for the kiddies to moulding their minds."

So having made up her mind to go into the pottery business, she promptly found a business partner, turned her sewing machine into a potter's wheel and went into production.

Without any training as a potter, only little fragments of the art from other potters she met, her earlier attempts were often discouraging. But 12 hours of hard work every day, with plenty of experimenting in original formulas, did wonders to her pottery-making technique. She now produces "100 per cent perfect kilns."

The small plant has branched out from its earlier location in a back-shed to a large warehouse and the output, in a variety of more than a hundred different patterns, is approaching nearly 200 pieces a week. Customers are besieging her with demands for her distinctive gift ware and a large Vancouver firm is devoting its show windows to a display of her wares as an example of B. C. skill and ingenuity. But it wasn't always that easy.

Says the enterprising Mrs. Bond "We had a lot of worries for the first six weeks and at one time the 'company' had only $3.28 in the bank."

Big House Empty Ghost to Blame

Bulawayo, Southern Rhodesia—(CP)—Despite the acute housing shortage in Bulawayo, estate agents cannot dispose of a luxurious seven-roomed house which is standing empty. Everyone who has lived in it since it was built a few years ago says it's haunted.

A Johannesburg woman who visited her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Della, while they were occupying the house last month, says that she had never believed in ghosts before, but after staying in the house for a few weeks she could not possibly doubt their existence.

"The trouble started every night at exactly 12 o'clock," she said. "There would be a horrible noise on the roof—like the scraping of nails. It would go from one side of the house to the other.

"Then the moaning would start—a gruessome, pitiful moaning—that stopped only when we put on all the lights of the house."

Although people have stood guard outside, no man or thing has ever been detected on the roof.

Two young men once climbed to the top of the roof at 12 o'clock one night and, although they saw and heard nothing, those inside the house heard the same noises as before.

It was an amazing thing, she added, that her baby, usually very sensitive to any noice, was apparently undisturbed by the ghosts. She slept through all the screeching and moaning.

Aussies Come Back For Winnipeg Girls

Winnipeg (CP)— Three Australian airmen who trained in Winnipeg under the Commonwealth air training plan have returned—and, they say, it's just because of Winnipeg girls.

The three, S. J. Miller, Dick Reid and Charles Marshall, say that girls here are the "love-at-first-sight" type. Marshall has already married his sweetheart and the others hope to do so soon.

The boys met their intended wives in almost fairy-tale fashion. Miller was asleep on a couch in a service club. The phone rang, another serviceman answered and was so intrigued with the girl's voice that he insisted she come down in person. In desperation, the girl came to the club. Miller was asleep on the couch.

"All of a sudden an electric hock passed through me," he recalled. He looked up and there was the girl—he is marrying her this month.

"The girls here are friendly and nice and natural. Their complexions are like peaches and cream. I think the snow has something to do with it . . . and we love their accents," he said.

MONEY IN THE WIND

Delinquent Girls In Luxury Homes

Sydney, Australia (CP)— Delinquent girls will live in beautifully furnished private bedrooms, in attractive modern cottages at Sydney's new Girls' Training School at Thornleigh, one of the most modern of its type in the world.

The school consists of two cottage units of light-colored bricks with blue window shutters. A dining-room, kitchen and laundry block serves both cottages. Eventually there will be 10 cottages.

The bedrooms have cream lacquer furniture, gay pictures on the walls and pastel candlewick bedspreads. Each cottage can accommodate 14 girls and two teachers.

The school is run on the honor system. The matron, Mrs. M. Gordon, works on the "mother-and-daughter" principle. The girls have recreation rooms with a piano and radio, and they can make themselves cups of tea in a special kitchenette, which is exclusively their own.

Thornleigh district people have formed a committee to provide library books and amenities.

VETS AIDED IN BUSINESS

MacARTHUR ENDORSES BID

Tokyo, Dec. 27 —(AP)— The Japanese hope Gen. MacArthur will endorse their bid to participate in the 1948 Olympics at London, Masaji Tabata, who headed Japan's victorious swimming teams at the Los Angeles and Berlin games, said today.

MacArthur formerly headed the American Olympic committee.

Tabata said Japan already has taken preliminary steps by organizing a national Olympic committee. He is a member. He also heads Japan's Amateur Swimming Association.

Last Week of Year

These few days between Christmas Day and New Year's Day seem waiting days. The celebration of Christmas has crowned life. It seems apt that there is a new year at hand with new hours, new days, new weeks and new months in the year 1947. New Year's Day has always been stressed by peoples in primitive days and in modern times. With the advent of a new year it seems the appropriate time to analyse one's motives and deeds to see what changes in attitude may be necessary to make life and conditions more satisfactory. Christmas has become so great an influence that New Year's seems necessary to carry out the full surge of the feelings of the people experienced at Christmastime.

These last days between the Yuletide feast and New Year's Day close the work of mankind for the year which will so soon pass into history. Its opportunities have been faced, its trials endured, it has had its shortcoming in failure to attain all that was sought and on the other hand it has no doubt succeeded beyond hope or expectation in other fields of endeavor. The year's books are soon to pass the audit of time.

The year is one of the measurements of individual life, of time itself and of the course of nations and empires. He who marks New Year's Day with more than ordinary attention given the customary day is really the most normal because all through history this starting of a new period of time has been made the occasion of much festivity. The Chinese look upon their New Year's Day as the greatest of their festivals. Indian tribes observed it in their sun dance. In France, in French Canada and in Scotland it is a day of really great significance.

The Romans on the first day of their year were accustomed to exchange greetings and make gifts. It appears the most natural thing to do to attach much significance to the period of time which succeeds the Christmas and Yuletide festival. The year has reached its height and needs a new slate to record its events, just as individuals seem to feel the need of making a fresh start at many of the problems of life.

Tennyson the English poet has used the thought of things now coming with the new year in his stanzas "Ring Out, Wild Bells." He welcomes the new period of time "the year is going, let him go." The new year becomes the symbol of progress and the anchor of hope for human destiny, for he says:

"Ring out the thousand wars of old,
Ring in the thousand years of peace."

Today men and women draw near the beginning of the new year and look with yearning for the attainment of that ideal of progress, expressed in the faith that there will come "the thousand years of peace," and knowing the past with its achievements and its disappointments, they see the hope of the ages in the future, symbolized by the new twelvemonth.

"Ring in the valiant man and free,
The larger heart, the kindlier hand;
Ring out the darkness of the land;
Ring in the Christ that is to be."

Earth's teeming millions today look with hope to that coming time for the realization of their ideal of a warless world.

The new year marks man's hopes as well as marking time's passage.

This year 1946 has been a year with hopes of greatest moment, it has had its disappointments and its achievements. So long suffering humanity will greet with fondest trust and faith the coming year 1947 that it may bring to pass approach to the grand ideal of a world of peace.

1947 brings mankind the opportunity for thought and patient hope and yearning that it will see the greatest steps of progress in any one-year period in history.

Fashions in The East And West

Speaking in "Radio Roundabout" in the BBC'c Eastern Service recently, Mr. James Laver, Keeper of Prints in the Victoria and Albert Museum and one of the greatest living authorities on the history of fashion, discussed with Mrs. Rekha Menon, of the Eastern Service of the BBC, the reasons why he considered fashion had constantly changed in the West and had stood still in the East.

Fashion as a changing mode of dress for women started no earlier than the 15th Century in the courts of Burgundy as a means of competition between the ladies of the Court to gain the patronage of the King, and therefore, to bring themselves into a position of some power. He believed that in a society in which women are quite hidden away there is no opportunity and no need for fashions to develop. Mrs. Menon agreed that at that time there was practically no alteration in Indian fashions of dress for women, and change such as there had been was one of decoration rather than line. Fashion did, of course, in the East as in the West, serve to show off the position of a woman's husband by the wealth of the decoration and the fineness of material.

In Mr. Laver's opinion, women have said goodbye to gorgeous clothes, and they are now settling down to a more utilitarian sort of fashion. It is obviously much easier to board a bus in modern skirts than in a crinoline. Mrs. Menon said that in India utility is very important, not only amongst the peasant community but also in the higher classes where women will wear only one piece of cloth, but the thickness, color and material will be according to their needs. On the question of children's clothes, Mr. Laver explained that the history of fashions for children was quite a short one, only about 200 years old. Before that time—before Jean Jacques Rousseau—children had been dressed as small replicas of their elders—complete with sword and powdered wig. That was very much the case in India today, according to Mrs. Menon. A few children—the more Westernized—had taken to western clothes, but for the rest they were small editions of their parents.

Deed of Gift of A Birthday

Over fifty years ago Robert Louis Stevenson heard that one of his friends had a small daughter whose birthday fell on Christmas Day and who felt cheated at receiving only one set of presents for the two occasions. Stevenson immediately wrote offering to change birthdays with her, and as he was trained as a lawyer before he turned writer and poet he put his letter into legal terms, stipulating only that she should add the name of Luisa to her other (which she did) and that she should take care of the birthday as it was not as young as it had been: "Having carried me in a very satisfactory manner since I can remember." Speaking in a recent BBC program Rose-Mary Sands quoted R. L. S.'s letter as follows:

"A Deed of Gift of a Birthday. In consideration that Miss Annie H. Ide was born out of all reason upon Christmas Day ind is therefore, out of all justice, denied the consideration and profit of a proper birthday, and considering that I have attained an age when we never mention it, I now having no further use for a birthday of any description, have transferred and do hereby transfer all and whole my rights and privileges in the 13th day of November to the said Annie H. Ide to have,, hold and exercise and enjoy the same in the customary manner by the sport of fine raiment, eating of rich meats and receipt of gifts, compliments and copies of verse according to the manner of our ancestors."

Annie, or rather Luisa, still celebrates each year her "gifted" birthday on November 13th in New York, where she now lives.

'Jet Wing' Ready to Fly

The world's first jet-propelled "Flying Wing" aircraft—British Armstrong Whitworth, AW-52—will make its first test within the next few days. The new aircraft, like the DeHavilland 108 tailless plane, which it resembles, has been built for hig speed research, the results of which will provide designs for Britain's revolutionary airliners of the future. Unlike the DeHavilland machine, which has a fuselage but no tailplane, AW-52 has neither tail nor fuselage. It is the first aircraft ever built with an absolutely smooth wing. The pilot, crew, and engines are housed almost entirely within the contours of the wing which spans some 90 feet and embodies a number of new control devices designed to keep aircraft stable under all conditions of very high and very low speed flight. Engines of AW-52 are two Rolls-Royce Derwent gas turbines similar to those which powered the 616 m.p.h. record-breaking Gloster-Meteor.

CREED FOR THE NEW YEAR

The good in all I know to see,
To think a little less of me
And more of others;
To keep in mind my fellowman,
And this, though differing caste or clan,
We still are brothers.

To give the little I command;
Not waiting till I've more in hand,
Which may be never;
To treat with fairness every man,
Believing that is better than
Being shrewd or clever.

To wake with joy to greet the day,
Keep fit with children small to play,
Share grief and laughter.
To aid when chance to help is near—
Not just the first day of the year,
But all days after.

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

What is a blue book?

In Great Britain a "blue book" is an official report or government document, particularly a publication printed by order of the Brown or Parliament.

This name arose from the fact that such publications at one time had blue covers or wrappers. Nowadays the so-called blue books are sometimes bound in drab colors or in white. Even unbound acts and reports of Parliament, no matter how brief, come under the general designation of blue books. Generally speaking, however, "blue book" is applied to the more formal and elaborate reports or communiques issued by the British government. Less extensive occasional reports that are bound without covers are popularly called "white papers."

Printing the proceedings of the House of Commons began in 1681 during the dispute over the question of excluding the Duke of York (later James II) from the succession to the throne. Parliamentary blue books were first officially sold to the public in 1836.

White papers, as distinguished from blue books, are issued to meet some special and immediate situation and they are simply blue books from which the cover has been omitted either to save money or time.

Many European governments have distinctive colors for the covers of their official publications—gray books in Belgium, yellow books in France, green books in Italy, orange books in Russia, etc. In 1945 a committee of Jews announced its intention of publishing a "black book" containing evidence of German atrocities against Jews in Europe.

"Blue book" has several applications in the United States, but the term is not customarily applied to Government bulletins, documents and reports. Official diplomatic correspondence published in the United States is generally bound in red.

In Great Britain lists of persons in the government service, including their names, salaries and other information, are called red books. Formerly "blue book" a term suggested by the British "red book," was popularly applied to the "Biennial Register," a publication containing the names, places of residence, salaries and other information about persons employed by the Federal Government. From this usage any register or directory containing the names and addresses of persons socially prominent came to be called a blue book.

PERSONAL HEALTH TALKS

By WILLIAM BRADY, M.D.

MORBID NOTIONS VERSUS EMOTIONS

There is no great difference between symptoms, functional disturbances or ailments, arising from morbid introspection or misguided imagination and those due to repressed or unexpressed emotions.

An everyday instance of the impairment of health by misguided imagination and morbid introspection is the expectant mother who is not vouchsafed the pre-natal instruction and care which every expectant mother should be given by the state if not from her family physician. Here, if I may interpolate the suggestion, is one field in which a small fraction of the money the state and federal governments now spend telling the world what to do till the doctor arrives, might be employed to build and maintain better health for mother and child.

It is generally not directly evident what effect the teachings in this column or in the various pamphlets and booklets sent readers have, and indeed often I wonder whether it is worthwhile. Not so with the baby business. The comments I have received from both partners in the business — prospective mother and prospective father—in reference to the teachings in "The Brady Baby Book"—give me that assurance and satisfaction which are so rare and so precious in the experience of teachers. (For either booklet send ten cents not messed up with stickum or other unpleasant substance, and a self addressed stamped envelope.)

A book published by Harpers a year or two ago has brought tremendous comfort and confidence—physical as well as mental comfort and confidence—to a good many potential or prospective mothers who, without the book, might have suffered unnecessarily from misguided imagination—morbid notions implanted by old-wives, fishwives and neighborhood gossips who somehow seem to dote on whispering tales that frighten the young expectant mother who is gullible or credulous enough to listen to the old gossips. Credulous — that's precisely what nine out of ten prospective mothers are — indeed how can we expect anything else under our shameless Yankee educational system? We raise a hypocritical eyebrow at the proposal that the public schools teach the rudiments of embryology, parenthood and the care of the baby — fundamental knowledge which every future citizen should acquire in school—and at the same time we take as a matter of course the flaunting of salacious pictures in print.

The Harper book that I recommend to all potential or prospective mothers is "Childbirth Without Fear" by Grantly Dick Read, M.A., M.D. Your public library probably has it—or should.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Child Cured of Hernia

Thank you so much for recommending....it is now one year since her last treatment, with no sign of recurrence. No need to tell you of the physicians who darkly warned me about the dangers of injections, scars and the like. Dr. —— inspired my confidence so that I journeyed from ... (500 miles) each time to have the child treated. Aside from the doctor's skill I should like to comment on his fine ethical. (K. B. F.)

Answer—Those quaint practitioners who warned you against the "dangers" of injections and "scars" are representative of a large class of physicians who are ignorant of progress in the profession. It would do them no harm to tread the latest edition of the book by the doctor who treated your daughter. It is one of the modern classics, they will find.

Milk

Would drinking milk cause a person to gain weight? A year ago I began drinking a quart a day, and now it seems I just have to have it. I have gained 17 pounds. (R. J.)

Answer—A quart of milk yields 560 calories. Milk is neither fattening nor thinning. A quart a day in addition to your ordinary food might cause an increase in weight, if you just maintained normal weight on your ordinary diet. Much better to eat one less slice of bread, piece of cake or dish of ice cream a day and continue taking your daily quart of milk—for good nutrition, good health, good looks and longevity.

Always Suffered From Gas In Stomach After Eating

Had Awful Cramps, Heartburn and Acid Risings; Felt Sick and Nauseated With Headache and Dizzy Spells. Tells How Syntona Gave Prompt Relief.

MR. JAMES H. KILBY

"I had been suffering from stomach disorders for the past six years and had taken various treatments without much benefit, but in a short time Syntona has made me feel like a different person," said Mr. James H. Kilby, 450 Charlton Ave. W., Hamilton, Ont., in a recent report.

"Food that I ate just fermented and caused a burning feeling, with awful gassy cramps in my stomach. Sour liquids would rise in my throat and give me such attacks of heartburn from which I could get no relief and I felt sick and nauseated. Often I couldn't keep any food in my stomach at all. I would get throbbing headaches, with dizzy spells and spots darting before my eyes. In fact, I often felt so miserable and rundown I could hardly do my work.

"Syntona was praised by so many people here in Hamilton that I bought some and I am certainly glad I did, because right from the first it helped to relieve the sour, upset condition in my stomach. So I kept on taking it and now after a few weeks I am entirely free from gassy pains, heartburn and sour acidity. I enjoy all my meals. I am not having any headaches or dizzy spells and my entire system feels more healthy. I noticed this especially in the way I am able to work and do not get tired as I did before."

The quick action of Syntona is often surprising, but there is a good reason for it. Syntona contains the pure extracts of no less than 12 of Nature's Finest Herbs and Roots. These act on the stomach, kidneys, liver and bowels and help improve the whole system to make you feel better.

Syntona is sold and recommended in Belleville at DOLAN THE DRUGGIST.

New Soapless VEL Keeps Woolens Softer

by Frances Thompson
noted homemaking authority

Yes it's a fact—the unusual mildness of soapless VEL makes it an ideal cleanser for all kinds of woolens. As you know, many soaps contain alkalis which can be very unkind to woolen fibres and tend to cause "matting". But soapless VEL is a neutral product containing no alkali—that's why it leaves wool soft and fluffy and helps give woolen garments longer life.

NEVER WRING WOOLENS

Woolens should always be washed with care—quick washing, gentle squeezing and lukewarm water are "musts". Never rub or twist woolens. VEL dissolves instantly in lukewarm water making it act as soft as rain water.

NO SUDS NEEDED

Using a slightly lesser amount than soap, try VEL for your favourite sweater, Dad's socks, or baby's blankets and woolens. Put the VEL into basin first then add lukewarm water. But remember—unlike soap VEL needs no suds! Its quick-forming suds don't last so don't be disappointed. There's no need to add more VEL as the lack of suds has no effect on the cleaning power of the almost sudless water. Because VEL is not a soap and doesn't act like a soap it leaves no soap film so rinsing is easier and quicker. So VEL's a time-saver too!

"VEL" is a registered trademark of the COLGATE-PALMOLIVE-PEET CO. LTD.

EDMONTON TEAM CONTINUES TO SET PACE IN LEAGUE

Canadians in Junior Loop Are Biggest Threat to Date

By LAURIE GRAHAM
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Edmonton, Dec. 27. (CP) — Riley Mullen's Edmonton Flyers continue to set the pace in the Western Canada Senior Hockey League as the schedule nears the half-way mark.

Flyers, with 13 victories and a tie, have 27 points, six more than the second place Lethbridge Maple Leafs who hold a point advantage over last year's Allan Cup champions, Calgary Stampeders.

The Saskatchewan entries — Saskatoon Elks and Regina Capitals—haven't fared so well to date. The heavier and more experienced Alberta teams have taken them into camp on almost every occasion this year. Elks, in fourth place, hold a four-point lead over the tail-end Caps.

The Flyers' high-scoring trio of Elmer Kreller, Alex Pringle and Bing Merluck have been their mainstay. Backed by plenty of power defensively in Bob Solinger, Pug Young, and Gordie Watt, and with Goalie Ken McAuley having his best season, it looks as if the Edmonton team will be difficult to oust from the league leadership.

Leafs and Stampeders, on the short end of a number of close games, can draw within striking distance of the Flyers in their remaining games before the New Year. Leafs have two games left to play, Stampeders three and the Flyers only one. Elks and Caps both have a pair of games to play.

In the Junior League, Edmonton Canadians are the biggest threat in the Northern Alberta Division. In the Southern Section, Lethbridge native sons, unbeaten so far this season, look like their nearest rivals for the provincial title.

Regina Patricias are currently setting the pace in the Saskatchewan Junior League. Chalking up a number of convincing victories over the highly-rated Moose Jaw Canucks and other clubs, they seem headed for a good season.

Let us look but briefly upon the chapter that is ending . . . and turn our eyes and efforts forward to the chapter that is about to begin. For if, in its course, the new year is to bring things of true worth, our pace must be set when the year is young. One thing, above all else, brightens our hopes for the future. The heart of Canada is both steady and sturdy . . . for ours is a land where courage is abundant. SLUGGING TITLE NATIONAL LOOP WON BY MUSIAL

Not Difficult to Understand How He Was Picked as Most Valuable Player

By JACK HAND

New York, Dec. 27. (AP) — Stan Musial and Enos Slaughter of the World Champion St. Louis Cardinals have new reasons to ask owner Sam Breadon for more cash in 1947 today after publication of the official National League slugging and runs batted in statistics.

Musial, the batting king with a .365 average, added the slugging championship to his '46 accomplishments, clubbing the opposing pitchers for a .587 mark on the basis of 366 total bases for 624 at bats.

As the talented first sacker already had monopolized the averages by leading in runs, hits, singles, doubles and triples among others, it was not difficult to understand why he was named the most valuable player in the league.

It was the third time musial had taken the slugging crown, having won previously in 1943 and 1944 before entering the navy.

Slaughter's 130 runs batted in told a large share of the Cards' success story, reflecting the real importance of his .300 batting mark. The hustling slugger, who electrified the crowd with his dash from first to home on Harry Walker's double in the last World Series game, kept the birds in the race with his timely base hits. His slugging average was .463, fourth among the regulars behind Musial, Johnny Mize of New York, .578, and Del Ennis of the Phillies .485.

Dixie Walker Second.

Dixie Walker, of Brooklyn, who won the R.B.I. championship a year ago, was second with 116 and Musial had 103, good for third place.

Ed Stanky of Brooklyn continued to work the opposing pitchers for the most bases on balls, leading with 137, falling 11 short of the league record of 148 he established in 1945.

For the first time in five years the circuit had a new strikeout king with Ralph Kiner of Pittsburgh displacing the abdicating Vince DiMaggio who drifted to the Pacific Coast League before the season ended.

Kiner struck out 109 times, an excusable fault because he set the pace with 23 home runs, the first time a National League "freshman" had accomplished the feat since 1904.

Bobby Blattner of New York was the most popular target for a pitched ball, being hit by pitchers six times.

Andy Seminick of the Phillies grounded into the most double plays, 19.

As usual, Manager Mel Ott, of the New York Club led the record-breakers, establishing eight league marks among the 29 major or league standards equalled or tied by National Leaguers.

French Horse Breeders Reaping Handsome Profit

(By The Canadian Press)

French horse breeders, who until recently were finding difficulty making racing pay because of high upkeep costs and small prizes, now are reaping a handsome profit from the boom in London racing prices. Impressed by showing of French thoroughbreds on English tracks last season, British owners and breeders are bidding high prices for the best French blood stock. Victories by such French horses as Caracalla, Sayani and Souverain were mainly responsible for British interest. Caracalla won the Gold Cup Sayani the Cambridgeshire and Souverain the King George VI stakes.

Pirette, leading French filly in 1946, was reported bought by an Indian prince for $80,000.

At Windsor, England, a coughing epidemic yesterday cut down the field of entries in the races and knocked out two favorites. In one stable of 16 horses, 14 were affected.

Armed and Assault, two leading money-winners of 1946, were assigned top weights yesterday for the 10th running of the Santa Anita handicap March 1. The Calumet farms horse was assigned 129 pounds and Texas-bred Assault 128. Louis B. Mayer's Busher, greatest money-winning filly in racing history, was given 122.

Pittsburg Pirates of the National League, yesterday announced purchase of Clyde Kluttz, 28-year-old catcher, from St. Louis Cardinals for an undisclosed sum.

An extra five per cent tax on New York State horse-players for racing within New York limits—at Jamaica, Aqueduct and Belmont Parks—was described as a "discriminatory assessment" by the State Racing Commission, which blamed it for the sharp drop in attendance and betting this year.

Two tickets on the 50-yard line for the annual Orange Bowl game at Miami New Year's Day were offered for sale yesterday at a price of $10,000. The offer was made by a Miami Herald columnist on behalf of a friend, who stipulated the money would go to two hospitals.

Division Leaders Increase Their Margin

New York, Dec. 27. (AP)—Washington and St. Louis, respective leaders of the Eastern and Western Divisions of the Basketball Association of America, were just a little farther ahead of the rest of the pack today.

The Capitals increased their lead over the idle second-place New York Knickerbockers last night by making Providence Steamrollers their 15th straight victim, 78-66, in a game played at Providence.

St. Louis Bombers also took advantage of their nearest pursuers' idleness by gaining a 55-51 victory at the expense of Detroit Falcons.

In the only other league contest, Philadelphia Warriors tightened their grip on third place in the east by sinking the hapless Pittsburgh Ironmen 53-46 at Philadelphia. It was the Ironmen's 16th loss in 23 games.

ART LESIEUR COACH

Providence, R.I., Dec. 27—(CP)—Art Lesieur will coach the Providence Reds for the remainder of the American Hockey League season it was learned today. Lesieur, who has been helping with the coaching and scouting, succeeds Gordon (Tony) Savage, who has been appointed business manager and head of the scouting staff.

Lesieur served the Reds 13 years as a defenceman and played on five championship teams.

CANADIENS BACK IN CONTENTION FOR TOP BERTH

Maple Leafs, However, Hold Three-Point Lead Over Montreal Entry

By JACK MITCHELL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

With Toronto Maple Leafs and Montreal Canadiens opening up a wide lead on the National Hockey League pack, the champion Canadiens seem to be in there mainly because they possess the antidote to the particular brand of poison served by the young Leafs.

The Habitants hauled themselves back into contention for the top berth by whipping Conn Smythe's boys 4-1, in Montreal last night. That victory put an end to Toronto's six-game winning streak. And the last team to humble the Leafs before the streak started was the same Stanley Cup champions, winning 3-2 in Toronto Dec. 11.

Their latest victory, coming in the night's only game, lifted Montreal to within three points of the league-leaders while holding a game in hand.

Tonight is a schedule off-night but the Canadiens will get a great chance to edge closer in the four weekend matches. While each is scheduled for just one game, Montreal's opponent is the last-place Chicago Black Hawks while Toronto draws Boston Bruins, the only other team besides Canadiens who held an edge over Toronto in this season's meetings.

Two for Saturday.

These two games are scheduled for Saturday night, when New York Rangers round out the card by renewing their fourth-place battle with the Red Wings at Detroit. With only one match Sunday night, the Rangers return to New York to meet the third-place Bruins.

Both the Leafs and the Canadiens were playing their second game in two nights last night but it never seemed like it, the way they went at each other hammer and tongs. In all, referee Frank (King) Clancy handed out 12 penalties, none of which resulted in a score.

With a home crowd of 11,765 watching, Canadiens jumped into a one-goal lead in the opening period, held it at 2-1 in the second and broke away with two goals in the last 10 minutes.

The veteran Murph Chamberlain, a former Leaf, was the only player who picked up two points—both of them assists. For Montreal, Maurice (Rocket) Richard opened the scoring by converting Toe Blake's pass, then Ken Mosdell, Jimmy Peters and George Allen tallied in that order.

Ted (Teeter) Kennedy fired Toronto's only tally on a pass from Joe Klukay.

With both teams making 25 shots on goal, Canadiens earned the victory by making them count. It was their second win in four games with Toronto, the other ending in a deadlock.

THE BIG SEVEN

(By The Canadian Press)

Ted Kennedy's goal which saved Toronto Maple Leafs from a shutout last night sent him into a tie for second place in the National Hockey League scoring race with Billy (The Kid) Taylor, Detroit. Leader Maurice Richard, Montreal, added an assist to boost his total to 17 goals and 14 assists for 31 points. Kennedy has 16 goals and 12 assists for 28 points while Taylor has nine and 19. Other scoring leaders were idle or held scoreless.

The leaders:

	G.	A.	P.
Richard, Montreal	17	14	31
Kennedy, Toronto	16	12	28
Taylor, Detroit	9	19	28
Schmidt, Boston	11	14	25
Conacher, Detroit	13	11	24
M. Bentley, Chicago	10	12	22
Bauer, Boston	12	10	22
Abel, Detroit	12	10	22

$6,000 FIRE LOSS

Toronto, Dec. 27 — (CP) — Damage estimated at $6,000 was caused last night in a downtown fruit warehouse by a fire believed to have started from an overheated gas heater for ripening bananas. It was the largest of several fires during the Christmas season in the city.

Picton, Dec. 27 — Scoring three baskets in the last few minutes of play, Belleville Y basketball team defeated Picton Seniors 31-30 in a fast game here Thursday night. Picton led 24-19 at the end of the first half but faded in the dying minutes of the game.

For Picton W. Walters had 9 points, Smyth and Walker two each.

PREDICTS BRAVES WILL WIN

Philadelphia, Dec. 27 —(AP)—General Manager Herb Pennock of the Phillies predicted Boston would win the 1947 National League pennant if the Braves' mound staff comes through.

Otherwise, said Pennock, a former big league pitcher himself, the pennant will go either to the Dodgers or the Cardinals.

The Phils' general manager said in an interview yesterday the Boston mound staff of Mort Cooper, Johnny Sain, Warren Spahn, Ed Wright, and Red Barrett, the latter recently acquired from St. Louis, should do the trick next season.

Max Bentley Named One of 10 Outstanding Players in U.S.

Los Angeles, Dec. 27 — (CP)—Max Bentley, starry centre ice player of the National Hockey League Chicago Black Hawks, was named one of the 10 outstanding athletes of the year in the United States yesterday.

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

It is a pleasure to be defeated by a worthy opponent in bridge. Especially if his plan of play is flawless. Particularly if it works against any defence your pair can possibly consider.

Against a senior master bridge pair in a recent tournament, mine was the west hand in the deal you see here:

WEST
♠A K Q 3
♥K J 9 3
♣10 9 8

WEST
♠J 8 5 4
♥5 4
♦J 7 6 3 2
♣J 5

EAST
♠10 9 6 2
♥Q 10 8 6
♦K 10
♣7 6 4

SOUTH
♥A 7 2
♦A Q 9 8
♣A K Q 3 2

The bidding started off innocently enough. Next thing I knew, they were in a contract of seven no-trump. Interpreted into Horse Sense bids, this is how it went:

SOUTH	NORTH
1 C	1 S
3 D	3 H
4 NT	5 S
6 or 7 NT	Pass

In answer to four no-trump, five spades is The Kibitzer signal convention for showing one ace and two kings. With one king short, only a master player should attempt a grand slam.

Declarer in the south had shown clubs and diamonds. Spades and hearts had been mentioned by his partner in the north. Not much choice was left for a lead from my hand.

With all four suits bid by opponents, rule says to lead the last suit announced by dummy. That I did from my doubleton in hearts. With this or any other lead he would have nabbed all 13 tricks.

Many could do this with all cards in sight. He did it as if all opponent holdings were laid out in front of him. What intrigued me was the speed and confidence with which he had all his plays planned.

A tight squeeze developed against both my partner and me. It was funny. With tears in my eyes, I'm laffink.

The Movie Column

When Frank Sinatra and Van Johnson complained on the record of the hoodlum tactics of some teen-aged autograph hounds they started something. A poll taken of a number of stars and motion picture executives didn't quite stick the opinion down that Sinatra and Johnson throats but the decision was that autograph hounds are part of the business and if some of them are boisterous, well, C'est La Vie.

Maureen O'Hara, the movie star, says, "I'll feel sorry when they stop asking me for my autograph because I know how to handle them. I just say 'take it easy kids, and you'll get an autograph,' and they behave."

Raymond Massey, the Toronto-born actor:: "We wouldn't like it if there were no autograph fans. A few are very rough at times and this is reprehensible, but that is one of the hazards of being prominent and there should be no special protection For every ill-mannered fan there are many real admirers."

COMING TO THE BELLE — Cornel Wilde is starred with Jeanne Crain, William Eythe and Linda Darnell in Jerome Kern's "Centennial Summer," the 20th. Century-Fox musical, scheduled to open at the Belle New Year's Eve Frolic.

Roy Rogers, (the cowboy star): "I think these kids are great and full of life and ginger, just as they should be. Sure, they mob me, and my press agent, who is with me all the time when I'm in New York, has her clothes almost torn off her back But likes it, so why should I object?"

Representative movie executives were inclined to agree with the criticism.

But Spyros P. Skouras, President of the Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, took a more middle-of-the-road view.

"Autograph fans are the result of the movie industry and they cannot be separated from it," Mr. Skouras said. "Average folks will always be drawn to celebrities and it is quite natural for them to seek autographs. Most of them I've obserbed are well-behaved."

Three of Hollywood's small fry are looking forward to an exciting trip next year when Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer makes "The Secret Garden" in England. The youngsters are Margaret O'Brien, Dean Stockwell and Claude Jarman, Jr.

RED AND BLUE LINES THROWN OUT OF WINDOW

Hockey Loop in Ottawa Thinks Lost Art of Stickhandling Will Come Back

Ottawa, Dec. 27—(CP)—What—no red and blue lines?

Incredible as it may seem to observers who have watched hockey develop from the old corner-lot, sardine-can shinny to its present complex form, the civil servants' Recreational Association has tossed out half the rule book.

When the R. A. opens its 12-team circuit at the Ottawa Auditorium Sunday, they'll play on a clear sheet of ice with only a single face-off circle in the centre. And, says T. R. (Ray) Kinsella, sponsor of the idea, it's going to be "interesting."

"Trouble with hockey today," says Ray, who played in the NHL for Ottawa Senators in 1930-31, "is there are so many rules it takes a Philadelphia lawyer to understand it."

Now an official of the Fisheries Department and hockey convener for the R.A., he's looking forward to the elimination of all lines as a great experiment.

"Everybody in hockey that I've talked to says it's a screwball idea," Kinsella said in an interview. "But none of them can give any really good reason why it shouldn't work.

"It will do away with ganging up at the ends and all the whistle-blowing which just confuses the spectators and holds up the game. It'll be the kind of hockey the average fan can understand."

The new game will have only one offsides rule — that players must be behind their centre player when the rubber is faced. There'll be no holdups except for penalties or lost pucks.

Some of the rules, he admitted, may have to be made up as new problems arise. But the 12 teams of the league are all enthusiastic about the idea.

Sports Roundup

By AL COLLETTI

New York, Dec. 27 — (CP) — Serious financial obstacles face the major league baseball players' pension fund which calls for an annual income of more than $600,000 . . . only slightly more than $300,000 has been dug up for the fund so far and that includes the all-star game net receipts and the $150,000 World Series radio fee . . . Professional basketball in the Basketball Association of America circuit is lacking in turnstile appeal . . . Attendance at B.A.A. games this season averages only 3,550 a game . . . Dan (N.Y. World-Telegram) Daniel reports Glenn Davis, the great Army back, will remain in service, passing up a $40,000 offer to play baseball with Brooklyn Dodgers organization . . . Joe DiMaggio, the Yankee Clipper, will join the club in February for another Caribbean jaunt . . . Last year Joe partly blamed the tiring early spring training session in Panama for his dismal showing . . . Perhaps Larry Macphail had a lot to do with Giuseppe's new attitude when he sighted the Yankee outfielder at his 1946 salary of $42,500.

Pounding the Turf

North America's thoroughbred breeding industry has tightened its hold on world leadership . . . In 1946 more than 6,300 foals were registered with the breeding bureau of the Jockey Club, leading U. S. racing body . . . Included are numerous foals born in Canada, Britain, France, Argentina and other South American countries . . . This figure marked the largest registration since the world record crop of 1941 when the birth of 6,784 colts and fillies was recorded . . . It is more than twice the registration in Britain, which ranks second in the breeding industry . . . Prominent breeders place the value of registered foals of 1946 at more than $20,000,000 . . . However, records based on performances during the last 25 years, show that only 2,000 of the 6,300 foals can be expected to get to the post; only one in six can be counted on to win a race and one in 10 to run off with stakes.

Today's Guest Star

Tom (PM) Meany: "The official batting and fielding averages of the major leagues represent the greatest waste of agate type since the financial pages of early 1929."

Garden Gleanings

Repercussions are being felt in New York basketball circles from Tennessee's refusal to play a basketball game with Duquesne because of the presense of a Negro on the Pittsburgh team . . . Ned Irish, Madison Square Garden basketball czar, received several letters protesting against Tennessee as a future Garden attraction . . . A Jim Crow issue could prevent several southern colleges from accepting invitations to play in the Garden's post-season tournament . . . Cancellation of the Rocky Graziano-Reuben Shank bout scheduled for tonight proved a headache for the Garden, which already had $20,000 in the till . . .

BURNED FINGERS

By Kathleen Norris

CHAPTER 21.

"I shouldn't stop it. Why shouldn't I like you?" the old lady asked gruffly.

"Well, those arrangements.." Jennifer shrugged eloquently.

"I'll not bt late."

"Jennifer," said Jim, driving, "I have a horrible secret to unfold to you."

"Unf-f-fold it," she said, feeling her throat thicken and her color change.

"I've never told you that I have a little nest egg— seven thousand dollars, to be exact."

"You!" The blood was back in her heart and face again. "Jim, you stole it!"

"No, I didn't' I never told you, because I wanted to surprise you, someday when my intern work was over and we were house-hunting, or looking at some particularly attractive place and saying, 'Let's buy it!'"

"Jim, where did you get all that money?"

"From my father. He died when I was eleven. I used to say then that I wanted to be a doctor without in the least knowing what it meant, what was involved. He had wanted to be a doctor, couldn't afford it, for he married young and my mother was an invalid for years. She died before he did and afterward they found this insurance—twenty-five thousand for my education. An old Dr. Bush was custodian; he doled it out to me, quarter by quarter, always reminding me that I'd need money in medical school for books and courses. This is what's left. I had no idea until a few weeks ago how much it was; he sent for me—he lives in Philadelphia—and handed over the residue with an amount of bookkeeping and affidavits and statements that would give you a headache. So then I planned my surprise for you, but now I don't want to wait. You might find just the place you want. . . By the way, I've no one else in the world, so I've made everything over to you — in case," Jim ended.

"There'll be no 'in case.' And I'll not find a house," Jennifer told him. "I'll wait for you. Jim," she went on, with a slight change of tone, laying a hand on his, "suppose I had a horrible secret too, something I hated to tell you but yet thought you ought to know. Would you want to know it or not know it?"

He had stopped the car outside the Flood cottage now; he put his arm about her.

"I've only to look at you, Jennifer, to know that you've not got any very horrible secrets. There's something of the kid about you still: the way your hair is brushed off your temples in that babyish fluff, and the look in your eyes. And yet you're my ideal of everything that is strong and sweet and good in all womanhood, and you'll always be that. I love you, my darling, get that through your little head. I think you're the finest woman I've ever known, grown up out of that dismal flat and that poor worried, crowded little girlhood of yours into nothing but goodness and gentleness. I don't know what I ever did to be lucky to get you or what my children ever did to have a mother like you. But if trying to make you happy, trying to show you how grateful I am, is any proof of the way I feel, why, that's what I'm going to be doing all my life!"

"You're so terribly good to me, Jim," she whispered her face wet with tears. There was time for no more. Mary Flood, who was in her quiet way a dragon for the convention, came out of the cottage to tell them not to sit out there in the car like goons but to come in where it was warm.

A busy pre-Easter Saturday at Vogelsang's was enough, almost, to drive from a girl's head that this was her wedding eve. Yet Jennifer watched the clock as the hours went by the day had the strange flavor of last times. After today she would not know the dressing room with its mirrors and its ranks of colored satin slippers; she would not know the dank, spacious upstairs lunchroom where the lockers were, the gas plates, the washbasins and roller towels, and the sweet sickish odors of disinfectants. When she went down past the crates and the bunched excelsior of the packing room and out into the muddy alley today it would be for the last time.

For she was done with Vogelsang's. If ever she worked again, and of course she would find some work while Jim was away, it would be in a defense plant or a hospital or with the Red Cross. She had had enough of exquisite frocks, chiffon velvets, gold and pearl embroideries, spangled fans, hundred-dollar handbags, transparent stockings—that not even the sharpest inspection could tell from bare legs—baby dresses at thirty-five dollars and fur coats at three thousand. She knew that she would never want even to enter Vogelsang's again.

It was as if a submarine light lingered over the familiar scene today; everything to her eyes had the translucence, the slightly distorted angles and swimming outlines of things sent under water. There were scented flowers about; the air was perfumed with freesia and lilac scent. This time tomorrow, something in her heart kept saying, you will be Jim's wife. This time tomorrow.

"D'you know who I am?" a harsh, deep old voice asked her suddenly. Jennifer turned, looked at the speaker, and smiled her ready smile.

"Yes, of course. How do you do, Mrs. Giddings? You're Nancy Newell's grandmother."

"Well, she calls me 'Granny'—yes, that's who I am," conceded the magnificent old woman whose broad frame and silk and fur draperies were spread over fully half of quite a good-sized sofa. "As a matter of fact," she added, "she's my niece's child. I'm her great-aunt."

"Oh, is that it? And how's Nancy?" Jennifer wanted to say. But regulations were regulations. So instead she gave old Mrs. Giddings her bright, impersonal smile and glanced about for help. "Is somebody waiting on you? Does Miss Hollister know you're here?" she asked.

"You're the one I want to talk to," said Nancy's great-aunt.

"Oh? Oh. Well, how is Nancy?" Jennifer asked politely.

"I don't know. She and my niece have gone down to Palm Springs and may go on to Florida. She'll be back in another ten days. What I want to know is—you're the girl Nancy took to lunch a while back, aren't you?"

"Yes, we did go to lunch together," Jennifer admitted, puzzled but still professionally gracious.

"Name's Richie, hey?"

"Jennifer Richie." Obeying a pat of the old woman's hand, Jennifer sat down beside her.

"Yes. Well, I want a young girl to come live with me as part companion and part company for Nancy," said the old autocrat abruptly. "I have a nurse —fine woman, but there's no young life in the house. I'll pay you what they pay you here, and it'll be all gain, for you won't so much as wash a pocket handkerchief. Before the war we traveled — Honolulu and London and Antibes. When this mess is over we'll travel again; you'll go everywhere. As it is, I'm going on to New York in a few months — take you as a matter of course. You'd be an extremely foolish girl," Mrs. Giddings finished warningly, "to do anything else. Pack up your things and come over to us. Today's Saturday; come tonight."

Jennifer had listened to this address with a dozen emotions sweeping over her—compunction, amusement, regret, gratitude. Now at her first opportunity she said gently, appreciatively:

"Oh, you're so kind; And I'd love it. I've never been to New York; I've never really been anywhere. But you see——"

"Think it over, come next week," Mrs. Giddings put in peremptorily with an encouraging nod.

"But you see," Jennifer explained, all roses, "I'm being married tomorrow! I'm marrying a doctor who's a captain in the Medical Corps, tomorrow at eleven. So I couldn't ....but you're so kind....and I know I'd love it really...."

"Tomorrow!" exclaimed old Mrs. Giddings, affronted.

"Otherwise I'd honestly love to try it," Jennifer said smilingly. "It would be such fun! And if you didn't like me," she went on ingenuously, "you could always stop it, for I'm leaving here anyway and going into some other work while Jim—while Captain

"But look here," pursued Mrs. Giddings, "if you're going to take another job, why not take mine?"

"Well, because..." Jennifer began briskly, and hesitated. "you see," she went on, "it would be—I'll be a married woman—and it would seem—if Jim came home suddenly I'd have to join him for as long as I could...."

She floundered to a stop, smiling apologetically.

"I don't see it," said the old lady flatly. "I want you."

"You're terribly nice to want me," Jennifer answered, laughing outright, "and I know you always get what you want. So I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll talk it over with Captain Lippincott, and come over and tell you what he thinks about it; how'll that do? For of course I could save every cent I made then, couldn't I?" she ended, her eyes wide and shining.

"Yes, I dare say you could, I dare say you could," Mrs. Giddings mumbled absently.

"She's already forgotten she's asked me," thought Jennifer.

"Look, promise me you'll come?" the older woman demanded suddenly.

"She hasn't forgotten," thought Jennifer. "Of course I'll come," she said aloud.

"Here it is," her companion began again after a moment's scowling thought. "I want you to feel—you might want something for setting up housekeeping — eh? that man of yours, my dear," she added in a suddenly softened tone, "he mightn't come back, eh? We have to think of that. My only son, twenty-two years old, didn't come back from the last war. They got him on the tenth of November, one day before the Armistice. I was on my knees thanking God it was over when the news came. We have to face those things. We have to face those things....yes. Well, now, what day will you come?"

"I truly will come," Jennifer promised in a shadow of her own voice. She laid a pitying hand on the old fat hand.

"Someday when you feel lonely, when you say to yourself, 'I've nowhere to go,' will you pop a nightgown into a bag and come over and spend a few days with us? You'll be lonely," said old Mrs. Giddings, getting ponderously to her feet, "but you'll do me a great favor."

"I do promise," Jennifer answered, surprised, touched, and pitying.

Mrs. Giddings clutched at her hands at this, steadying her great bulk on her feet.

"You've got a car?"

"I think probably I will have one someday. Joe Evans said he could get us a car."

"Then you drive straight up the hill to Garland Street and turn on East Beaumont and go past Giddings Manor. That's the place that was to have been my son's. You can't miss it—there are two brick columns painted white at the gate, and a long brick wall."

Jennifer had walked with her to the elevator. Afterward she was to wonder how her life might have been changed if she had not made this simple little gesture of courtesy. She felt a wave of pity and of something like concern for the bulky old flouncing body who was fussing her way out of the shop. There was something laughable and yet appealing in her gruff, despotic demand for companionship and liking. Jennifer shrewdly suspected that she was an old lady who liked to do favors, always in her own way, of course, but real favors nonetheless, for the sake of the gratitude they evoked. She liked power and her money was power.

"Poor old lady, but you can't buy me!" Jennifer mused smilingly as the big cream-and-gold elevators doors noiselessly closed. She turned about, still smiling, and found herself facing Sidney Borrows.

A glaze of horror and something like fright came over Jennifer. She felt the blood leaving her face, her throat was thick. She had a sensation that everything that she had been thinking, everything to which he had been holding, was fading away, leaving her alone and cold and afraid.

"Hello, Jennifer," Sidney said.

"Oh—hello," she said slowly, dizzied by a sudden sharp pain between her eyes.

"Long time no see," the man said buoyantly. "Where've you been?"

"I've been here for five years."

"I never knew it! Migs gets things here—my cousin, Margot Phillips."

"I think she does," Jennifer agreed automatically. Migs Phillips probably was a girl who came in for the sales; Jennifer never modeled sales dresses. They were on a lower floor.

"Well, you don't have to look so terrified about it!" Sidney said, laughing. "What's new with you?"

"That I'm going to be married tomorrow," she said, swallowing.

"You're going to be married tomorrow? Tell me about it." With the remembered casual, easy manner he drew her a little aside in the elevator lobby, holding her with one hand on her shoulder, smiling down at her. "Who's the lucky man?"

"Captain James Lippincott: he's a doctor in the Medical Corps." Oh, this was all so sickening—so incredibly dreadful. This was a troubled dream.

"Oh, if it were only a year from now!" Jennifer thought.

"In the Army, huh?"

"Medical Corps. He leaves a week from Monday—or soon, anyway, for the Solomons."

"Just time to squeeze in a honeymoon. Well, I'm glad I ran into you. You'd have been gone after today, wouldn't you?"

Royal Bank Net Profit Higher By $922,048

Toronto, Dec. 27—Total assets of the Royal Bank of Canada, which last year topped the $2,000,000,000 mark for the first time have again increased to the new record level of $2,181,974,000. Deposits by the public, excluding Dominion and Provincial Government deposits, are substantially higher, having increased more than $171,000,000. It is understood that the greater part of this increase is in interest bearing deposits in Canada, a clear indication that the scale of private savings is being well maintained.

The bank's investments in government and other public securities, totalling $1,066,880,238 include $100,000,000 of government securities other than Canadian, of which the greater portion is in United States and British Government securities. Investments in other bonds, debentures and stocks, now standing at $85,289,530, have increased by some $32,000,000.

A sharp reduction of call loans in Canada as compared with a year ago is noted. The volume of loans under this head in 1945 was abnormally high, due in large measure to the Victory Loan campaign last year.

The upward trend in commercial loans and discounts in Canada, noted in last year's report, has continued, the increase under this heading amounting to $25,000,000. This figure, however, does not accurately reflect the substantial increase in strictly commercial loans made by the bank in the dominion during the period under review, because included in the figures of the previous balance sheet were substantial loans to borrowers for the purchase of Victory Bonds. This factor was of much less importance in 1946. Commercial loans by the bank's foreign branches, totalling $105,084,911 also show a substantial increase of $17,000,000.

The liquid position of the bank is, as usual, very strong. Liquid assets now total $1,600,742,188, equal to 81.69 per cent of the bank's liabilities to the public.

Profits for the year, after the usual contribution to the Pension Fund Society and appropriation for contingency reserves, amounted to $6,906,386. Of this amount $2,055,000 has been set aside for Dominion Government taxes and $830,491 for bank premises, leaving a net profit of $4,020,895. This figure compares with $3,098,847 the previous year.

No "Ultimatum" In Dairen Incident

Washington, Dec. 27 —(AP)— The State Department said yesterday latest information indicated that no official Soviet "ultimatum" was involved in last week's enforced departure of an American naval vessel from the Russian-held naval port of Dairen, Manchuria.

A despatch from William H. Newton, Scripps-Howard writer representing the combined world press, reported the refusal of Russian military authorities to permit an American business man and two correspondents to land at Dairen from an American vessel which hurriedly left port two hours after the expiration of its authorized 48-hour stay. Newton spoke of a verbal ultimatum by Russian military officials.

After obtaining clarification of a "garbled" portion of a report from Consul General H. Merell Benninghoff at Dairen, a State Department spokesman expressed belief that the Russian "ultimatum" which sped the vessel's departure was not, "in any sense a fist-shaking affair."

The spokesman, Lincoln White, department press officer, told reporters that Benninghoff had advised that the Soviet official in charge of the docks had granted a two-hour extension of stay to the ship on his own authority.

Then, becoming nervous, this official told the ship's officer the vessel must leave or he could not be responsible for the consequences. White explained that this apparently meant that he simply didn't know what the reaction of his superiors might be.

Today's explanation appeared to close the Dairen incident so far as the State Department is concerned.

Girl's Long Braids Snipped by Thief

Washington, Dec. 27 —(AP)— Waist-length braids of dark brown hair were the pride of 12-year-old Diane Sklarsky.

Today Diane tearfully related this story.

She boarded a street-car yesterday morning to visit her grandmother. She felt a tug on her hair, but didn't look around, believing a braid had caught on a button or part of the seat. Later she felt another tug.

It wasn't until after she got off the car that she discovered her braids were missing.

Diane told her mother, Mrs. Edward D. Sklarsky, she remembered that a man had taken the seat right behind her. Mrs. Sklarsky reported the incident to police, then called a newspaper so that "other mothers might warn their daughters against this man."

35 Fatalities Across Canada During Holiday

(By The Canadian Press)

A toll of 35 dead and three missing was chalked up to day in Canadian Press reports of Christmas holiday week mishaps across Canada.

Fourteen were killed in traffic accidents. Ten lost their lives by fire. Four were killed by trains. The seven other fatalities resulted from a variety of causes.

Missing were nine-year-old Marion Rasmuk, of St. Catharines last seen talking to a "tall, slim stranger" near her home, Monday, Al Harnett, 50-year-old Newfoundland seaman who disappeared from a freighter at Halifax Christmas Day, and Mrs. Lena Jacobson, an Indian woman whose empty boat was found drifting at Alert Bay, B.C.

This was the list of dead in traffic accidents: Mr. and Mrs. James Jones and Mr. and Mrs. Hugh McKnight, all at New Westminster, B.C., John Percy Simpson and Jack Bletz at Calgary. Frank Gadek and Heber Roberts at Hamilton; Mr. and Mrs. John Stutz, of Penetang, in a car crash near Bradford; Edward Compton, Toronto; William Bannister near Plainfield, Ont., Patricia Comeau, four-year-old girl who coasted into a truck at Saint John, and J. G. Calkin, whose body was found on the highway near New Glasgow.

Three Burned

The fire victims were Johnnie Zomar, four, at Abbotsford, B.C.; Mike Repska and Allan Colquette at Yellowknife, N.W.T.; Mrs. Beatrice Scott, 66, and her granddaughter, Mrs. Juanita Lurrit, 18 at Rocky Mountain House, Alta.; Avile Lemire, 65, and a man known only as Ouellette, at St. Barthemly, Que.; Telesphore Leroux, 28, at Montreal; Fernand Gaudette six, at Sudbury; and Adolphe Dugas, 36, at St. Anne Des Monts, Que.

The four train deaths included a triple fatality at Talmage, Sask., where collision of a Canadian National Railways freight with a sanding caboose brought death to three Regina trainmen, John J. Kerr, Jack A. Scott and J. G. Cootz. Doreen Brown, 19, was struck and killed by a train Christmas Day near North Bay.

From west to east, these were the other fatalities:

Found Gravely Hurt

Harry Henderson, 57, died of injuries at Vancouver after being found gravely hurt in the washroom of a club.

Donald Hastings, 21, found dead of knife wounds near a hotel at Blenheim, in Western Ontario.

Mrs. Maude Small, 37, died at Toronto from injuries suffered in a fall from the third storey of her home.

Duncan Gordon, 42, missing since Nov. 14, was found dead in shallow water at the foot of Princess Street in Kingston.

A man known only as Felsy, whose body was found hanging in his rooming house in Montreal.

Gerald Cote, four years of age, was crushed by an overturned oil barrel at Sherbrooke, Que.

James P. Gillis, 75, fell through the ice and was drowned at Malpegue Bay, P.E.I.

INJURED LITTLE BOY MEETS SANTA IN HOSPITAL

Toronto, Dec. 27 (CP)—Eight-year-old Robert Mason started Christmas Day rather badly when he was struck by a truck. But he wasn't seriously hurt and his day ended quite satisfactorily. In a ward of the Sick Children's Hospital Robert spent a happy time with Santa Claus and received a stocking containing fruit, an airplane, a train, paints, pencils and games. And Santa even let him pull the famous white whiskers.

Royal Cablegram Received On 69th Anniversary

Napanee, Dec. 27. (CP)—As a climax to their observance of their 69th wedding anniversary, Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Kimmerly, of Napanee, Christmas night, received a cablegram from the King and Queen. Previously Prime Minister Mackenzie King had sent them a message of greeting.

Undernutrition Signs Are Seen In West Germany

Berlin, Dec. 27 (AP).—A three-power survey of hunger conditions in Western Germany today found a "significantly larger proportion" of the population in "unsatisfactory condition" and an "increasing number" of these showing "signs of severe undernutrition", with children from seven to 14 the chief sufferers.

The nutrition survey, sixth of a series since the occupation began, covered the French, American and British zones. It was prepared by a three-power committee.

The survey reported that the French zone was in the most dangerous position in regard to good stocks. At the same time, it praised the French practice of feeding both miners and their families in contrast to the British-zone practice of feeding only the miners. The report said coal production was higher for each man in the French than in the British zone.

"German adults are underweight and in almost every instance weights are significantly lower than a year ago," it said.

"Although children under seven have not been markedly affected by the food shortage, the growth and development of those between seven and 14 years is unsatisfactory."

The report noted few actual cases of hunger edema but warned that continued low rations had cut body reserves below safe standards and any failure in the ration would be felt immediately.

Food hoards have been exhausted as well as barter material and most Germans today must live within the official ration, the survey said.

"All evidence," the report declared, "compels the committee to conclude that conditions in certain respects are serious."

FRENCH FORCES CLAIM VICTORY IN INDO-CHINA

Paris, Dec. 27 (AP). — The French claimed in an Indo-China communique today to have beaten back a strong Christmas-night attack in Hanoi with heavy losses to Viet Nam troops. They said eight Japanese bodies were found among the slain.

Colonial military authorities claimed other successes also in scattered clashes throughout northern Indo-China, scene of fighting since a week ago yesterday between the forces of France and of the Viet Nam republic.

The communique came amid mutual accusations by Ho Chi Minh, leader of the Viet Nam Republic, and the French.

A delayed dispatch from Saigon said the republic's underground radio broadcast on Christmas night a purported statement by Ho blaming the French, for the outbreak in Hanoi, capital of the republic and of French Indo-China.

At about the same time, Ho was accused in Paris of having planned the revolt and having taken a conciliatory tone to screen preparations for it.

Ho is president of the republic, which France last March recognized as a free state embracing Tonkon and Annam provinces, with membership in the federation of Indo-China and the French Union. Many quarters here had regarded the revolt as the work of extreme nationalists acting against his wishes.

However, a foreign office spokesman said last night that he himself had planned the uprising and was directing it. He accused Ho of covering up preparation of the revolt with a conciliatory letter to President-Premier Leon Blum Dec. 15, four days before shooting started in Hanoi, capital of Indo-China and of the Viet Nam Republic.

The letter proposed that both sides move back to positions as at that date at Haiphong, Hanoi's port, and Langson, to the north on the Chinese border.

British Freighter Aground on Coast Of Newfoundland

New York, Dec. 27 — (AP) — The Coast Guard said today that the marine radio at Halifax had intercepted an SOS message from the small British freighter, S. S. Thackeray, which said it was aground and was being pounded heavily by the seas one half mile west of Outer Cat Island, near Argentia, Newfoundland.

Newfoundland railroad owners have sent one of their ice breakers, the S. S. Kyle, to the rescue, the Coast Guard said.

There was no indication how many persons were aboard the British vessel.

Lloyd's register of ships lists the vessel's owner as the Rodney Steamship Company, Ltd., of Sunderland, England. The Thackeray is 2,865 gross tons in weight, is 315 feet long and was built in 1942. Her home port is Sunderland.

LATE ENDING TO SEASON OF LAKES NAVIGATION

Fort Erie, Dec. 27 (CP)—The 1946 navigation season in Buffalo came to an unusually late end Christmas Day with arrival of steamer Venus from Detroit, commanded by Captain Paulson, of Buffalo. Her regular skipper, veteran sailor William R. Russill, died in a Buffalo hospital just a few hours before his ship docked.

Hon. Ray Lawson Installed As Lieut.-Governor

Toronto, Dec. 27 —(CP)— Canada's newest lieutenant-governor, Hon. Ray Lawson of London Ont., was receiving congratulations from a host of friends today as he adjusted his new robes of office.

In a simple 10-minute ceremony in the legislative chamber at Queen's Park yesterday attended by his predecessor, the Hon. Albert Matthews, and provincial government dignitaries, Chief Justice R. S. Robertson of the Ontario Supreme Court administered the oath of office to the industrialist.

With traditional dignity, Mr. Lawson was handed the great seal, which he examined and returned to Provincial Secretary D. R. Michener. Following the oath, Mr. Lawson changed seats with Mr. Matthews. Premier Drew stood to the left and his cabinet ministers sat around the council table.

Welcomed to Office.

Premier Drew welcomed Mr. Lawson to his new office after the ceremony and assured him all possible assistance from the government. The Premier then paid high tribute to the retiring lieutenant-governor and said he and Mrs. Matthews had served unselfishly through their long tenure of office. His was the longest tenure of office of any lieutenant-governor—nine years.

Members of Mr. Lawson's family, relatives, cabinet members and about 100 others watched the ceremony. Ministers in attendance besides Mr. Michener were Agriculture Minister Kennedy, Labor Minister Daly, Attorney-General Blackwell, Planning and Development Minister Porter and W. G. Webster, minister without portfolio. W. J. Stewart, speaker of the legislature, was also present.

Mrs. John C. Kennedy and Lt.-Col. Thomas Lawson were the only ones of Mr. and Mrs. Lawson's five children able to attend the ceremony. Other relatives present included Helen and Mary McArthur, nieces; Gertrude Hodgins, aunt, and Mrs. Duncan MacArthur, sister.

Marmora

Marmora, Dec. 27 (Special).—Bright Christmas services, well attended, were held in Marmora churches on Christmas Eve. At St. Paul's the service commenced at 11.30 p.m. with carol singing by choir and congregation; and at St. Luke's an account of the Nativity being read by W. J. Cottrell, lay reader. At midnight there was a choral celebration of Holy Communion with the rector, Rev. J. M. Brownlie, L.Th., S.Th. being the celebrant. The choir rendered as the anthem "Unto us a child is born" (Caleb Simper). Solo parts were taken by Mesdames L. R. Rundle and P. Gray. The rector gave an impressive Christmas message. Flowers on the altar were the gift of Mr. and Mrs. Horace J. Neath in memory of Mrs. Neath's father, the late William Nuttall.

At St. Andrew's the Christmas story was presented in song and word. The senior choir and Deloro and Marmora junior choirs led in the singing of Christmas hymns and carols with appropriate readings by the pastor, Rev. E. M. Cadigan.

At Sacred Heart Church Rev. H. J. Farrell officiated at the midnight Mass and at Masses at 9 a.m. and 10 a.m. on Christmas day. Chrysanthemums adorned the altar and white Christmas trees were placed in the sanctuary and over the crib.

Mrs. Edith Augustine Delaby, who with her 4½-months-old baby was flying to her army veteran husband in Newark, N.J., was with the child in a hospital at Limerick. Both were in grave condition.

Survivors not suffering from burns, cuts or fractures were being treated for shock.

"We have not been able so far to determine how the crash happened," a A.W.A. spokesman said.

The plane plowed onto tiny Melican Island, a swampy, weed-covered patch with only one house, and scattered burning wreckage over hundreds of yards of water and bogland shortly after 2 a.m. (9 p.m., Friday E.S.T.) The scene is about two miles from Shannon airport.

Crash Heard on Mainland

Persons on the mainland who heard the crash rowed out to the island in flatbottom boats and brought survivors across the Shannon's tributary, the Fergus River, to be put into ambulances and hurried to Limerick hospitals.

Capt. Sidney P. Harrington of Holyoke, Mass., a Pan-American Airways flier who helped in the rescue, brought back a report of "the worst wreckage I ever saw."

The survivors included five-month-old Charles Delaby, bound for New Jersey with his 20-year-old mother to join his soldier father.

The hostess, Miss Kay Ferguson, 22, of Jackson Heights, N.Y., who was rescued early said the baby's mother was killed but Paris T.W.A. officials said they understood the mother, whom they identified as Edith Augustine Delaby, had survived.

"I had just told the passengers to fasten their safety belts for landing when the accident occurred," Miss Ferguson said while being treated for shock and cuts on one foot at the airport.

The plane was believed to have carried 14 passengers and a crew of nine.

Other members of Harrington's Pan-American crew said that the plane appeared to have broken its back in the crash before fire spread.

Walks Across Fields.

Miss Ferguson walked across water-soaked fields to the airport from the river while ambulances bounced across "bog road" wheel tracks toward Limerick with the more severely injured.

She asked airport officials to cable her parents, "wish you all a happy New Year," without mentioning the accident.

The baby was five-months-old Charles Delaby, whose mother, a 20-year-old French war bride on her way to join her husband in New Jersey, was killed.

"The last thing she asked before she died was how the baby was," said Hostess Kay Ferguson. "She died before we could tell her."

The baby suffered a fractured thigh and face burns but it was believed likely he would live.

A doctor who gave first aid before survivors were loaded into ambulances said that most of them were severely burned or injured otherwise.

The wreckage, said witnesses, was scattered over hundreds of yards of water and bogland around a tiny island.

Rescuers toiled for hours to reach the scene and laboriously retrieved each survivor. To get to their boats, they floundered through waist-deep mud at low tide both going out and coming back.

The airport in mid-morning was virtually deserted. Nearly every available man still was searching among the widely scattered wreckage.

Three Crew Members Killed

Paris, Dec. 28 — (AP)—Trans World Airline officials today listed three crew members as definitely killed in the crash of the line's Star of Cairo in Eire. They said five passengers were definitely known to be survivors.

Roland Dulin, T.W.A. press representative, said after receiving a telephone call from a hospital near the scene of the wreck, not far from Shannon airport, that the known dead among the crew were:

Herbert Burmeister of Washington, D.C., radio officer.

Walter McBride of Alexandria, Va., flight engineer.

Robert A. Osterburg of Alexandria, Va., navigator.

Dulin said T.W.A. officials at Shannon airport told him that Edith Augustine Delaby, bride of an American soldier en route to New York to join her husband, had survived the crash. Another report from the T.W.A. field in Eire said she was dead.

Dulin reported that her four-month-old son was definitely a survivor but had a broken leg.

Six Survive

Others listed as "definitely" surviving were the six other crew members and these three other passengers:

Davis N. Tannenbaum of New York City;

Guenther N. Lubszynski, French engineer;

Jean Claude Zelaznegora, 12-year-old French school boy who lives in New York.

Previously T.W.A. said 12 of 23 persons aboard survived.

Four of them were named:

They are: the pilot, Capt. Herbert Tansey, Falls Church, Va., Flight Officer Clifford Sparrow, Washington, D.C.; the hostess, Vina Ferguson, Jackson Heights, N.Y. and a 4½ months-old baby, Charles Bruce Delaby, of Newark, N.J.

MUST ABANDON VETO BEFORE U.S. WILL GIVE SECRETS

Question Regarded As Key to Basic Arms Reduction Program Laid Before Assembly

By LARRY HAUCK

Lake Success, N.Y., Dec. 28 — (AP) — Bernard M. Baruch's sharp warning that the United States could not yield atomic bomb secrets to the world unless the veto was ruled out of any international control plan sent United Nations delegates into hotel room conferences today seeking off-the-floor agreement.

Representatives of the 12 countries of the U. N. Atomic Energy Commission had until Monday morning, when the body goes into session for final decision, to settle this critical issue, which generally is regarded as the key to the basic arms reduction program laid down by the U. N. Assembly.

Baruch's strong speech was made at a closed session of the Commission last night in the midst of bitter debate over inclusion of the veto with regard to punishment of violators of a control system. The American delegate made it clear that he could not recommend Senate approval of any plan including the veto.

Delegates saw little chance for immediate agreement, in the face of Russia's continued silence and new opposition to Baruch by France and Great Britain, and postponed the whole issue until Monday.

Gromyko Absent

Soviet delegate Andrei A. Gromyko was absent, because, Prof. S. P. Alexandrov tersely told reporters, he was "occupied with other business." Alexandrov sat through the whole meeting without speaking but near its end advised the chairman that he wanted to be considered "present but abstaining in full."

The American delegation later indicated that should Baruch meet defeat in the commission, the United States probably would file a minority report and carry its fight to the parent security council. A spokesman said Baruch could count on solid support from China, Egypt, Brazil, Mexico and Australia. The others were classed as doubtful or opposed.

Both British and French members agreed in principle to the ban on the veto and made it clear they were acting in the hopes of bringing unanimity.

After the commission acts on the whole atomic plan on Monday, it will be forwarded to the security council for consideration at its session the following day.

Chatham Bus Drivers Strike

Chatham, Dec. 28. (CP)—A seven-man police squad today cleared a picket line set up by striking Chatham bus drivers from the Chatham Bus Company terminal at the request of the company as the drivers of its 26 buses started a walkout which tied up bus transportation in this city of some 18,000 persons.

The strikers set up their picket line this morning after a meeting last night to discuss wage rates and holiday pay and working conditions.

Police were called to disperse the pickets after Manager Jack Bayne reported to police that one of the company's buses was missing. However it turned up later.

Three Panthers Left Strictly Alone After Chewing Way Out of Cage

El Paso, Tex., Dec. 28—(AP)—Three panthers last night held undisputed possession of a railway express car while officials of the Texas and Pacific Railroad and local police left them strictly alone and awaited the arrival of a Dallas animal trainer — who, it was hoped, would have some influence with the wayward animals.

The panthers, being shipped from Dallas to Camarillo, Calif., chewed their way out of a cage in the car yesterday and since being discovered out of their cage the animals have prowled the railroad car — alone and behind locked doors.

Noble Hamiter of Dallas, shipper of the panthers and their trainer, was to have left Dallas late last night by plane to come here to supervise their capture. Meanwhile police aided by a veteran lion tamer, Raymond Hathaway of El Paso, were completing preparations to enter the express car. They were armed with gas and riot guns. The group decided to await the trainer's arrival and ordered the car shunted to a rail siding for the night.

The panthers were being shipped to the Louis Goebel wild animal farm at Camarillo.

Many Power, Phone Lines Broken by Sleet, Gales

Ontario's worst storm of the Winter so far left the province under a blanket of crusted snow today, its highways slippery and slushy, its streets icy and its power, telephone and telegraph lines broken where gales toppled sleet-laden poles and wires.

As the snowstorm started to abate this morning, cold air flowed across the province and temperatures nosedived. Between 8:30 and 9:30 o'clock the Windsor temperature dipped from 44 degrees to 34, London's from 48 to 38. Weathermen predicted that in most sections it would become steadily colder during the rest of the day with temperature in the Toronto area falling to zero by tonight.

North of Muskoka, the snowfall had ceased b ymid-morning. Skies were clear and clouds rode high north of North Bay. Throughout the north country the mercury moved downward.

Northern communities experienced bone-chilling temperatures overnight. Moosonee reported 20 below zero, Nakina 24 below and Kapuskasing 20 below. Farther south, Sudbury had eight below. In Sault Ste. Marie the temperature was nine above zero at 7:30 a.m. and continuing to drop.

North Bay awoke to find some back streets blocked following heavy snowfall during the night but works department men kept main streets open for traffic.

All available plows in the Sudbury district battled four-foot drifts. Mainline trains reached Sudbury up to 3 1-2 hours late. Bus companies cancelled long runs but lines in the city and suburbs operated despite difficulties. Strong winds whipped the Nickel belt.

Between four and eight inches of snow fell at Sault Ste. Marie and today the city streets department had its snowclearing equipment out in full force.

A pre-dawn hail storm hit Kingston and snowplow and sanding crews braved a cold north wind. Heavy snow fell during the night and at 8 a.m. the unofficial temperature was four degrees above zero.

Weathermen said at 10 a.m. that the storm, which centred just west of Buffalo and south of Toronto, was "pretty well over" as far as Ontario was concerned although rain, sleet and snow continued to sweep southern sections of the province.

Civic officials at St. Catharines said the sleet storm there was the worst in 25 years. Tree limbs sagged under burdens of ice and showered down on streets all through the city. One broken limb almost hit a truck operated by Amsey Bauman, 28. Bauman stopped in time but the limb brought down a 2,200-volt hydro wire leading to a plant and the live wire touched Bauman twice before he could get out of its way.

Other falling limbs snapped power lines leading to 40 or 50 homes. Hydro repairmen worked to end minor interruptions of power throughout the night.

Ice-coated trolley wires and the street railways company replaced street cars with buses until conditions improved. The storm halted some street cars at various points on the St. Catharines-Welland-Niagara Falls run and cars were used to pick up marooned passengers.

Port Dalhousie was without electric power after 3 a.m. Radio station CKTB in St. Catharines was off the air after 8:30 a.m. due to power failure.

The storm blocked roads and most streets in the Cornwall area. The Canadian National Railways eastbound passenger train was stuck in a snowbank outside the city for nearly an hour and reached the city 3½ hours late. Other eastbound trains were three hours late.

Walter Reddick, 55, collapsed and died as he walked through the storm from the village of Mille Roche to his job at the Provincial Paper Mill in Cornwall.

A bus carrying the Galt Red Wings junior "A" hockey team of the Ontario Hockey Association from Stratford to Galt slipped off the road at Shakespeare last night. None of the players was injured and the team spent the night at Shakespeare. A bus without passengers left the road at St. Marys.

The storm forced postponement of harness races scheduled for today at Toronto's Dufferin Park. Officials said road conditions blocked arrival of horses from outlying districts. Today's card will be raced Jan. 4.

Niagara Falls reported power off from 8.30 to 9.20 a.m. throughout the northern section of the city. Ice-coated tree limbs tore down telephone and power wires.

INSURRECTION IN INDO-CHINA NOW SPREADING SOUTH

France Realizes She Must Use Guns as Well as Diplomacy to Hold Empire

Paris, Dec. 28 (AP)—Insurrection in Indo-Crina, now reported as having spread to the south, has forced France to realize she must use guns and planes in addition to diplomacy to keep her rich, 400-year-old Colonial Empire from falling apart.

Nine days ago fighting broke out between Viet-Namese and French in Hanoi, capital of Indo-China and of the young Asiatic Viet-Nam Republic.

Engagements were reported swiftly in parts of the northern protectorate states of Tonkin and Annan. Yesterday news dispatches told of trouble also in the southern Indo-Chinese colony of Cochin-China.

Agence France-Presse reported 24 Annamite, Indian and Chinese civilians killed in Christmas night gunfire attacks on four automobiles near Saigon, Cochin-China's capital. French army officers were said to have attributed the attacks to efforts of Viet-Nam adherents to disrupt communications throughout the colony, perhaps in preparaton for an offensive.

To Investigate

Viet-Nam won French recognition last March as a free state holding sway in Tonkin and Annam and certain authority over internal affairs. Nationalists in the republic have been seeking to extend its rule over Cochin-China and gain full independence. They have had some support from French Communists.

Blum has sent a diplomat to investigate — Colonial Minister Marius Moutet. Saigon reports said some Viet-Namese had petitioned Moutet for a referendum to decide whether Cochin-China should join the republic or remain separate.

The President-Premier also sent a military commander—Gen. Philippe Leclerc—and Foreign Legionnaires and Parachutists as troop reinforcements.

REDS TO ADMIT INSPECTION TEAMS INTO RUSS AREA

Will Check on Progress of Liquidation of German Armaments

Berlin, Dec. 28 (AP).—The Russians gave notice today they would be prepared at last to admit four-power inspection teams into Soviet-occupied Germany Jan. 6, to check on progress of liquidation of the German armaments potential, thus indicating that their zonal troop demobilization is nearing completion.

Allied inspection teams were scheduled to enter all four zones Nov. 25, but the Russians asked postponement, saying that transport in their zone would be strained by re-deployment. There have been subsequent reports of large-scale reductions in the number of Soviet troops in Germany but no official figures have been released.

Newspapermen Barred.

Newspapermen, however, remained barred from the Soviet zone, and there was no indication when they would be readmitted. Marshall Vassily Sokolovsky, Russian commander in Germany, informed Gen. Joseph T. McNarney last month that it would be "too dangerous" to admit newspapermen during the period of redeployment operations. They have been barred since September.

"The Russians have now assured us that they will be ready to admit us Jan. 6, so four teams will set out on that day, one going into each zone," said Orrin R. McJunkins, chief of the American military government's reparations and demolitions section. Each team will include four technicians, one from each of the occupying powers, and will visit from six to nine plants on tours expected to last two weeks.

Inspection was decided upon after a series of charges and counter charges that German war production was continuing in some plants contrary to four-power prohibitions.

PRUSSIA ALREADY HAS CEASED TO EXIST AS STATE

Partitioned Among 3 Foreign Powers, Four Occupation Zones And Nine States

By DANIEL De LUCE

Berlin, Dec. 28 — (AP) — An unusual atmosphere of harmony prevailed today as experts of the Big Four powers undertook to draft a report to the impending Foreign Minister's Conference in Moscow on a once-knotty problem of liquidating Prussia.

Prussia, blood-and-iron heart of the former Reich, already has ceased to exist as a state.

"What has happened to this colossal state is a topic none of the Allies is perturbed about," said Henry Parkman, civil affairs chief in the American military government. "All we have to do is tell the foreign ministers next March 10 about an accomplished fact."

A survey shows that Prussia, which once covered more than half of Germany and had a population of 41,000,000, now is participated among three foreign powers, four occupation zones and nine post-war German states.

Prussia's borders once extended from Lithuania to France and from Denmark to Czechoslovakia. Now there is not even a splinter state called Prussia.

Meanwhile, it was disclosed yesterday that the Russians had given notice that they would be ready to admit four-power inspection teams into Soviet-occupied Germany on Jan. 6 to check on the progress of liquidating of the German armaments potential.

This is an indication that the Soviet's zonal troop demobilization is nearing completion. Allied inspection teams were scheduled to enter all four zones on Nov. 25, but the Russians asked postponement, saying that transport in their zone would be strained by redeployment.

$1,000 Reward For Information Of Missing Girl

St. Catharines, Dec. 28—(CP)—Police Chief William Shennan today announced posting of a $1,000 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the person or persons responsible for the disappearance of nine-year-old Marion Rusnak.

The girl has been missing from her home here since Monday.

Circulars carrying the child's picture and a description of the clothing she wore when last seen were prepared today for province-wide distribution at the weekend.

Police said the civilian search of the St. Catharines area was virtually at an end. Some citizens formed small groups yesterday but brought back nothing but fragments of wrapping paper. The police had already found the wrapping paper from the Christmas parcel the girl carried when she disappeared.

One widely-held theory is that the child was spirited away by a tall dark man with whom a neighbor saw her talking Monday.

Strike Figures in United States Break All Records in Past Year

Washington, Dec. 28 (AP) — Time olst by strikes in the United States in the first 11 months of 1946 toppled all records including the strife-torn postwar year of 1919, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported last night.

A total of 107,475,000 man-days was lost by work stoppages between January and November — 3½ times the strike-idleness in the same period of 1945 and nearly 14 times that of the first 11 months of the war year, 1944.

The bureau also reported that weekly earnings in manufacturing industries in November averaged -45.65—about $5 more a week than in November, 1945, although the work-week was about one hour shorter than a year ago.

Although the average production worker in manufacturing had an increase of 11½ per cent in weekly earnings, there was a big spread around that average.

For example: Four industries, employing 1 per cent of all factory workers, reported decreases in weekly earnings between October, 1945, and October, 1946, while 51 industries, with 21 per cent of the employment, had increases in weekly earnings of less than 10 per cent. On the other extreme, 20 per cent increases were reported by 13 industries with 11 per cent of the workers.

Heaviest Snowfall Of Year Envelops Belleville District

22 Inches at Bancroft, Bus Service Completely Tied Up

The heaviest, in fact the first snowfall of any dimensions, said to have swirled up from the middle west of the United States, enveloped the city and district in a treacherous white slithery blanket yesterday afternoon and last night.

Changing from freezing rain to a feathery snow, the mantle turned sidewalks and highways into heavily drifted right-of-ways which effectively blocked many driveways in the city and slowed down highway traffic to a near minimum.

Householders awakened this morning to find sidewalks and entrances heavily blocked with nine to twelve inches of snow. City snow plows however were out bright and early and had the main city thoroughfares in fairly good shape. Early morning workers were forced to take to the roads as sidewalks were covered with anywhere from six inches to a foot of the slippery white mass.

Brisk Wind Blewing.

A brisk early morning wind sent waves of drifting snow across streets, and many a householder found his shovelling efforts went for little after working for an hour or so.

Highways to the east were fairly good, according to reports, with department snowplows maintaining a steady patrol all night. The roads were bare in spots but heavy drifts were apparent in several places. Traffic was slowed down but there were no hold-ups.

Drifting snow filled the Picton-Belleville highway but county and department trucks maintaining an all-night vigil kept the right of way open. Heavy drifts were apparent in the Mountain View district. The Picton-Trenton highway was almost plugged in spots north of Wellington but late reports this morning stated that the right of way was open although travel was heavy.

Bancroft — Winter struck with a sudden vengeance in this northern village today and yesterday blanketing the district with from 18 to 22 inches of snow. This morning it was still snowing heavily with no signs of a let-up.

Traffic was practically totally disrupted. At a late hour this morning department snowplows, working in shifts all night, had failed to open the roads. A strong wind drove light powdery snow into heavy drifts filling in highways in the wake of the plows.

Bus service to Belleville and Peterborough was completely at a standstill while roads in all directions from this village were completely filled. Several small communities in this section of Hastings County are completely isolated.

(By The Canadian Press)

Winter's full force, more widespread and more virulent than anything experienced this season, held Canada in an icy clutch today.

Across the prairie west point after point came in with early morning reports of sub-zero temperatures and some snow while the worst storm of winter-snow, mingled with sleet, rain and sometimes hail driven before a stiff wind, gripped old Ontario.

Driving snow and dropping temperatures extended eastward from Ontario into Quebec and the Maritime provinces where some New Brunswick communities reported 40 below zero temperature readings.

Drifting snow in some places and a coating of ice in others hashed up transportation schedules. Trains, buses, street cars ran far behind timetables in many places.

On the eastern slopes of the Rockies a Christmas Chinook came to an end and the mercury plummet'ed. It dropped 27 degrees in an hour Thursday and cold held Alberta today with a midnight reading of 17 degrees below zero in Calgary. Most roads were open but dangerous and slippery for driving.

Heavy on Prairies

The prairies: Many roads badly drifted as the western end of the storm swept into the Great Lakes area. Sub-zero temperatures appeared general throughout Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

Alberta and Saskatchewan had only come out of a driving snow storm and 50-miles-an-hour wind buffetting by a few hours though ice-cold Manitoba found much of force gone from the post-Christmas storm as it whirled eastward.

Ontario: After a night of snow and stiff winds which continued today and a dash in some spots of rain and sleet the weather bureau offered a variety of weekend fare. Rain, snow and colder weather alike were predicted.

The weatherman foresaw warmer weather with a "risk of scattered thunderstorms" for Southern Ontario before Saturday night's darkness.

$12,000 DIAMOND FOUND

Miami Beach, Fla., Dec. 28—(AP)—An 11 karat diamond valued at $12,000 was recovered by a shap-eyed detective, after its owner had reported the gem lost on a Florida East Coact train from New York to Miami. While getting details of the loss, a detective noticed something glittering in the corner and found it to be the diamond.

General Strike Against Food Shortages Seen

Rome, Dec. 28. (AP)—The big southeastern port town of Bari, with a population of 200,000, this morning went into the second day of a general strike against food shortages that yesterday brought bloody battling between ugly-tempered crowds and police.

One university student was dead and 25 other people wounded, including six police, at the end uf the first day of the strike, which arose out of the refusal or inability of local authorities to grant popular demands for relief from hunger and soaring prices, according to dispatches to the Rome Press.

The Interior Minister said provincial police were "constrained to use their firearms defensively" against armed demonstrators.

Immediate repercussions were felt in Italy's precariously balanced political structure. The parties of the Left lined up behind the striking workers, while Centrist or Rightist newspapers, minimizing the role of Carabinieri who fired on the crowd with machine-guns, grumbled about mob rule.

The Bari Socialist Party Convention, in session as a preliminary to a Socialist National Congress in Rome next month, suspended its work in protest.

MERCHANTS REPORT FEW EXCHANGES

That post-holiday bugbear of merchandise "exchanges" is not looming up as potent as was expected, according to a survey.

Apparently the greater majority of people were satisfied with what their Christmas stocking brought them for todate the requests for exchange of merchandise has not been heavy.

The male of the species, unless it happened to be a question of size, was more or less satisfied with his holiday lot, but the lady of the house and other feminine members have been trickling into stores for exchanges.

In drug stores lotions and shaving aparatus formed one of the big holdovers from the Christmas trade.

STORM LIMITS MARKET ATTENDANCE

With country roads blocked with from 12 to 15 inches of loose sugary snow, district farmers for the most part remained in their homes Saturday instead of attending the local produce market.

The outside market was completely isolated, while only four or five vendors put in an appearance on the inside market. City housewives also apparently considered that discretion was the better part of valor and likewise failed to attend the market.

Rawdon Twp. Cuts Bounty On Wolves

The Township of Rawdon will no longer pay the $50 bounty on wolves killed within the confines of the municipality, it was decided by councillors at their December meeting. In the future the township will pay a $25 bounty on wolves.

In a move calling for speedy action on the part of the Department of Public Works for development of the Moira River watershed, council passed a resolution to petition the Provincial Public Works minister to call a meeting of the municipalities for the purpose of setting up an authority to govern the watershed.

The resolution will be sent to the clerk of the County of Hastings to be forwarded by him to the Minister of Public Works.

The reeve and deputy reeve were named a committee to interview the government road engineer regarding the arrival of the motor grader and to make the necessary payment. The traffic census at the intersection in Springbrook will be taken with Reeve Morrison authorized to appoint a man to make the census. A number of bills were ordered paid.

Highway Plow Stuck in Snow On Front Street

Even highway snowplows were being stuck as the result of Friday's heavy snow and sleet storm—and right on Belleville's Front street at that.

It all happened when the driver of a highway snowplow after bucking the snow on district highways for the better part of the night, decided on a cup of coffee as he was passing through the city. He brought his heavy equipment to a halt at the curbside and after partaking of his morning breakfast emerged to find the wheels of his truck almost completely buried.

While the driver of the snowplow truck had been taking breakfast, sidewalk snow shovellers had been busy and unthinkingly had shovelled the snow beneath the truck.

Co-operative And Amiable Personality Of Great Importance

Sault Ste. Marie, Dec. 28 (CP)—Development of charm and personality and an ability to meet others is equally as important as an academic education, Rt. Rev. W. L. Wright, Bishop of Algoma Diocese, said at Collegiate Institute commencement exercises last night.

"I would much sooner see a secondary school pupil develop a cooperative, amiable personality than gain the full treasure of education without these things," Bishop Wright said.

ALL-TIME RECORD

Toronto, Dec. 28—(CP)—Telephone calls to points as near as suburban Oakville and as far as Vancouver — 37,232 in all—were sent from the city Christmas Day. This is an all-time record, topping the previous high on VE-Day by 2,132.

Fight on Roof-Top Ends Pursuit Of Shooting Suspect

By STUART UNDERHILL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Dec. 28 — (CP Cable)—A roof-top gun fight which ended when police cornered a man in a house Friday provided the dramatic sequel to the Boxing Day murder of a Negro airman outside a West End restaurant.

A police constable was severely wounded in the eye during the pursuit of a man wanted for questioning in connection with the death of Aloysius Abbott, 22-year-old Jamaican shot during an argument over service in a cafe.

Abbott was due for discharge soon after five years in the R.A.F. A bullet smashed through a letter from his sweetheart in Jamaica saying she had found a place for them to live when he returned home.

Police combed London for the killer and this morning in a busy shopping district off Gray's Inn Road two plainclothesmen stopped a man for questioning. He fled, scattering crowds with shots from a revolver. Then he dodged into a dairy luncheonette and upstairs to the roof.

Police cars sped reinforcements to the scene. As they crept over the roofs one was dropped with a bullet in the eye but the others pressed on.

Their prey finally dived through the skylight of a house in Cartwright Gardens, but the police seized him before he could reach the street. He was carried, still struggling, to the black maria.

The house he had taken refuge in was empty at the time but the owner, upon his return, said that after breaking through the skylight the man apparently "rushed through the house breaking open doors as he went with the police behind him. The whole place was in disorder and cages of the birds which I keep as my hobby were upset."

The cafe shooting yesterday followed complaints of a white customer in Esther's Cafe that a group of Negro airmen was being served before him. After an argument, the white customer struck the waitress and the Jamaicans came to her aid.

The scuffle continued out into the street where three shots were suddenly fired. Abbott was killed by the fusillade.

Many Parked Cars Moved By Police

Motorists who were so thoughtless as to leave their autos parked on the street all night on Friday in many cases awoke Saturday morning to receive a double shock — either their cars were almost completely blocked in by the heavy overnight snow fall, or their cars had already been towed away to permit the city street snowplows to operate.

"Despite the fact that for the past several weeks we have constantly warned motorists not to leave their cars parked on the streets all night, last night's snowstorm caught many car owners napping," stated Police Chief Walter Probert on Saturday morning. "City snowplows cannot work efficiently if the streets are cluttered with parked autos."

The Chief went on to warn that wherever autos left on the street overnight are hampering the operation of the snowplow, they will be towed away with charges assessed to the owner. In addition owners may face charges of violating city parking regulations.

Family Believe Returned Man Long Absent Son

Hamilton, Dec. 28 (CP)—An excited Hamilton family, still rejoicing in a Christmas re-union with a man they believe to be the son from whom they had not heard for 10 years, looked forward today to a visit Sunday from a group of Hong Kong veterans in the hope that it may get some light on what their son did during his long years of wandering.

Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Tremblett and their family are certain that the man to whom they opened their home Christmas Eve is Albert Joseph Tremblett who left home in 1936 as an untravelled boy of 16. The uncertainty as to his identity is on the part of Albert Joseph himself who believes he lost his memory as a result of ill-treatment in a Japanese prison camp after being taken prisoner at Hong Kong in 1941.

Could Not Remember Name

When he came to Hamilton, in a continent-wide search for his family, he could not remember his name. The only names that his mind could recall were Farris and Barlow and a Travellers Aid Society worker found those were married names of two of Tremblett sisters. The reunion followed swiftly after that.

A coincidence in connection with these names was disclosed today when it was learned that two Canadian veterans of Hong Kong named Paul Ferris and Ted Barlow got in touch with the Tremblett family yesterday when the story of the reunion became known. They live in Toronto where they are members of the Hong Kong club of some 40 members which plans a full-scale expedition to Hamilton Sunday in the hope that some of the group may recognize the man. Ferris said he had some recollection of the name Tremblett.

Time of Loss of Memory

Relatives, who are letting Albert try to piece the story of his wanderings together without pressing him, said today they are unclear as to just when he suffered his loss of memory. They said it may have happened when he left home 10 years ago, or at almost any time since.

He said that he served in two wars—the Spanish civil war with the Loyalist forces and in the Second Great War—wandering—many thousands of miles in several parts of the globe.

Surveys Determine Reading Habits of Young and Old

By FRED KERNER
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New York, Dec. 28 —(CP)—About those books you bought as gifts for your children and the neighbors' youngsters this Christmas! Did you notice that they were stacked on the store counters in piles by ages — 6 to 8, 12 to 14, and so on?

Just like the kiddies' underwear in other departments upstairs.

Did you have time in the shopping rush to wonder how they decide a book is "readable" for a six-year-old or a nine-year-old? Well, mostly it's a matter of vocabulary, but the subject matter gets a good deal of attention too.

Library associations and adult education associations have given word tests in thousands of schools and have established quite accurately that words the average child of any given age knows. For instance, if a book has too many words that an eight-year-old doesn't know, it is considered "too old" for that age group. Even though you can recall reading it when you were seven, your eight-year-old Johnny or Mary will have to wait a few years before they read it.

It wasn't just idle curiosity that started these surveys and now they have reached right into the reading habits of adults as well. The American Library Association, for instance, has sent researchers throughout Canada and the United States for the last 20 years to look into the reading habits and interests of adults and children.

50 P. C. Read With Difficulty.

The surprising thing is that the survey yearly shows some 50 per cent of the population in both countries cannot read with ease and understanding much of what is published in the English language. And that is on a continent that sees the greatest number of books, periodicals and newspapers published anywhere in the world.

All researchers are not in agreement, however. Some say the length of sentences is important while others claim there is no difference to the reader's understanding between long and short sentence structure.

Readers of pulp paper magazines — the western, love, sports and confession type yarns — will be happy to know that this literature is considered the most readable among the magazines.

But confusing to the "simple sentences" issue is the result of a recent survey of some 30 books which showed the Bible far down the list with only 18 per cent of its sentences considered simple. Edna Ferber's novel, Cimarron, ranked highest with a 53.5 percentage.

One of the hardy favorites for two centuries — especially with the children — Robinson Crusoe, ranked lowest with a four-per cent rating.

But don't let that discourage you. The books you bought the youngsters for the holiday or their birthday will be read. Children love reading, no matter what.

They read books, but their favorite reading matter is the comic strips, comic books and —move over, Dad—the sports page.

'White Australian' Policy Subject of Domestic Talk

By WILLIAM STEWART
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Sydney, Australia, Dec. 28 (CP)—The "White Australian" policy, criticized by Indian and Chinese delegates before the United Nations Trusteeship Committee, is an Australian tradition that has been the subject of domestic talk during the past few months largely as a result of the war.

The subject was raised in connection with immigration plans intended to bring 70,000 persons a year into Australia which has a population now of about 8,000,000 and is believed able to carry up to 25,000,000 or more.

During the war Australian servicemen fought a number of campaigns as Allies of Pacific native peoples and Asiatics who are near neighbors against the Japanese. Now that the war is over many Australians feel that steps should be taken to break down any atmosphere of racial discrimination Australia's immigration regulations may arouse.

There still remain, however, strong defenders of "White Australia" who contend the country's "98 per cent British" population has meant freedom from race and color problems

The "White Australia" policy has been given effect by the Immigration Restriction Act, passed in 1901 as one of the early measures of the first federal parliament. Its enactment was due to disurbances involving Chinese during the gold rush days and protests against low pay and living standards accepted by South Sea Islands on Queensland sugar plantations which now are worked by white labor exclusively.

The Immigration Restriction Act draws no color line but has achieved its object by permitting immigration officials to pick and choose people seeking entry to Australia through a dictation test. The immigration officers have discretion as to which of "any European language" will be chosen for the dictation test in a particular case. Prospective immigrants regarded as undesirable are tested with a language that they don't know.

Great 'Polders' Entirely Reclaimed, Many Damaged Homes Are Restored, Holland's Progress in Recovery

By WILLIAM BOSS
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

The Hague, Dec. 28. (CP)—Government statistics tell the story of Holland's struggle back to peacetime conditions. Industrial production which suffered an over-all wartime decrease of 40 per cent now is back to between 60 and 70 per cent of 1938 figures.

The great "Polders"—low lying land reclaimed from the sea—at Wieringermeer and Walcheren, flooded when the Germans blew the dykes, have been entirely reclaimed; the salt-water damage counteracted. These lands have yielded their first harvest.

Of the country's 350,000 slightly damaged houses, 270,000 have been permanently or temporarily repaired. A program to build 5,200 emergency farmhouses and 6,000 temporary stables has produced 4,500 houses and 5,100 stables with every likelihood of the program being completed before the end of the year.

Temporary housing for homeless urban dwellers saw 6,600 homes built, while a program to erect 10,000 permanent homes this year is well under way.

Of the 181 most important railway bridges destroyed during the war, 150 have been replaced. All canals and rivers are again navigable, and the inland Port of Amsterdam has long been accessible to sea-going ships.

Production in certain commodities has exceeded the 1933 figures, especially where these are produced for export.

Jeep-Operated Snowplow Assists In Clearing Walks

Versatility in commercial operation of the war-proven "jeep" was demonstrated to the local public works department today as a jeep-operated snowplow was pressed into service to assist in clearing city sidewalks of the overnight snowfall.

By early morning three sidewalk snowplows were in operation, with one street plow engaged in clearing city thoroughfares.

Officials of the public works department, including Chairman Alderman Charles Hyde expressed their satisfaction with the work being done by the jeep snowplow with City Engineer Charles Mott stating it was doing a splendid job.

Bevin to Visit Prime Minister At Chequers

London, Dec. 28 — (Reuters) — Foreign Secretary Bevin left London today for a visit to Chequers, country home of Prime Minister Attlee in Buckinghamshire, where they are expected to discuss the latest diplomatic developments.

One item on the agenda will probably be the Polish reply last weekend to Britain's note of Nov. 22, which protested against the conduct of the Polish election campaign. The Polish reply yielded no ground and restated many Polish grievances against the British government.

A decision also must be reached by the Foreign Office as to whether the British government is to carry a complaint to the U.N. Security Council — if it is true that Albania has rejected British terms — for the settlement of the Corfu dispute over two British destroyers which were heavily damaged by mines last October with considerable loss of life.

There are indications of Russian friction with countries of the Middle East which also will probably come up for discussion.

For example, the government of Turkey has been criticized by the Soviet paper Pravda for exercising "undemocratic control" in pressure on members of the opposition and for its increased interest in relations with its Arab neighbors. The forthcoming Iranian elections are being watched with acute interest from Moscow.

However, the major development of the week was possibly the decision of the Basel Zionist Congress to stay away from the Palestine Conference next month. Implications of this move will undoubtedly be discussed by the Prime Minister and Bevin, but the chance that concessions on such matters as Jewish immigration into Palestine can be obtained appears to be remote.

Four Seriously Hurt in Kingston Bus-Car Crash

Kingston, Dec. 28 —(CP)—Hotel Dieu Hospital officials said today four people admitted there late yesterday following a traffic mishap in mid-town Kingston spent a good night. Most seriously injured is David George, nine, suffering a broken arm, broken leg, deep lacerations of the head and severe shock.

His sister Patricia, 12 also suffered deep head lacerations and severe shock. Mrs. Michael Featherstone of Joyceville is being treated for fractured ribs, a fractured arm and severe shock and Mrs. Margaret McDonald also of Joyceville has a fractured clavicle. John McDonald and a six-weeks-old baby, other occupants of the car escaped injury. The baby is the son of Mr. and Mrs. McDonald.

The accident occurred when a Kingston City Coach Company bus and the car carrying the victims collided at a midtown intersection.

The McDonald car swung across the street after being struck by the bus, pinning young David against a fence and knocking his sister out of its path.

Soldier Charged With Murder

London, Dec. 28 —(Reuters)—Sequel to a dramatic rooftop gun battle in central London Friday took place in a magistrate's court today when Fredericw Rowland Westbrook, described as a 27-year-old soldier, was charged with murder on Christmas Day of Aloysius Abbott, 21-year-old Jamaican airman.

A detective inspector described how he went to the Bloomsbury section of London — scene of yesterday's rooftop chase, during which one policeman was shot in the eye — and saw Westbrook arrested.

At the back of a chair in the room where the fugitive was arrested, the inspector said he found a 9-millimetre Browning automatic pistol. When he told Westbrook he was inquiring into Abbott's death, Westbrook replied: "I was there but did not know I had killed anybody when I shot."

Abbott was shot dead outside a London cafe after a brawl on the premises.

Westbrook was remanded in custody until Jan. 11.

Model of Early Steam Engine Over 100 Yrs. Old

Montreal, Dec. 28—War Assets Corporation has been handed some odd surpluses to dispose of —such as live frogs, Boer War saddlery, sled dogs and pigs on the hoof—but one of the most unique declarations to date has been a working model of a steam engine, believed to be more than 100 years old which has been turned over by the federal Department of Public Works. And to add to its interest, it has been for an untold number of years in an unused section of the old stables at Rideau Hall, Ottawa residence of Canada's Governor-General. It is now in Montreal and has been placed on display in the entrance hall of War Assets Head Office, St. Catherine Street, West.

Old time employees at Government House have no knowledge of the origin of the model, beyond suggesting that it was brought to Rideau Hall by an earlier Governor-General.

War Assets Corporation engineering experts describe the design as unique, belonging probably to the early 1800 period of steam power engineering, and a good example of the transition period from the boiling water kettle to the present day high speed engine. The unit consists of boiler and engine with all the necessary piping connections for water and steam.

The boiler is of copper construction of the "Beehive" type while the relief or safety valves are of the lever and ball weight type.

The engine is possibly more unique than the boiler, as the steam cylinder is oscillating with overhead crankshaft and link motion valve gear with plunger type pump for supplying water to the boiler. The firebox is designed to use coal fuel.

The entire model is mounted on a walnut stand 36 by 20 inches and to the top of the stack measures about 48 inches in height. While the exhibit is of interest from an engineering point of view, it is of special interest as illustrating the widely diversified products that War Assets Corporation is called upon to handle in their daily routine.

FREIGHTER SINKING

Oslo, Dec. 28 —(AP)—The 7,176-ton United States freighter, Am-mer-mar, two big holes torn in her hull by a submerged rock, was reported sinking slowly today off the southern tip of Norway after the rescue of the crew of 38.

The radio station at Farsund in southern Norway said the vessel's radio operator had reported her going down off Ryvingen lighthouse near Mandal, some 30 miles east of Farsund. The crew, with the operator and Captain the last to leave early today, was taken aboard the Norwegian rescue vessel Anton Poulsson without mishap.

Things Human

AFTER CHRISTMAS

The tree that we trimmed with such infinite care .. Is bare and forlorn in the cold Winter air .. The tinsel—and lights with their radiant cheer .. No longer remind us that Christmas was here. .. We've been to the stores with an armful of things .. That came with greeting that Santa Claus brings .. We've swapped for right sizes in slippers and frocks .. For sweaters and rompers, pyjamas and socks. We've called upon neighbors they've called upon us .. There isn't a topic that's left to discuss .. They've shown us their presents and viewed our display .. 'Till all are agreed we should call it a day. ..It's fine for a while to be merry and bright .. When boxes and toys makes the parlor a sight .. And now that it's over I'll seek out a nook .. Where I can relax .. With my pipe and a book.

BURNED FINGERS

By Kathleen Norris

CHAPTER 33

"In an hour," Jennifer said, glancing at the clock. Just one hour had come between her and happiness. She could have gone on to a new world then. That world was lost now!

"Look," he said, "am I going to see you sometime?"

Her eyes were raised steadily to his; he saw her breast move.

"You know I don't want to see you, Sid. Not ever."

She remembered the hurt, surprised look, the head dropped a little sidewise, the expression that asked her only to be reasonable.

"Now, listen," he said, "can't you forget what I've entirely forgotten? We were young; I was a consummate fool. I'm still a fool, always will be, or I wouldn't have let you down as I did. My brother was sick and my mother had other plans for me that I didn't know. I say I was just a fool. That's past, Jennifer, no use dragging it up. I don't want to and you don't want to. You're beautiful—you always were on the eyes—but now you're a knockout and you're going to marry you're soldier and be, I hope the happiest person in the world! You're luckier than I am, if that's any consolation to you. I've never met anyone I liked as well as you—that's God's truth."

The quick, urgent voice, the persuasive manner! How rational they made everything seem! She stood stunned and silent, not because of anything he was saying, but because of the smoldering storm that was rising in her heart.

"For heaven's sake," he said, "why act like our Victorian greatgrandmothers! Why can't you and I be friends? Why can't we see each other now and then? You aren't coming back here, is that it? But you will let me know where you are, won't you? You call me up. I'm still with my uncle. It seems I did something to my knee playing polo years and years ago and they won't take me in the Navy—worse luck! But my uncle says he can get me into the Air Corps. Good-bye, Jennifer, and keep your chin up!"

She said nothing. She could not have spoken to save her life. When she went back into the bustling confusion of Saturday noonday in the frock shop, the shifting lights and colors and perfumes, the high-raised happy voices, the continual movement and change, it was like going into a deepening tunnel, blacker and blacker and blacker. Jennifer found a chair and sat down on it sidewise, her hand hanging over the back, her eyes on space.

Slow waves of misery wept over her. She could not think; she only knew that she was wretched beyond the depth of any wretchedness she had ever know. About her was chaos; her thoughts ran into it, floundered in it. She was not happy, beloved busy, self-confident woman she had felt herself to be; she was kept busy from that woman by a wall of stone.

Telephone Sid again—deliberately get in touch with him again? The thought nauseated her. Never, never, never, as long as she lived! She would as soon turn back and run into a burning house as soon invite into her company a man she knew was determined to murder her.

No it was no thought of Sid that absorbed her now—or, rather Sid was not the centre of that slow whirlpool of agony composed of a surging confusion of thoughts that was suffocating her. It was not even of Jim that she was thinking. It was only of herself. It was only of the veneer of fineness and goodness that she had superimposed upon her old life; it was of the pitiful futility of the attempt to bury the past and leave it safe in its grave. There was no grave for it; it lived and walked here beside her; the decision and choice of the girl of eighteen was still to rule the life of the woman of twenty-five.

Vogelsang's was closed for the afternoon, and Jennifer was out in the street. Low clouds were scudding over the sky, and a strong low wind blew through the streets; the air was soft; rain was coming. Mary had said that morning that she hoped it would not rain on Jennifer's wedding day.

Her wedding day! Tomorrow couldn't be that. She knew that now. She could confess to Jim, of course, be generously, almost gruffly and impatiently forgiven. That might do for him; it would not do for her. What the solution what the future must be she did not know, but it did not lie here. It did not lie in telling Jim Lippincott everything tonight, on the eve of their wedding, and going on serenly to the creamy satin gown and the lace veil tomorrow.

Jennifer felt physically racked. It was unbelievable that matters should have fallen out this way; grotesque shadow from the past should be able to stretch its hideous malformation all across the sky. But it was there.

What her particular secret might have meant to other women concerned her not at all. There might be girls—undoubtedly there were girls, factory girls, college girls—who took an early indiscretion casually, suffering the chagrin or disappointment involved as just so much on the side of loss. With some it would have after-affects of regret or even serious consequences upon discovery; the piper might turn up for his pay at an inconvenient moment. With others it would have no significance at all.

With her it meant cheating Jim. Jim was not like other men. He had a reverence for marriage a sort of breathless awe at the thought that all that was fragrant and sweet and young and loving in a girl like Jennifer could surrender itself to him. He would accept his wife as a sacred trust; her arms would be heaven to him.

"My darling don't be afraid of me," he had said to her only yesterday when they were seriously talking of the beginnings of their life together. "Marriage to me is a holy of holies. I don't know how anyone ever can make light of it—can forget what it means to a man to have a woman belong to him, to have her trust him with herself. I think I've been waiting all my life for the time when you and I would have our hour of paradise, enter into it, and know that we belong to the husbands and wives who love each other forever."

That night she was very quiet, but he told her when he delivered her to the Flood house at an early ten that he had never known her to be so sweet. Jennifer stood on the step above him at the doorway, her arms laid loosely on his shoulders and her hands linked behind his neck There had been rain earlier in the evening, and the streets were shining like mirrors, but the doorway was hooded, and if bright drops fell from the ivy that roofed it, at least he and she were safe in its shelter.

"It seems to me I've never known you as you've been tonight, darling."

"Maybe I'm a little tired and maybe a little excited."

"I don't know. But as we sat there at Mollie's table and I looked across at you I thought—people couldn't be so happy as we are," Jim said in a low tone, his arms locked about her.

"No," she said slowly, "people can't be as happy as this."

He was gone in a few minutes, his last words echoing in her ears:

"See you tomorrow!"

Jennifer watched him to the corner, then she went inside to the little parlor that seemed warm on this muggy wet night.

"You get to bed. You'll look like a wreck tomorrow," Mary said.

"I have—a few—letters to write," Jennifer answered hesitantly. She laid aside her coat, sat down at the table she used as a desk, spread out her paper and envelopes.

"Not tonight. It's ten and after. Ma's asleep."

"I'll not be long. Dont you wait up, Mary."

Mary was smearing her face with cold cream; her thin, graying hair was done up tightly in rags; she was clad in a warm flannel wrapper and flat quilted slippers.

"I'll steal your thunder tomorrow," she threatened. Jennifer managed a smile.

"You do look all in," said Mary, disturbed by the younger woman's pallor.

"I'll not be late."

Alone, Jennifer started her letters. She was going away, but she did not know where. She could go to hotel probably. But for how long and why? She could go to Sacramento and take a train somewhere from there. She could....

"Dearest Jim," she wrote, "because of something that happened long ago I can't marry you tomorrow...."

She tore it up.

"Dearest Jim, I can't marry you tomorrow. With all my love Jennifer." It was not wholly satisfactory. It was the best she could do. She wrote a similar line to Mary, adding "My heart is broken." Those two would be enough. Just a few lines, but Jennifer felt so weary after them that every bone in her body ached. She put her head down against the notes in utter weariness and despair. Life seemed to have stopped; the room was very still.

She had not much money—less than ten dollars. On Monday she could get more from the bank but this was late Saturday night. Jennifer racked her brains What was the smart thing to do?

In her bedroom she quietly packed a small bag; she put the two letters in the middle of the kitchen table, turned out all the lights, and crept out into the black night. A light rain was falling; the drops twisted and sparkled like diamonds about the street lamp.

For a moment she wavered before facing the inhospitable loneliness and blackness down the long street. It would be so good to go back, tear up her letters, slip into her comfortable bed. She could fool him and forget. It would hurt him to know; he need never know.

Yes, but she would know. And someday someone might suddenly appear in their lives—their happy, dignified, fruitful lives; somebody might appear in that spacious, busy, doctor's household, between the running of small feet and the laughter of friends, the sacred evening hours by the fire, the summer dawn shining through fruit-tree branches on a nursery wall, some shadow of hint might form itself and grow and spread. "That man who said he had seen you in some apartment house—what was that, what'd he mean, Jenny?" Or Sid himself might appear, older and just as arrogant, just as sure of himself. And she would have to be nice to him, to smooth the surface. "You know my husband, Sidney?"

"It can't be that important!" she said aloud. A woman sitting next to her in a Market Street car looked at her curiously. Black rain pattered against the windows and mingled with the distorted lights of the street.

"Where am I going?" Jennifer asked herself.

She had not enough money for any protracted outlay. She must creep to cover somehow for a day or two, then get organized Some other city, some other job; that was the way out. There was a green bus that crossed the big bridge to the Oakland Mole. From the Mole trains were incessantly coming and going: trains to Sacramento, Portland, Salt Lake City. Jennifer left the streetcar suddenly got into a bus was thundered, grated, hammered across the great bridge in the rain.

At the Mole she got out of the bus and stood under the long roof of the shed watching latecomers buying magazines, dripping arrivals furl their umbrellas, studying the big chalked blackboard where the trains were charted. Everyone in the bleak waiting-room looked first at the clock; a young woman sat still with two small children huddled in sleep beside her under the garish lights. Jennifer sat down. What was the next step? Near her a middle-aged woman and a girl were talking in low tones. Jennifer could sense from their expressions that the woman was placating and anxious; the girl, on the contrary, was brief and almost sullen in her manner.

"Stupid to miss that train," the woman said pleasantly. "But in wartime we have to be philosophical!"

"I wish you wouldn't wait, Mother. Forty minutes more, and you feel so horrible!" the girl answered. The mother was pretty and somewhat stout, the girl pretty in exactly the same way but almost painfully thin.

"Emily dear, I may not see you for months," the woman countered in a vague abstracted voice. "Well, I don't know that it is sensible for me to wait," she agreed suddenly. "I think I'll take my cold home and put it to bed."

"I wish you would," Emily said She walked with the woman to the door of the waiting room: Jennifer looking after them, saw the bright street lights slit the needles of rain against blackness.

A young dark man in the uniform of a naval lieutenant had come to stand almost where they had been sitting, and Jenifer saw Emily kiss her mother goodbye turn, come back quickly young officer's embrace.

"You got my message!" Emily breathed.

Jennifer could not hear the answer, but she could see their young adoring, tragic faces before they turned away and went to seat themselves in the most obscure corner of the big waiting room. Other travelers drifted in and out; a group of Marines went through, evidently in high spirits. The trains were called, groups went through the gates. Then the gates clanged closed again and the station was deserted once more.

Suddenly Jennifer was surprised to have Emily come quickly about a long line of empty seats and join her.

"Will you tell me your name?" Emily asked without preamble.

"Jennifer Richie," Jennifer answered after a second's hesitation.

"Miss Richie, I'm Emmeline Waskell," Emily said hurriedly. "Don't think I'm crazy. But you—you saw how I missed that last train just then?"

Jennifer showed her white even teeth in a slow smile that brightened for a moment her weary, hopeless young face.

"I didn't see it: I just arrived," she explained.

"I deliberately lost it," said Emily. "My mother and I came up on the day train from Glendale. We went to my Aunnt's for supper and to brush up and I deliberately lost the train."

"So that you could meet—your lieutenant?" Jennifer smiled.

"Yes. We're engaged; Mother doesn't know," she said rapidly. "You see—I'll tell you: we're married!"

"Oh, lucky you!" Jennifer said involuntarily. Emily moved nearer her on the bench in a gesture of gratitude and confidence.

"Yes, we were married at six o'clock. I told mother I had to go out for some bobby pins and face powder, and met Ken and we were married. We went to the city hall—his father's got an official position there—and we got a special licence. Mother's been counting on our not getting up here in time to get a licence."

"But you're going away?" Jennifer said stricken with sympathy.

"But I'm not. Now listen," said Emily urgently. "You're going to Davenbury on the eleven-thirty. They're meeting me there at half past twelve. Will you tell them that I couldn't come, but that I'll be there in ten days? Ken has ten days' leave—"

"Oh, he said you were!"

"Who said so?"

"The ticket man over there at the office. He said to me, 'You've missed the ten-forty like that young lady there. You'll have to wait for the eleven-thirty.' So I telephoned right away—"

Its Power And Healing

His Majesty King George in his Christmas message to the Empire pointed to the task of today which is "to mobilize the Christmas spirit and to apply its power and healing to our daily life." How this is possible is shown in his next words, "the reconstruction so urgently needed everywhere and especially in stricken Europe, is quite as much spiritual as material. It is necessary not merely to feed hungry people and to rebuild ruined cities, but also to restore the very soul of civilization."

His speech was a plea for understanding. He pointed out that people cannot all think alike. "Nor is it right that we should," he said. "Opinion striking against opinion ignites the spark that can rekindle the lamp of truth. Furthermore, he went on to point out that if people meet on the basis of common charity, which leads to ultimate truth, "our differences never will destroy our underlying unity and our disputes will not leave us either embittered or unkind."

His Majesty who inspired his people in the trying days of war and who has delivered messages which have cheered the hearts of his people throughout the world, in this season's address gave the peoples of his vast empire a philosophy of living and of international relations that will assure peaceful conditions among nations and world friendship.

This season has shown as it has ever done that men gather at this time in an understanding spirit of good will which solves differences. "Opinion striking against opinion ignites the spark that can rekindle the lamp of truth" and understanding.

His Majesty has spoken words of faith which teach the lesson of good will.

In A Century

How great changes have come in the course of a century was made clear recently at the celebration of the centenary of the first telegraph message from Toronto to Hamilton. Ten decades ago at the inauguration of the service, leading citizens wore imposing clothes, the ladies their voluminous flounced dresses, poke bonnets pulled close about their curls with colored ribbons and the men tight trousers, long coats and high stovepipe hats topping carefully oiled "sideburns," crowding a not-impressive office. The telegraph instrument was not the compact key and sounder which was to become so generally known. In fact it was no sounder that was used. It was a long cumbersome instrument with a metal spool of tape set between two wheels about a foot in diameter. The tape was fed from the spool into the perforating machine, where the dots and dashes of the morse code were punched out.

The old city hall in Toronto where the inaugural ceremony was held is all but forgotten memory but a plaque marks the site. The original 89-mile extent of the original system has expanded into 177,000 miles, and spread beneath the ocean to carry messages to other continents and the Canadian National Telegraphs system today has a wire mileage that would circle the globe's equator seven times and still leave a wire trailer of about 2,000 miles hanging in space. Instead of an average of 10 to 12 messages a day during the first complete year of operation, or a total of some 4,000 messages, the telegrams in 1945 numbered close to 13 million messages, exclusive of other services, as stock exchange ticker service, radio circuits for broadcasting, air lines operational facilities and telephone equipment.

Even the hands of the clock have changed their position during that century. Solar time has given place to Standard Time zones. To synchronize the exact minute of sending the first message in 1846 involved a lapsed time of 17 minutes and 35 seconds.

Canada in 1846 had but a mere 16 miles of railway, the Champlain and St. Lawrence line, designed as a portage line. Mails were carried by stage and ship and it took anything from two days to a week or more for an ordinary letter to travel between Toronto and Montreal.

The press welcomed the coming of the telegraph as a service of news. The first telegraph news despatch was reported sent from Hamilton to Toronto on Christmas Eve, of 1846, telling of the destruction of nine houses by fire. Telegraph rates were high in price during the pioneer period, a ten-word message from Toronto to Montreal cost three shillings and nine pence. At first there was but one wire in Toronto with one operator, who was manager, operator and clerk and he had a staff of one, a messenger boy.

In the year 1849, according to a story written by H. F. Easson, the first messenger, which appeared in the Canadian National Magazine in 1924, gas was competing with candles in the larger residences and office buildings. Even lamps were not in general use. Railways did not appear for seven years. Mr. Easson lived to see the day when both pioneer telegraphs and the pioneer railways became a part of the Canadian National System.

Brokers in grain used to gather about the open telegraph window to hear the grain quotations read aloud. Mr. Easson recalled the crowding and pushing that took place for positions of vantage. Frequently fistic encounters occurred and clothes would be badly ripped.

In that far off day editors of Toronto papers (there were no dailies then) would come to the office and crowd about as Mr. Easson read the news off the tape. Frequently there was some political news that would please the Hon. George Brown, editor of the Globe, who would give a "ha" of satisfaction. Sometimes hot debates took place between the editors and in the meantime however important the news, it had to wait until one side or the other was utterly refuted. Sometimes there were breaks in the wire and no news came. Applied science had not advanced enough a century ago to make the teletype printer a success though such developments were looked for from the first.

Since June 1851 when an operating officer of the Erie Railroad sent the first telegraph train order the railways and telegraphs have been closely allied.

To Carry Christmas Over

Christmas should remind us to use it. If the kindness that glows brighter than candles on that day permeated our homes through all the year what strength our family life would show! If the good will extended to fireside and friends reached out to other lands and peoples how greatly would peace advance, says C. S. Monitor.

We can carry Christmas over. For in Phillip Brooks' beautiful words,

So God imparts to human hearts,
The blessings of His heaven,
No ear may hear His coming,
But in this world of sin,
Where meekness will receive him, still
The dear Christ enters in.

And not just for one day or place!

Shaw Outwitted

In New York the Women's Action Committee for Lasting Peace wrote to George Bernard Shaw in London saying they were raising money by auctioning some autographed books, and would he please autograph some? notes the New York Herald Tribune.

Shaw replied that he would not. He thought the cause of the United Nations was "too big for your little Women's Action Committee." He scoffed at some length.

The women went ahead with the auction and sold one of the popular American autographed books for $70. They sold Shaw's grouchy letter for $170.

There are many pleasant stories, probably unhistorical, showing what practical problems stimulated mathematical investigations. The earliest and simplest relates to Thales, who, when in Egypt, was asked by the king to find out the height of a pyramid. He waited for the time of day which his shadow was as long as he was tall; he then measured the shadow of the pyramid, which was, of course, equal to its height, says Bertrand Russell in International Digest.

"HAPPY NEW YEAR!"

Happy New Year comes the cry
From the neighbors passing by;
And I wonder, as I hear it,
How is happiness acquired?
Is it fortune that bestows it?
Is the rich man one who knows it?
Are but just a few allowed it,
Though by all it is desired?

Happy New Year! Meaning this:
May the hurts of life you miss.
May you feel no touch of sorrow,
And go laughing on your way.
But the skies turn gray above us;
We must part from those who love us,
And the happiness we've cherished
May be shattered in a day.

Happy New Year! Times can give
Only years through which to live;
And the happiness we're craving
Is of heart and soul and mind.
One must stand to grief unshaken;
Gladly give as he has taken;
Find his joy in living bravely
And to God's will be resigned.

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

Who are the Circassians?

"Circassion" (pronounced "ser-KASH-an") is the name applied to an individual belonging to a group of tribes inhabiting the Caucasus on the borders of Europe and Asia.

The real Circassians belong to the Cherkess or Adighe and most of them migrated to Turkey in times past to escape Russian persecution. The men are noted for their fine physique and bravery, and the women for their physical beauty. In the days of the Ottoman Empire the harems of the Turks were filled with Circassian women. Though Caucasians, the Circassians speak a language that it not Indo-European and that is not closely related to any other linguistic family.

Is it possible to sleep while floating?

It is possible for a person to sleep while floating, particularly in salt water, although the performance is accompanied by considerable risk. Warm water has a tendency to make one drowsy and not infrequently swimmers endanger their lives by falling asleep in the water.

While Benjamin Franklin was on his way from Europe to America in 1785, when he was 79 years old, he stopped a few days at an inn at Southampton, England. In his diary kept at the time he says: "I went at noon to bathe in Martin's salt-water hot-bath, and, floating on my back, fell asleep, and slept near an hour by my watch, without sinking or turning over! I never did before, and should hardly have thought possible. Water is the easiest bed that can be."

Franklin in his youth prided himself on being a good swimmer, and in his "Autobiography" he tells us that during his first stay in England he once performed "many feats of activity, both upon and under the water" of the Thames between Chelsea and Blackfriar's. He taught two lads to be good swimmers "at twice going into the water," and at one time he seriously considered opening a swimming-school as a means of livelihood.

One American In Six "Harboring Garbage Worms"

Boston, Dec. 26 — (AP) — A scientist who studies parasites said Friday that "this wormy world" had better turn on the worm.

Dr. Norman R. Stoll of the Rockefeller Institute of Medical Research said in an address marking his retirement as president of the American Society of Parasitologists that "about one in six Americans is harboring cabbage worms."

He said the world population may reach 3,300,000,000 by the end of the century and that parasites "may grow even more."

Wipe Out Profits And Jobs Go Too

(From The Financial Post)

"It is Soviet economists who criticize the American economy most sharply for its inadequate profit margin and the resulting failure to accumulate enough capital, and who base their belief in the inevitability of an American economic collapse largely on the inability of the American economy to operate on a large enough profit margin."

That comes from Peter Drucker, the distinguished U.S. economist writing in the current Harper's. He continues:

"Certainly the tendency to prevent the accumulation of capital is a real danger to our economic stability; for without this accumulation we would neither have the necessary insurance against the losses inevitably inherent in the economic process—in a planned as well as in an unplanned economy—nor— have the capital reserves for further expansion. And it is also certain that the driving power behind our antiprofit policies is worker resentment of profits, worker hostility to them, and worker ignorance of the role of profit in our economy."

There, Drucker states very well the kernel of today's great problem: getting the employed millions to look at the simple and incontrovertible facts about profits and wages, set of facts which produce the same answer with mathematical certainty no matter who does the figuring, democrat, socialist, or communist.

Labor leaders because of their position of power and eminence, have the responsibility of knowing the facts. Ignorance is not their privilege. It is therefore tragic and disastrous, most of all for the people who trust them, that they should lead the workers in wage drives which have at their end the precipice of unemployment.

In the U.S. the CIO paid $12,000 to the ex-New Deal brainstruster Robert R. Nathan for a "report" which said U.S. industry could now raise wages 25 per cent without raising prices.

This "report" said exactly what the CIO wanted to hear and a new wave of wage demands is now getting under way.

Nathan apparently used as his standard for wages the war peak level of wages. As his standard for profits, he took the comparatively depressed period 1936-39.

Nathan said wages could be raised without raising prices. The record of the years and the decades proves him wrong. Here and there are individual firms which could probably (mathematically) do so. But they are rare. The effect of the Nathan pronouncement is to give a counterfeit blessing for wage drives on an industry-wide basis.

Here Are The Facts

A recent survey by Princeton University found that a representative group of workers believe that profits after taxes run "at about 25 per cent," obviously a nonsense figure.

A survey by the magazine Factory Management asked workers what return they would expect annually if they put $5,000 into a company. The majority said they would want 5 per cent to 15 per cent dividends every year.

A recent study by group of reputable and expert investigators concluded that the average net profit of all U.S. manufacturing corporations in the prosperous last half of the 'twenties was about 5 3-4 per cent. The study adds:

"If instead of assuming the risks and responsibilities of producing some article or service, the enterprisers had invested their capital in Government securities or high-grade corporate bonds, they would have averaged about 4 1-2 per cent on their money."

The difference of the 1 1-4 per cent was their reward for putting their money into places where they were liable to lose it and where a tremendous amount of blood, toil, tears and sweat was needed to avoid losing it. Those are the men who create jobs.

The biggest danger of a recession in the year ahead lies in further upward spiralling of wages and prices. No one suffers in recession so much and so surely as workers whose leaders "price" them out of their jobs.

Rescue Party On Way to Recover Disaster Victims

San Diego, Calif., Dec. 28 (AP)—Coroner's aides and a U.S. Marines rescue party hoped today to bring down from a barren, winter-lashed peak the remains of 12 Christmas Eve air disaster victims.

Near the smashed, charred wreckage of the Western Air Lines transport, which was found yesterday, the nine passengers and three crew members ley dead with packages intended for Christmas strewn around them.

The wreckage was scattered over a wide area on a Laguna Mountains peak, 50 miles east of here, only a short distance from where an American Air Lines plane crashed with a loss of 28 lives last March 3.

The last radio message from pilot George Burton Sprado, 38, of Santa Monica, Calif., reported the plane clearing the mountains at 7:09 P.M., 24 minutes after leaving the Imperial Valley for San Diego and gave no indication of trouble.

CANNED MOTHERS CAN'T LEARN

Canned mothers doesn't mean they come in cans but just that the can opener is their chief contribution to the raising of children. In Yankeeland these imitation mothers get away with it by the simple expedient of shifting their responsibilities to a pediatrician who tells the make-believe mother which can and how much trick sugar to dish out to the unfortunate baby.

A western mother writes:

"I sincerely agree with your theory about Common Respiratory Infections (C.R.I. I have 3 children and I could never see any connection between wet feet and germs invading the nose and throat. I asked my pediatrician and he said I was right, it was a lot of hooey. I asked him why he didn't tell mothers that and he said they'd ignore him—he added that he didn't meet many mothers with my ideas. He lanced an ear abscess of my little boy's and told me not to plug the ear canal, that free ventilation of the ear was best and that infection enters the ear only by way of nose, throat and Eustachian tube. It would take pages."

Hum. If a nose, throat and ear specialist ventured to tell a canned mother how to feed, bathe, dress and train her child, what a howl the brass baby specialists would raise about it!

A real specialist is a doctor who has acquired more knowledge and skill in some particular branch of medicine or surgery than others, and then by withdrawing from general practice and limiting his practice to his particular branch or field, has gained the recognition of his colleagues—so that they call him into consultation in difficult cases or refer patients to him for his advice. A real specialist does not compete with the general practitioners in the community; he cooperates with them when they seek his advice. The real specialist is as different from your phony pediatrician, my dear Wiseacres, as good sound teeth are from bargain dental parlor plates.

Too many people harbor the smug notion that doctor who holds himself out as a specialist is necessarily better trained or in some vague way superior to the doctor who makes no such pretense. The fault with that notion is, first, that the real specialist simply does not hold himself out to the public at all, for as already explained, the real specialist depends entirely upon his colleagues for his practice; and second, the government, the state, the law imposes no restriction upon the doctor's field or branch of practice—once the doctor gets a licence to practice medicine and surgery (the licence is always for both) it is up to the doctor to decide for himself whether to do general practice or to hold himself out as a specialist.

It seems to occur rarely or not at all to the public to wonder how the bright young doctor who holds himself out as a pediatrician contrived to take time out from the general study of medicine and surgery to acquire such outstanding knowledge and skill in pediatrics, all in the few years of pre-medical and medical college work—while ordinary young men had all they could do to complete the regular medical course and get a licence to practise medicine and surgery.

Washington Spotlight

By CLYDE BLACKBURN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Washington, Dec. 27 — (CP) — President Truman, in a casual and impromptu way, told a press conference that he could see no possibility of an economic recession in the United States next year if workers all stayed on the job.

This made headlines all over the country and was reported to have induced an upward surge in stock market quotations. All the president had said was that if everybody worked there would be no depression, and he said he was talking about people going on strike.

The comment was purely incidental. A reporter was asking a question which involved the assumption that a depression was possible, and the president interrupted him to interject his belief that there would not be a depression in 1947.

Then he went on to say he believed strikes were bad for everybody and unnecessary. A few days later the United States News, an independent and non-partisan weekly Washington review, came out with figures that seemed to support the president on the strike score.

The News estimated that in 1946 United States workers lost an over-all total of $1,206,000,000 in wages because they were on strike. This did not include wages lost to others made idle by strikes although not themselves involved in wage or other labor disputes.

The News estimated that loss to industry was 1,025,000,000 man hours of work; the loss to the country's economy included 2,000,000 automobiles that might have been built, 100,000 homes, 12,000,000 tons of steel and 148,000,000 tons of fuel.

Estimated result to workers was an average gain in dollar earnings of nine per cent and shorter hours in some occupations, but the rise in prices to consumers was estimated to have turned the wage gain into a real loss in buying power of four per cent.

No doubt other statisticians could present different conclusions, and will. But these probably will be depended upon in the forthcoming Congressional move, aided by the administration, to make labor disputes unpopular and strikes difficult to bring about.

Some 500 top-flight Washington newspapermen and their distinguished guests, including President Truman, attended a recent dinner of the exclusive Gridiron Club where the speeches are traditionally super-confidential and off-the-record. Senator-elect John Bricker (Rep.-Ohio) was a speaker and almost immediately newspapers and radio commentators began to hint that he had made an ill-advised speech.

The revelations grew more frank and detailed — and probably exaggerated — as the dinner event faded into the background, and they were made by some of the highest-paid columnists. Senator-elect Bricker is one of those hoping for the presidential nomination in 1948 and so the politically-minded are agog to know what he actually did say at the Gridiron dinner. But probably no one not present ever will know, and many of those present have forgotten.

Still, the shadow of the half-revealed and biased conceptions of his speech will haunt him and his supporters from now on.

A Washington correspondent, making the direct approach, wrote his old friend Gen. Eisenhower with some frank questions about his reaction to rumors the general might be a presidential candidate in 1948. The answer came back promptly. It acknowledged the letter — and wished the correspondent and his family a Merry Christmas!

V.O.N. News

Health instruction occupies about one half of the time of the Victorian Order Nurse. It is extended to individuals as she advises and demonstrates in connection with their own particular problems. It is given in the home, privately, at clinics, group meetings and classes. In fact the Victorian Order Nurse is ever ready to instruct and guide in health matters.

One of such classes is the prenatal class held every Monday afternoon at the Kiwanis Centre, beginning at two-thirty. Here a number of mothers-to-be meet and take part in an organized course of instruction. They learn not only how to safeguard their own health and that of their baby at this time, but they are given valuable advice in planning out the future health program of their child. The meeting is quite informal and usually is spent in knitting or sewing for the newcomer as well as discussion of different topics being studied. These classes are open to all.

The Experts Say

By KAY REX
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Ottawa, Dec. 28 (CP)— For many a Canadian household New Year's Day celebrations include a dinner complete with just about as many trimmings as the big Christmas meal.

For those with chicken — or even a second turkey—in mind, home economists of the consumer section, Dominion department of agriculture, suggests a method of getting four or five extra slices from the breast of that New Year's bird.

The wish-bone should be removed before the fowl is stuffed, by cutting out the neck at its base. Fold back the neck skin, which has been left long, and with a sharp knife cut the flesh on each side of the wish-bone. Loosen the bone from shoulder to breast-bone with fingers, and with sharp scissors or pliers cut the bone where it is attached at the shoulder and breast-bone. It will then slip out easily. The bird requires a little more stuffing as the space where the neck was must be filled. The long piece of neck skin holds the stuffing in place.

This new method doesn't change the shape of the turkey or chicken, and it will be a joy to the carver to be able to cut large, even slices.

Speaking of stuffing, an idea for crumbling the bread easily and quickly is to cut a two-day-old loaf in thirds, and remove the crusts. Place one piece in a clean tea towel and gather the edges to form a bag. Hold in the left hand and with the right rub the cube of bread against the left until the crumbs are as fine as required. Repeat until the remainder of the bread is crumbed.

One loaf of 1 1-2 pounds gives six cups of crumbs. Allow 3-4 cup stuffing per pound of poultry.

This is the season for entertaining and an easy-to-prepare, yet colorful and appetizing dish for a luncheon or supper party is the jellied neopolitan loaf.

No special recipe is necessary as the dish simply is made up of jellied tomato salad and potato and chicken salad. Any combination of cole slaw, chicken, vegetable or meat, may also be used.

Directions: Place a layer of tomato jelly in the bottom of a mould or loaf tin which has been lightly greased or rinsed in cold water. When firm add a layer of potato salad and a layer of chicken salad. Pour the remaining tomato jelly into the mould. When firm unmould on serving plate, garnish with parsley or green pepper strips and hard-cooked eggs. Serve with salad dressing, rolls or bread.

Here's a recipe for mincemeat drop cakes: 1-2 cup shortening; 1-2 cup sugar; 1 egg; 1 cup mincemeat; 2 cups sifted flour; 1-2 teaspon soda; 1-2 teaspoon salt.

White's S.S. Concert

On Monday evening White's Sunday school presented their annual Christmas concert. Mr. McCallum acted as chairman and called on little Miss Barbara Dever for a recitation, "Welcome". The choir gave "The Greeting We Love the Best", followed by a short talk by Mr. McCallum. Bruce Hunt gave a piano solo and recitations by Donald Bowers and Bruce Hunt followed. A dialogue, "Blenda's Wish" by Misses Joan Meyers, Sheila Moore, Rose Kleinsteuber and Patricia Gingras was well-given and very appropriate and showed that it was not wise to be selfish at Christmas. Mrs. Meyers and Mr. Albert Jones rendered "Star of the East" accompanied by Mrs. Jeffery. A recitation, "The Crippled Dolly" was given by Barbara Dever and another by Shirley Meyers. All joined in singing "Silent Night". Gary Jackson, Bobby Sutcliffe and Douglas Sutcliffe gave Christmas recitations and Mr. Bill Dudley gave a Christmas solo. The choir sang "While Shepherds Watched Their Flocks By Night". Donald Jones gave a Christmas reading. The girls and boys sang "O Little Town of Bethlehem" accompanied by Mrs. D. Bowers. A duet, "We Three Kings of Orient" by Misses Sheila Moore and Joan Meyers brought the evening's entertainment to a close.

Although a very busy man Old Santa again arrived to add a bit more of the Christmas spirit to the evening's entertainment.

During the evening Mr. G. Sarles read an address and Mr. W. A. Jeffery, the superintendent of the Sunday school, was presented with a fountain pen.

C.A.H.A. Approves Steps Towards Mergers of World Hockey Bodies at Meeting

Present Authorized to Attend Meeting at Prague in February

By WILLIAM H. DUMDSAY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Dec. 28. (CP)—Steps toward a merger of the ruling bodies of hockey, which will succeed only if the Canadian Hockey Association emerges as the world's dominant force, gained the nod of the C.A.H.A.'s semi-annual meeting.

Hanson Dowell, president of the C.A.H.A., was authorized late last night to attend a meeting in Prague next February which may bring into wedlock the International Ice Hockey Association, young North American rival to the Ligue International de Hockey Sur Lance, European parent body formed in 1908.

But when Dr. W. G. Hardy of Edmonton, formed the I.I.H.A. of which he is president, it was done so the C.A.H.A. could control hockey and because the Association was dissatisfied with the L.I.H.G. Dowell's instructions are that any approval of merger to form the new organization—the International Ice Hockey Federation—must keep the C.A.H.A. in its ruling post.

The meeting approved a report by Dowell of his attendance at the September meeting of the L.I.H.G. in Zurich at which he and Walter Brown of Boston, vice president of the Amateur Hockey Association of the United States, insisted that organization and not the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States be recognized as the body controlling ice hockey in the U.S.

Dowell's instructions from the C.A.H.A. were to hold out for this concession at the February meeting and it was recalled by Dr. Hardy that the L.I.H.G. once instructed the C.A.H.A. to cut away from the A.H.A. of U.S. as an outlaw body. Now the two organizations form the basis of Dr. Hardy's I.I.H.A.

Problems Under Review

George Panter of Gravenhurst, Ont., president of the Ontario Hockey Association, asked why the C.A.H.A. should base its decision on whether or not to enter the New World Federation on the basis of inclusion of the A.A.U. of U.S., in view of the fact that the American body had not honored an agreement to pay $100 on all players transferred to the U.S. from the C.A.H.A.

He was assured the transfer problem was under review and earlier peace was declared between the Canadian and American organizations on the transfer issue, when they met in closed session of the I.I.H.A.

There had been a break in good relations when players lined up with the U.S. teams without first obtaining transfers from Canada, but after a session reported to be "heated", the situation was clarified. In future clubs wanting transfers must advise not only the ruling association of their own country but also that of the other country.

Another point which Dowell has been instructed to hold out for at the Prague meeting is that the new organization adopt the C.A.H.A.'s definition of an amateur—an athlete not actively engaged in professional sport.

He will also see that progress is being made toward a system of voting and membership in the new organization satisfactory to the C.A.H.A. Secretary George Dudley held that Canada, as the world's hockey incubator, should have more voting power than countries playing the game as a sideline.

A minor sensation was caused by a letter written to the L.I.H.G. by George Duncan of Ottawa, former President of the C.A.H.A., seeking affiliation to an organization he called the Canadian Ice Hockey Association.

Although one delegate called it "direct sabotage", Mr. Duncan said he had "no apologies" to offer for the letter and that it was his personal opinion that the C.A.H.A. was being put into the background by the I.I.H.A.

Should Dowell decide in favor of the merger of the two organizations, he will recommend Dr. Hardy as the new federation's first vice president and Mr. Dudley as its secretary.

Both Memorial and Allan Cup final series on a best-of-seven game points basis will start next April 16, the Juniors in the West and Seniors in the East.

When some members suggested a team representing a small western centre might feel it could not stag the finals as a financial success on home ice, the meeting empowered a committee to consider a motion which would permit such a club to elect to travel east and play in Toronto's Maple Leaf Gardens.

OSHAWA GENS BEAT FALCONS BY 9-3 COUNT

Hamilton Suffers First Defeat in Fourteen Starts This Season

(By The Canadian Press)

Eight of the ten teams in the Ontario Hockey Association's Junior "A" circuit swing into action this afternoon and tonight, the only idle squads being the league-leading Toronto St. Michael's and the sixth-place Barrie Flyers.

Before the weekend fray started the standings were tightened just a little in Friday night's battles in which Oshawa Generals whipped St. Catharines Falcons 9-3 and Galt Red Wings walloped Stratford Kroehlers 4-1.

That left St. Mikes still six points in the lead, with Oshawa second, and Marlboros and Galt tied for third another four points back. Barrie and Stratford were still within reaching distance, but a large gap separated the other four—Hamilton Zaabos, St. Catharines, Toronto, Young Rangers and Windsor Spitfires.

Oshawa Generals approached within six points of the leaders by their 9-3 victory at St. Catharines last night. There was no score until eight minutes of the second period had passed, then Oshawa put four in a row behind Haunn in the Falcon nets. In the last period Oshawa got five more, while Falcons managed to beat Reddoch three times.

The Generals' speed, long passing plays and polished style resulted in two goals each for Pogue, Milliard, Ceresino and Hildebrand, Bauer getting the other. Kodatsky scored twice for the Falcons and Currie once.

At Stratford it was a rough encounter in which 28 penalties were handed out before Galt beat the Kroehlers 4-1. Galt had a 4-0 lead in goals by Glover, Wiseman, Pavelich and Cooney before Kullman broke Galt's shut-out.

The last period at Galt produced the roughest hockey of the night, with 13 penalties, including two majors. The majors went to Scott of Galt, and Daniels of Stratford.

BUFFALO BISONS IN GOOD SHAPE

(By The Canadian Press)

Just where each team will be in American Hockey League standing after tonight's games depends more on who loses than who wins.

Buffalo, facing the Western Division leading Cleveland Barons in Cleveland, can move into a three-way tie with Indianapolis and Pittsburg for second place in that sector—if both Indianapolis and Pittsburgh lose.

Either Indianapolis Caps or Pittsburgh Hornets can gain sole possession of the second place notch—the Caps by defeating Hershey and the Hornets by downing Providence—but one of them must lose for that to happen.

Providence may be in third place in the east after the ice is cleared—but only if Springfield loses and Springfield facing New Haven Ramblers can only move closer to the Ramblers' Eastern Division two spot.

Two things are certain, however. Hershey and Cleveland still will lead their respective east and west sections, and the respective cellar-teams, Philadelphia and St. Louis, after playing each other, still will be at the bottom of the ladder.

Television Invades the Hockey Sphere.

Hockey made its inaugural appearance as a television sport this season and is already winning the world's fastest game a host of new fans. After having successfully telecast other major sports attractions television moved into the hockey sphere this year and right from the start proved a tremendous success.

All home games of the Chicago Black Hawks and New York Rangers are being televised this season. The Black Hawk games are telecast by WBKB, the Balaban & Katz station, while the Columbia Broadcasting System Television Station, WCBW-N.Y. televise the New York games.

The Rangers broadcasts are under the supervision of Bob Edge, sports director of WCBW. Win Elliott calls the play-by-play while Bernie London, WCBW sports staffer and assistant to Edge, serves as researcher and spotter and contacts the interviewers for all telecasts.

WBKB in Chicago have one of the most advanced television stations in the United States. The station plans to log 35 television hours on the air each week and have already logged as many as 30 hours. Director of the Station is Bill Eddy, who has invented much of the equipment and devised many of the techniques in use throughout the radio world today. Bill Kusack is the engineer in charge of the Hawk broadcasts, Jack Gibney is the field director and Harry Birch is the head cameraman, while Joe Wilson handles the play-by-play.

Nick Damore, goaltender of the Philadelphia Rockets in the American Hockey League, was on the first team of the players' all-stars in 1943-44 and 1944-45, and on the sports writers and sportscasters first team last season. He is the only goaltender to be so honored more than once in the past decade.

ALWAYS ON THE BEAM

Les Cunningham, veteran ace of the Cleveland Barons in the American Hockey League, holds more individual records than any other AHL player. He is particularly proud of the fact that in the last seven seasons with the Barons he has never finished out of the leading ten scorers and has never failed to score more than 20 goals. His goal average over 7 campaigns is 28.6, and his total point average over the same period is 69.4.

EASY ON THE EYES

It has been suggested that a bright yellow puck would be easier to follow on the ice than the standard black rubber one used. If goalies are permitted to express an opinion on the matter they will be in favor of making it twice as big regardless of color.

THE HAT-TRICK HABIT

Lou Trudel, star left wing of the Cleveland Barons in the American Hockey League has turned the "hat-trick" (scoring three goals in a game) ten times in seven seasons.

HANDLE CAREFULLY PLEASE

A paper cup for each player is standard equipment in a professional hockey team's dressing room. They don't use them for drinking purposes either, but to place their dentures in while on the ice. You can't keep all your teeth and be a hockey star.

In an effort to illustrate the procedure that takes place in televising a hockey game let us take you to Madison Square Garden, New York. In a cage suspended from the west balcony are two cameras with monitoring equipment. These cameras which are fitted with telescopic lenses for pulling in the end zone plays are continuously taking pictures of the game.

Each of these cameras feeds into the control equipment room where two machines record the pictures on a small grid or screen about 4 by 5 inches in size. Watching these two machines are the two operators and director, the latter constantly signalling to the operators as to which of these images is to be sent out over the wires.

They are then relayed over special telephone lines and repeaters, to the A. T. & T. headquarters downtown; up to the CBS Studio Control Room in the Grand Central Terminal Building, and then over to the station's transmitter in the Chrysler Tower for transmission out to the 7,000 television sets in the Greater New York area.

A mobile television work crew numbers ten, sometimes more, including technicians and sports staffers.

New viewers to television invariably ask this question: How far does it carry? Television does not carry as far as radio. Unlike radio waves which follow the curvature of the earth, television waves beam straight. This restricts to line-of-sight the area any station can cover. Currently, this limitation is accepted as roughly between 35 and 40 miles. However, one Milwaukee set owner, approximately 95 miles from Chicago makes frequent reports of how WBKB's programs were being received on his set.

Telecasting of games marks another milestone in the advancement of hockey.

Dallas Strengthens Hold on First Place

(By The Canadian Press)

Dallas strengthened its hold on first place and Tulsa on second place in the United States Hockey League's southern division last night when the Texans downed St. Paul 5-2 and the Oilers trounced Houston 8-4.

Bob Thorpe, V. M. Allen, Joffre Desilets, Murray Armstrong, and Gordy Petrie did the scoring for the Texans. Hal Brown and Joe Shack counted for St. Paul.

The Oilers' scoring was led by Scotty Mair with two tallies. Joe Sadler, Johnny Ubriaco, Alvin (Buck) Jones, Bill Wilson, Will Knott, and Ralph Wycherly recorded the other Tulsa markers. Comfort, Paul Hendrick, Agar, and Moden Skinner scored for Houston.

CAR OUTPUT DOWN

Detroit, Dec. 28 — (AP) — Ward's Automotive reports estimated this week's production of cars and trucks in the United States and Canada at 63,955 units, compared with a revised estimate of 96,754 last week.

Canadian Sport Snapshots

By KEN METHERAL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Edmonton, Dec. 28 — (CP) — Hockey is big business in Canada — one of the biggest sport businesses the Dominion boasts in both the professional and amateur classes.

It is big business not only on the domestic front with fans pouring millions of dollars into the turnstiles annually to see games from Halifax to Vancouver, but a lucrative trade on the export market. Canadian players are tops whether the winter pastime is played in the United States or England.

And the recent vain quest of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association to find a suitable sextet to represent Canada in a world championship puck series at Prague, Czechoslovakia in February is ample warning that Canada should give serious consideration to her hockey prestige throughout the world.

The C.A.H.A., balked in efforts to secure a complete senior aggregation to carry the maple leaf colors into the European hockey wars, might be well advised to follow the lead of English soccer heads and set up an all-star international selection committee.

Departure of a full top-line sextet would throw a heavy financial burden on any hockey circuit. Both the Allan Cup champs, Calgary Stampeders, and Winnipeg Monarchs, National junior kings last season, refused the European invitation rather than side-step their regular league obligations.

But the withdrawal of 12 to 15 players spread over clubs from the Maritimes to British Columbia would not throw a great burden on any single club or league.

Dave Duchak and Cam Burke, two former starry performers on western puck lanes, no longer see eye to eye. They started their hockey careers together as kids in Moose Jaw, Sask., and later were together in an Allan Cup bid with North Battleford, Sask., Now Dave, manager of the Calgary Stampeders and Cam, business manager of Lethbridge Maple Leafs of the Western Canada Senior Hockey League are at odds over player transfers.

Stamps recently released Don and George Menzies to find employment in another senior loop. Leafs are anxious to get the puck-chasing brothers, but Davie is sticking to a league regulation that would allow the players only to move to another team in the loop on the unanimous approval of the other league clubs — much to the disgust of his former teammate Burke.

RANGERS START TOUGH GRIND IN THE N.H.L.

Frankie Boucher's Boys Are Scheduled to Play Seven Games in Nine Days

By JACK MITCHELL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

In the next nine days, New York Rangers face what well may be a "make or break" grind in the pullman haul that will see them touch every point but one in those parts of Canada and the United States encompassed by the National Hockey League.

The seven games that Frankie Boucher's boys are scheduled to crowd into those nine days will take the blueshirts beyond the halfway mark of their schedule—and the points come even harder as the teams reach the play-off turn.

In fourth place now, the Rangers can start off on the right foot tonight with a win over the victory-starved Detroit Red Wings, just two points behind them. From Detroit, they return home for a Sunday night stand against Boston Bruins, whose third place position should make them a tougher proposition.

Before the long haul in which the Rangers will not be either travelling or playing on only one day — ends Jan. 5, the blueshirts take on both Boston and Detroit again as well as Toronto Maple Leafs twice and Chicago Black Hawks one.

The only spot that Rangers miss in that stretch is Montreal.

Toronto press postmortems placed much of the blame for the Leafs' 4-1 defeat Thursday night, which lifted Canadiens within 3 points of the leading Toronto team, on their reception in Montreal. The change from Detroit, where they played the previous night, to 10-below zero temperatures in Montreal and the 17-hour travelling it entailed, was just too much.

The Black Hawks from Chicago, struggling to lift themselves out of the league cellar, will get a taste of the Montreal cold tonight in the second of three Saturday night games. In three meetings to date with the Hawks, the Stanley Cup champions have won every one.

With Toronto feeling its first snow storm of the year, Boston should also get a cold reception in the Queen city in the third match. The Bruins, seeking to better their third-place position, go on to New York for the only Sunday night game.

What's Doing in Sport

(By The Canadian Press)

The possibility of an annual Canadian intercollegiate hockey championship appeared yesterday following an announcement by University of Manitoba officials that plans were being drawn up for making a coming two-game series with a University of Toronto team the forerunner of such an event. At present U. of T. plays in an eastern intercollegiate loop comprising Queens, McGill and University of Montreal. The western loop of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta is back in operation this year after a war-time lapse.

Warren Stevens, U. of T. athletic director said in Toronto he liked the idea but he felt travel problems would prove difficult to overcome.

George Herman (Babe) Ruth and Mike Jacobs, two prominent sports figures who have been in hospital for some time, were reported yesterday to be showing steady improvement.

At Milwaukee, Cecil Johnson, 42, one of the top United States squash players, died Thursday night following an automobile accident. He was a native of Warwickshire, England.

A barnstorming Boston hockey team went down to defeat before a Swedish team at Stockholm yesterday by a 14-4 score. More than 7,000 witnessed the game. The Boston team lost a previous match by a 9-0 score.

General Manager Herb Pennock of the Philadelphia Phils announced yesterday Lou Finney, former Philadelphia Athletic outfielder and first baseman, has been signed by the Phils as a general utility player.

An unbeaten Eastern Kentucky Teachers College of Richmond team overwhelmed the University of Toronto team 68-31 in an exhibition basketball game played last night at Louisville, Ky.

WHY REO TRUCKS ARE TOUGH
....Big, deep frame Members—
COLD RIVETED!

● Reo frames are one of the big reasons why Reo's are tough. They not only look strong—they are strong. Stock is 1/4" and 5/16" instead of usual 3/16"—rails are full depth, full-length—supported by 7 and 8 cross members in all models instead of only 5. Best of all, construction is cold-riveted—30 ton pressures for the 3/8" rivets, 45 tons for the 1/2" rivets. There's no cooling off contraction or crystallization. In a sample cross-section, you can't tell where the rivet stops and the riveted parts begin.

Let us tell you about the many Reo features—Reo Gold Crown engines, "The Gold Standard of Value"—Reo More-Load design which provides more load space on shorter wheelbase and shortens turning radius—Reo dual primary brakes.

Eastern Amateur Hockey League May be Formed

Ottawa, Dec. 28 (CP).—Possibility of a new Eastern Amateur Hockey League which would include Hamilton Tigers, Ontario Hockey Association champions, and teams from Ottawa, Toronto and Cornwall, got a thorough talking-up here yesterday.

President Tommy Gorman, veteran hockey promoter, predicted such a league would be formed under C.A.H.A. auspices when he addressed a dinner here in honor of the Hamilton club, who was visiting the capital for an exhibition game tonight with Ottawa Senators of the Quebec Senior Hockey League.

While Gorman did not name the individual clubs, he said the league would "include four Ontario teams", hinting that several Quebec teams might also function in the proposed set-up.

The Movie Column

By HELEN BANNERMAN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

The Christmas holiday has run in with premieres: New York teed off with J. Arthur Rank's "Stairway to Heaven" followed by "Humoresque", the Joan Crawford-John Garfield drama; "The Secret Heart", a confection with Claudette Colbert, Walter Pidgeon and June Allyson, and "The Beast With Five Fingers", with Peter Lorre.

A number of Canadian cities saw the opening of Dickens' "Great Expectations", made by Cineguild, the Rank subsidiary which established its name with "Brief Encounter".

"Stairway to Heaven", a production of The Archers, written, produced and directed by Michael Powell and Emeric Pressburger, stars David Niven, Kim Hunter and Roger Livesay in one of the most charming pictures to come to the screen. Combining comedy, fantasy and realism in an unusual way the film has been getting rave reviews from New York critics, headed by Bosley Crowther of The Times who let himself go:

"Had you harked you would have heard the Herald Angels singing an appropriate paean of joy over a wonderful new British picture, "Stairway to Heaven". And if you listen now to this reviewer you will hear that the delicate charm, the adult humor and the visual virtuosity of the Powell-Pressburger film render it indisputably the best of a batch of Christmas shows."

The story leaps lightly from earth to heaven and back as it tells of Sqdn. Ldr. Peter Carter (David Niven), who should have been killed when he jumped from his flaming bomber without a parachute, but who not only lives to tell the tale but also to fall in love with an American W.A.C. (Kim Hunter).

A bang on the head in his fall gives him the hallucination that his heavenly messenger visits him, tries to convince him to accompany him to heaven and so put the celestial bookkeeping straight. With the help of a doctor, well played by Rodger Livesay, Carter wins his appeal before the supreme court of heaven to stay on earth and wins his health back by a brain operation.

Raymond Massey puts everything he has into the role of the prosecutor at the trial.

U.K. WOMEN M.P.S. TAKE ACTIVE PART IN STATE AFFAIRS

Twenty-Two Women Members Establish Fine Tradition in British House of Commons

London (CP)—Lady Priscilla Grant, 31, slim widow of a soldier has become the 22nd woman to occupy a seat in the House of Commons where other members of her sex have established a tradition of tireless activity.

Lady Grant was elected as Conservative member for Aberdeen South, her two young daughters being just old enough to accompany her to some campaign meetings in the recent by-election.

Although the women members are comparatively few in the House with its 640 seats, political observers said they have made an impression out of all proportion to their numbers.

An example is young, soft-voiced Alice Bacon, member for northeast Leeds, who presides at some Labor assemblies, goes with parliamentary delegations to Russia and other countries and is lifted to high offices in the party by floods of votes from supporters within the movement. She is a factor in deciding Labor policies.

Across the floor, on the Liberal benches and usually sitting almost opposite Miss Bacon, is Lady Megan Lloyd George, youngest daughter of the late Earl Lloyd George, First Great Ware prime minister, and member for Anglesey. She has all her father's fluency but does not often speak in the house.

Red-haired Dr. Edith Summerskill, parliamentary secretary to the food minister, is the woman member whose voice is most often heard as she answers questions and parries sharp opposition inquiries on a multitude of regulations.

Long active in the Labor movement she is sometimes spoken of as a future cabinet minister. Ellen Wilkinson is the only woman who sits with the inner cabinet of 18 members and as minister of education is carrying through major school system changes.

Lady Davidson, member for Hemel Hempstead, is the Conservative woman member who welcomed Lady Grant to the house.

When the Labor government was elected a record number of 24 women members won seats. Since then two have died and one resigned. Labor now has 19, Conservatives two and Liberals one.

Senator Urges That U.S. Halt Immigration

Washington, Dec. 28 — (AP) — Senator Elmer Thomas (Dem-Okla.) brought a pressing Congressional issue to the fore Friday with the assertion that all immigration into the United States should be halted immediately.

"I make no distinction as to race or nationality," Thomas told a reporter. "We already have too many people in this country."

President Truman said last October, in calling for substantial immigration of Jews into Palestine, that he is prepared to ask Congress for liberalization of this country's laws to admit thousands of refugees into the United States.

Republican senators, who will hold a majority in the session starting next Friday, indicated today they want to see Mr. Truman's specific proposal before they commit themselves.

But Thomas, who tried unsuccessfully during the last session of Congress to halt nearly all immigration for five years, declared:

"I am against immigration There may be a few exceptions, but as a general principle I am opposed to it until we get our domestic economy a little more stabilized — and that may take years."

He added "If I thought it would do any good I would recommend to the state department that they close the gates as well to all Americans who want to leave this country, except for the greatest emergency."

Thomas said some Americans visiting other countries "all torn to pieces and hungry and ragged" to "with their pockets full of money and often make scenes of themselves, bringing discredit upon the United States.

SAVES LIFE OF COMPANION

Napanee, Dec. 28 — (CP) — Mary Jane Hatton, 10-year-old daughter of Rev. Noble and Mrs. Hatton of Napanee was credited last night with saving the life of her companion Donna Aspelstine, 11.

When returning from skiing Donna went for a slide on a clear piece of ice on the Napanee River and crashed through. A good swimmer, she managed to grasp the rim of the ice and Mary Hatton proffered a ski pole. The ice broke several times but Mary managed to bring her companion to shallow water, and safety.

Donna is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Percy Asselstine, Napanee.

SINGLE "JITNEY" SERVICE EXPANDS TO BIG BUSINESS

B. C. Woman Started Transportation Business From Nanaimo to Port Alberni on Shoestring

Port Alberni, B.C. (CP)—A determined little woman who does not know the meaning of the word "quit", Mrs. Alice Ingham has built from a shoestring a thriving transportation business.

Twelve years ago she made a trip from her home in Nanaimo, on Vancouver Island, to Port Alberni for a visit, and "I noticed it was quite a little jaunt between the two towns and it might be a good idea to start a "jitney" service."

So Mrs. Ingham borrowed some money and bought an ancient jaloppy, installing herself as driver. Her regular route was from Nanaimo to Port Alberni, 53 miles, and return. On requests she deviate to other points.

She picked the worst possible time to start the business, running into one of the hardest winters the district has known. "It was pretty tough going," she said.

But the unusually heavy snowfalls and the fact that revenue barely paid for gasoline and repairs did not phase the even-tempered Mrs. Ingham. There were delays, but no cancellations.

"There isn't any place anywhere where people would have stepped in and helped me as they did here," she remarked.

Then began years of financing and re-financing until now she has 19 motor cars and three buses and is planning a modern bus depot. She now directs operations from headquarters here and employs eight drivers. The company has had no serious accidents.

INVESTIGATE COMPLAINT

Toronto, Dec. 28 — (CP)—Police Friday investigated a 16-year-old girl's complaint that a youth criminally attacked her in a hotel room Christmas night.

The girl told police she and another girl met two youths in a restaurant and accepted an invitation to go to a hotel room occupied by one of the youths.

Centenary

CHRISTMAS CONCERT

Centenary —The annual Christmas concert, presented by the children of Centenary School, under the direction of Miss M. Pound, teacher ,and Miss Pitman, musical director, was enjoyed by the capacity audience that filled the school on Thursday evening.

It was a night long to be remembered by the children, and their bright and happy faces showed the excitement and expectant happiness that a well laden Christmas tree and a visit from Santa Claus only can produce.

Rev. A. C. McCallum acted as chairman and the program gave a variety of numbers to make the entertainment most enjoyable.

At the conclusion Santa's visit caused much merriment from both young and old as he, with the help of some of the older boys, distributed the presents and candy.

Following is the program—Music, "Welcome" song; recitations, Grace Stone, Teddy Thrasher, Elaine Bain; Exercise, "Christmas Market" by Mary Ann Ray and Bill Sargent; Chorus, "Merry Christmas Bells" by Seniors; Play, "Merry Margaret"; Chorus, Santa's Gifts" by Juniors; Exercise, "The First Christmas", "Who's Old Santa?"; Drill, by girls; Play —"Oscar and Mr. Santa Claus" by Bill Sargent, Keith Chesney and Ted Aikins; Music, Rhythm Band, Play, "Where the Boys Found Santa Claus"; Song, "Our Prayer" girls; Christmas Hiccoughs" (Jingle Bells); Song, "Christmas Candles" by Juniors; Play, "The Hidden Star"; Song, "White Christmas" by Boys; Play, "Christmas Memories"; "God Save The King". Little People of Santa Claus Land

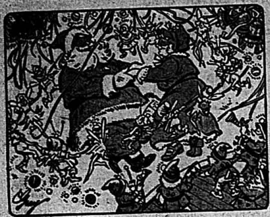
Gay Little Elves and Happy Little Dwarves fix Santa Claus' sleigh.

EDITOR'S NOTE — These stories, written for the children, will find a place in the hearts of their elders—who, like adults around the world, enjoy reliving the fantasy that Santa Claus and his land of "little people" spells.

By JANE NILES, Central Press Staff Writer



EPISODE SIX

"Everybody dances and sings at Little People's After-Christmas Ball."

Now that Christmas has come, Santa Claus and his reindeer are back at the North Pole. The reindeer are bedded down in their nice warm stable behind Santa Claus' house, and the jolly old fellow himself — well, guess what he is doing?

If you could peek into the window of his house up there in Santa Claus Land, you would smile. Because there sits Santa by his fireside. His stocking-feet are high on a soft foot stool, and his head is nodding. Santa is resting after his big trip, and as his head nods, he is dreaming of all the children in the world he has made happy with Christmas toys.

However, everyone in Santa Claus Land isn't resting. No sireeeee!!

All the Little People, who worked so hard all year long to get Santa and the toys ready for the big trip on Christmas Eve, are still very, very busy. Yes, all the Wee Tiny Fairies and the Gay Little Elves and the Merry Little Muncheons and the Happy Little Dwarves are as busy as they can be today.

Because they are getting ready for their big celebration — the After-Christmas Ball.

Santa, you see, knows what a fine job all his Little People have done, so he lets them play between Christmas and New Year's to celebrate the happiness they have brought to all the little children in the world.

The Merry Little Muncheons are moving everything around in the biggest building on Toy Factory Row. It is the building where all year long they were making bicycles and scooters and wagons. All the work tools are put into cabinets, and all the tiny workbenches are piled high against the wall.

The Gay Little Elves bring bright-colored paper and silver tinsel. They drape it over the rafters and hang beautiful bells all over the room. And when they are finished, the Toy Factory is turned into a beautiful Christmas ball room.

Now over in the stables, where the Happy Little Dwarves have bedded down the reindeer, several of the little fellows, who make up a band, are getting out their musical instruments. They will play the music for dancing at the After-Christmas Ball.

Quite the busiest of all the Little People in Santa Claus Land right now is Tinkle Bell, the Wee Tiny Fairy who is Santa's personal private secretary. She is in the basement of her little house at the end of Toy Factory Row. And she is standing on the rim of a great big barrel. This barrel is chock full of dolls' eyes.

You see, all year long, when the Merry Little Muncheons were making dolls for all the little girls in the world, they would discard any dolls' eye that was a bit off in shape or size or color. It just would not do to turn out a doll with crossed eyes, would it?

Now if a moon-eye or a cross-eye was found, the Merry Little Muncheons would drop it into a hole in the floor. The eye would roll and roll and roll, until it came out at the end of Toy Factory Row and dropped into the big barrel in Tinkle Bell's basement.

And it is on this barrel that Tinkle Bell is standing right now. She is counting all the moon-eyes and the cross-eyes so that there will be one for all the Little People attending the After-Christmas ball.

And right now as every Wee Tiny Fairy and every Gay Little Elf and every Merry Little Muncheon and every Happy Little Dwarf comes into Tinkle Bell's house, she gives them an eye.

The Little People then put the eyes on tiny masks and tie them over their foreheads. As they leave Tinkle Bell's house for the beautiful Toy Factory ballroom, Tinkle Bell lights a light in each eye so that all the Little People can find their way in the deep snow.

And over at the beautiful Toy Factory ballroom, the masked Little People with their eyes shining from their foreheads, find Santa Claus. He is sitting at the far end of the big room, and he is wearing the biggest mask of all—one made especially for him by Tinkle Bell. Mrs. Santa is there, too, with her mask, and everybody dances and sings as the Happy Little Dwarves play Christmas carols.

But all too soon, the night is over. Dawn comes and the After-Christmas ball is ended.

All the Little People scurry off to bed. And when they awaken, they will take their places in Santa's Toy Factories, so that next Christmas, when Tinkle Bell tells Santa "Everything is ready" — there will be a toy for every little girl and every little boy in the world.

GOODBYE, NOW!

Discover Creative Process at Work In Milky Way

By HOWARD BLAKESLEE

Boston, Dec. 28 — (AP)— Discovery of the processes of creation going on the earth's own back yard, creating new stars in the nearby Milky Way, was reported to the American Association for the Advancement of Science Friday.

The beginnings of these stars are 23 collections of dust in the Milky Way, all apparently in such a fix between gravitational pull and the queer pressure of bright light from nearby stars, that they will be compressed to form new stars that will some day burst into flame, some as big as our sun, some far larger, some smaller.

The Milky Way is the huge star collection to which the sun belongs. In this star field the earth is at a point about two-thirds of the way out from the centre. The dust patches are mostly farther in toward the centre of the Milky Way. This centre is itself obscured by vast clouds of dust. Without that screen, the night sky would be brilliantly lighted by this centre of the local universe.

The evidence for the creation of these new stars was reported by Dr. Bart J. Bok, of Harvard observatory at the centennial meeting of the American Astronomical Society.

Probably half of all the mass of the Milky Way, he said, is not the stars man sees, but dust and gas.

COAL SHORTAGE IN ZONE

A.O. Dalrymple Succeeds L. Fair In Stirling Post

Agricultural representative for Hastings county since 1938, H. Lynn Fair of Stirling, has been transferred to Ontario county where he will succeed Fred M. Campbell who has been appointed to the same position in Kent county. Assistant Agricultural Representative for York county, Andrew Oliver Dalrymple, will succeed Mr. Fair at Stirling.

Mr. Dalrymple's appointment to the Hastings office will become effective in February as during January he will be conducting a month's short course in agriculture in York county.

Graduated in 1930

Graduate from the Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph from where he graduated in 1930, Mr. Fair since has had a varied experience in agricultural extension work. For three years he was assistant agricultural representative serving in Wellington and Middlesex and in the Muskoka-Parry Sound district. He then served for six months with the Forestry Branch at Kapuskasing in Northern Ontario and in 1933 joined the Livestock Production Service and was located at the Union Stockyards in Toronto.

From 1934 to 1937 he was engaged in farming near Kincardine and in 1938 rejoined the agricultural representative service with his appointment to Hastings county.

Active in Farm Promotion

In Hastings Mr. Fair has been active in the promotion of farm organization, being secretary of the county agricultural committee, the Holstein Friesian Club; Quinte District Seed Growers; Hog Producers' Association, the County Junior Farmers Association; the Stirling Banner Oat Association; County Crop Improvement Association and the Advisory Agricultural Committee of Hastings County Council and president of the Centre Hastings Rural Hockey League.

One of Mr. Fair's greatest efforts in rural organization has been shown by his keen interest in Junior Farmer work with Hastings being one of the best organized counties in Ontario in this respect with active promotion of farm and home improvement contests, reforestation and school ground improvement contests. In 1942 Mr Fair organized a milk production campaign which resulted in the production of cheese in Hastings county being increased by 2,000,000 pounds over 1941.

Mr. Dalrymple who succeeds Mr. Fair in Hastings was graduated from the O.A.C. in 1944 and was appointed in that year as assistant representative in Grey county and in 1945 became acting agricultural representative in Elgin. In January 1946 he was appointed special instructor for a three months' short course in Haldimand, and in April was made assistant representative in York county where he has been active in the field of Junior Farmer development.

Panama Limited Streamline Train Wrecked, 40 Hurt

New Orleans, Dec. 28—(AP)— The Illinois Central Railroad's prize train, the all-Pullman streamliner Panama Limited en route from Chicago to New Orleans, was wrecked Friday, and division officials at McComb, Miss., reported that about 40 passengers were injured.

Five or six cars of the 13-car train were derailed.

The accident to the sleek streamliner took place at Ruddock, 31 miles northwest of New Orleans.

Ambulances were summoned to take the more seriously hurt passengers to hospitals at Hammond and Panchatoula.

The veteran conductor, J. H. Price, said he could not tell immediately what caused the wreck. He said the track was so torn up that it was impossible to say whether a broken rail was responsible, or whether a coupling broke.

Tobe Clements, one of the railroad's top-flight engineers, was at the controls.

Joseph L. Rickoll, chief clerk of the Illinois Central here, said the conductor's report indicated no one was seriously injured. Ambulances were summoned to the scene, however.

Ruddock is on a narrow, swampy isthmus between lakes Pontchartrain and Maurepas.

Rickoll said a coupling on the train broke, parting the last three cars from the others. The first two of the three detached cars left the rails.

ARTHUR R. FORD

Who has been named chancellor of the University of Western Ontario. Mr. Ford is editor-in-chief of the London Free Press.

Arthur R. Ford Named Chancellor Of Western U

London, Ont., Dec. 28 —(CP)— Arthur R. Ford, editor-in-chief of the London Free Press and one of Canada's best-known editors, yesterday was named chancellor of the University of Western Ontario, succeeding the late Hon. G. Howard Ferguson.

First London resident to become chancellor of Western, Mr. Ford was elected at a special joint meeting of the University Senate and Board of Governors yesterday afternoon.

He has been a member of the Board of Governors since 1928, active in many branches of university affairs. He took a leading part in the establishment a year ago of the university's school of journalism. He is also president of the Ontario Cancer Foundation.

Native of Point Edward, near Sarnia, and a graduate of Victory College, University of Toronto, Mr. Ford has long been chairman of the Arts Committee of the Board of Governors which recommends academic appointments. He has been chairman of several other committees.

At 66, he is a widely-travelled writer and active editor. He has served on the Stratford Herald, the Ottawa Journal, a New York financial daily, the Winnipeg Telegram, the Winnipeg Tribune and the Toronto News. He was assistant to the Canadian correspondent of the Times of London before he joined the Free Press. He headed a group of three Canadian newspapermen who visited Australia and New Zealand in 1942 on a good-will tour. He covered the 1945 United Nations conference at San Francisco and the assembly meeting which adjourned recently at New York. C. P. President.

He was president of The Canadian Press in 1942 and 1943.

Announcing the appointment, Dr. W. Sherwood Fox, president of the university, said: "Arthur Ford is eminently qualified for the chancellorship. In the first place he is keenly interested in the principles and the application of education and of higher education in particular. An editor of his long experience and possessing his breadth of vision is in a peculiarly advantageous position to appreciate the country's needs in this respect, and the nature of the impact made by the products of the educational system on our social and economic life.

"Mr. Ford has long been a governor of the university and has a peculiarly intimate knowledge of the university's history, present conditions and prospects. Through his broad range of acquaintances with the leaders of Canadian thought and business, he will be able to broaden the university's contacts, and open up new avenues for service. As himself, a friendly man, he will win friends for the university. Moreover the time has come when the City of London itself merits a representative in the chancellor's chair. Mr. Ford's election to this high post does an honor to the city which has done more than any other Canadian municipality to support the work of higher education.

Louis May Defend Heavyweight Title in April

Philadelphia, Dec. 28—(AP)— Heavyweight champion Joe Louis may defend his title "possibly in April" in Atlantic City, N.J., says Herman Taylor, Philadelphia fight promoter.

Taylor told a reported he had a definite title commitment with Mike Jacobs, the New York fistic entrepreneur, before the latter's illness.

"If Mike were well, I could tell you the day," Taylor insisted after indicating the championship bout would be held at the shore resort in April.

"But since Jacobs is still ill I can only hope that all plans can be carried out. If Jacobs goes to Florida, and regains his health, I thing everything will be all right."

Taylor said he and Jacobs had agreed to stage the title match in partnership in Atlantic City's huge Convention Hall.

WINDUP OF DAVIS CUP CHALLENGE ROUND HELD UP

Heavy Rains Cause Stoppage of Play Until Next Monday

By GALE TALBOT

Melbourne, Dec. 28. (AP)— The windup of the Davis Cup challenge round, postponed by heavy rains until Monday, was saved from being pure anti-climax today by the decision of Australia's John Bromwich to return to play.

Bromwich withdrew yesterday after he and Adrian Quist surrendered to the United States the trophy Australia has held since 1939 in losing the decisive doubles match to the American team of Jack Kramer and Ted Schroeder.

Schroeder had started the rout the previous day by trimming Bromwich at singles and Kramer followed through with a three-set victory over Dinny Pails.

The remaining two singles matches, which will have no bearing on the final outcome, were scheduled for today, but the Kooyong courts were drenched after an all-night rain, and heavy downpour as play was about to start forced the postponement.

Bromwich's change of mind caused non-playing captains Walter Pate of the American team and Gerald Patterson of the Aussies to shuffle and re-shuffle their lineups for the remaining singles several times.

When Bromwich withdrew, Pate substituted Gardnar Mulloy of Miami, Fla., for Kramer, who was to have faced Bromwich in the lineup. Patterson named Quist to fill the vacant singles spot on his squad.

Then it was announced the singles lineup would send Schroeder against Quist and Mulloy against Pails. Later another change was made when it was found such a switch was not permitted under cup rules. Approaching the time for today's match, the schedule stood Mulloy vs Quist and Schroeder vs Pails.

Now, with Bromwich back in the lineup, Mulloy instead of Schroeder will meet Pails.

Bromwich, who was struck in the groin by one of Schroeder's smashes in yesterday's doubles, changed his mind overnight and was anxious to play just before the postponement was announced.

Kramer didn't feel too happy over the switch since he had relaxed after the gruelling play of the previous days. He said he was "let down" and didn't believe he could do himself justice in meeting Bromwich Monday.

Coach Wants Gill Dodds to Tackle Two-Mile Run

By BILL KING

Boston, Dec. 28 (AP).—When flying Parson Gil Dodds, United States National mile champion and owner of the 4:06.4 indoor record, returns here about 10 days hence to come out of his track retirement, his coach, canny Jack Ryder, will attempt to persuade him to concentrate on the two-miles distance.

"Gil would be a chump to resume big games competition as a miler," said Ryder. "When he retired he was on the verge of breaking the 4:04 unaccepted indoor record Glenn Cunningham set on that six-lap Dartmouth track.

"Just think what the public will demand from him! They'll be expecting 4:06 miles and if he should win a 4:10 race, people will say he was loafing."

Delving into his 1946 indoor records, Ryder pointed out that the average big games two-miles winning performances were around 9:30.

OTTAWA SENS. DEFEAT TIGERS IN EXHIBITION

Motor City Crew in Second Place and Only Six Points Behind Leaders

Ottawa, Dec. 28 (CP).—Leaders of the Ontario Hockey Association senior loop and the Quebec Senior Hockey League acquired new respect for each other at a post-Christmas exhibition meeting here yesterday which ended with a hard-fought game on Auditorium ice which Ottawa Senators won 3-2.

Earlier, at a civic luncheon honoring the visiting Hamilton Tigers T. P. (Tommy) Gorman, veteran promoter and general manager of the Ottawa Auditorium Company, predicted that Hamilton and Ottawa would be linked in the near future in an Eastern Canada amateur league which probably would include two other Ontario teams.

President Joyce Gill of the Hamilton club said Hamilton would welcome the opportunity of branching out in the new proposed organization. It was understood a meeting would be held in the near future to discuss the proposed circuit, which might include Toronto Staffords and a team from Cornwall, as well as several Quebec teams.

Hamilton's Eastern Canada champions, previously unbeaten in 13 O.H.A. games, gave the Auditorium's 5,000 fans sizzling fare as both teams played as though the Allan Cup was in the balance.

Senators opened the scoring early in the first period in a ganging attack which gave Eddie Slowinski a goal and Connie Brown and Bobby Copp assists. Hamilton's Johnny Conick, assisted by Clarence Shillington, countered with a tying goal in the second but a rush by Brown and burly "Butch" Stahan again put Senators in the lead.

The teams again split goals in the third frame, with Alex Smart scoring for Ottawa and Shillington breaking away alone from the face-off with the final score.

CHICAGO STAGS DEFEAT HUSKIES

New York, Dec. 28 (AP). — Washington Capitols and New York Knickerbockers resume their old feud at the top of the Basketball Association of America's eastern division tonight but the spotlight is focussed this week end on the western half where the onrushing Chicago Stags are aiming at first place.

The Stags defeated the Huskies 88-80 at Toronto last night to move up a notch on the divisional leaders, St. Louis. A game and a half now separates the front-runners, and the week-end's games might very well tie it up.

Chicago meets third-place Cleveland Sunday night while St. Louis entertains the up-and-coming Philadelphia Warriors.

The Stags led all the way at Toronto, although the Huskies frequently displayed enough scoring punch to keep the contest interesting. At the end of the first quarter the Stags had only a two-point edge but by half-time lengthened their margin to 57-49.

CHRISTMAS AMNESTY VIEW QUOTED AT MOSCOW

London, Dec. 27 (Reuters).— Moscow radio last night quoted the Paris Soin newspaper for comment to the effect that the United States zone of Germany would "become a paradise for nazis" following a Christmas amnesty from the denazification laws for about 840,000 Germans in the zone.

Sports Roundup

By AL COLLETTI
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New York, Dec. 28 (CP).—More so than in any other professional sport, hockey would seem to offer the most inviting opportunity for the fixer. . . . Buy off the goalie and you can murder his team. . . . Yet in the 30-year history of the National Hockey League there has not been a known thrown contest, and but one lone attempt to bribe a player. . . . Frank Boucher, coach of the New York Rangers, says he doesn't know how serious the attempt to bribe the player was but it was brought to the club's attention quickly. . . . "A former professional boxer approached Lorne Chabot, the goal tender on our first team in 1926 and tried to bribe him," Boucher recalls. "Chabot immediately notified Lester Patrick and the case got a public airing.

"Suppose the gambler did reach the goalie. He could hardly get away with it because a fix could be spotted. For at no other position on the ice are the players rated so accurately."

What's in a name?

When Bernard (Toots) Shor, the former wrestler, opened a night spot in mid-Manhattan four years ago, he called it "Toots Shor" certain that it was the only name of its kind in the world. Today Toots Shor is famous as a gathering place for celebrities especially those from the sporting world. . . . Recently big Toots was rudely shaken when he learned that an enterprising Atlantic City, N.J. man, was operating a boardwalk restaurant under the name of "Toots Shores". . . . The case came up in Camden, N.J. court Friday and the Jersey owner, Bert Roland, was ordered to change his eatery's name. . . . Roland contended that he derived the name of his restaurant from his wife whom he calls "Toots", and from its location on the seashore. . . . A judge commented tartly: "The defendant's attempt to deceive the public is obvious."

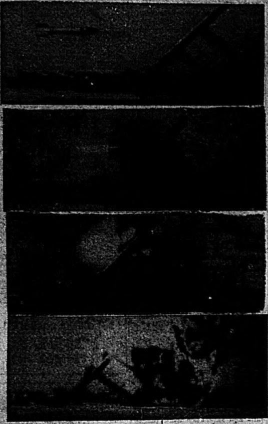
TARGET SMASHED IN NAVY ROCKET TEST



A rocket which helps give navy bombers the hitting power of a pre-war cruiser demonstrates its terrific punch on a steel target during navy rocket tests at Inyokern, Calif. The rocket, a "Tiny Tim" fired from a P-51 fighter plane suspended in a special "frame," is pictured in this sequence of photographs as it neared, pierced and demolished a steel target. This series is part of the record from a Bowen ribbon frame camera made during the test.

U.S. to Oppose Changes in West Frontier Germany

Will Accept Proposition Of Ceding Saar to France

By WES GALLAGHER

Berlin, Dec. 30 — (AP) — Reliable diplomatic sources predicted today that proposals for revision of Germany's western frontier, except for cession of the Saar to France, would be strongly opposed by the United States at the forthcoming German peace treaty negotiations.

It is expected, these sources said, that the United States will not only oppose France's claims to the Rhineland but will reject more modest border changes proposed by Holland and Belgium unless the countries concerned can present satisfactory proof that the people of the area concerned "genuinely desire" a change.

The position of the United States and others on the German border settlements is being outlined among the four major Allied powers here for presentation to the foreign ministers' council when it convenes in Moscow in March.

The American position, it was understood here, will be essentially the same as that outlined by State Secretary Byrnes of the United States in his Stuttgart policy speech last September.

Russia to Support U. S.

At Stuttgart, Byrnes announced opposition to any claims against Germany in the west — except for the French claim to the Saar. He further qualified this by saying that in return for the Saar, France should "readjust her reparations claims."

There have been strong indications during the past week that Russia will support the United States position with regard to Germany's western frontiers.

Should Denmark and Czechoslovakia make any territorial claims, the American position would be the same, sources here said.

France not only is expected to support the Dutch and Belgium claims for border revisions in the west but also is expected to oppose any suggestion by the United States that portions of the former Reich's agricultural areas in the east, now occupied by Poland, be returned to Germany.

Britain is understood to be sympathetic to the American view with regard to Germany's eastern frontier, but has been noticeably silent concerning the situation in the west.

FOUR FEET AT HUNTSVILLE

Huntsville, Dec. 30 — (CP) — Huntsville had more than its share of snow in the big weekend storm but this town doesn't mind. It is a winter sports centre in the Muskoka holiday region and snow is a vital commodity. Even so, residents were amazed to find nearly four feet of snow had fallen altogether and a person walking on one side of the street can't see a passerby on the other side.

Weather Synopsis

Toronto, Dec. 30—(CP)—Synopsis: The storm which moved northeastward across the lower lakes during Sunday is now centred over the Gulf of St. Lawrence, causing snow and high winds over most of the Maritimes and Eastern Quebec. In Ontario and the states south of the lower lakes a northerly flow of very cold air followed yesterday's storm. In the cold air, except for scattered light snowflurries, skies have generally cleared and winds decreased overnight. Temperatures are low over most of the continent this morning. White River was a cold spot in Ontario, reporting a temperature of 36 below zero at 4:30 a.m. No break in the current cold spell is in sight.

RUSSIA CHARGES A-ENERGY STILL MADE INTO ARMS

Rejects U.S. Proposal To Waive Veto And Calls for Outlawing Atomic Weapons

By FRANCIS W. CARPENTER

Lake Success, N.Y., Dec. 30. (AP)—Soviet Russia charged today that atomic energy is still being used exclusively for production of aggressive arms and called for urgent action to outlaw atomic weapons.

Simultaneously, Russia rejected the United States' proposal that the veto be waived on atomic matters, attacking that suggestion as actually a revision of the United Nations Charter.

Russia, in effect, reinstated its plan for controlling atomic energy. This asked the powers to outlaw atomic weapons by treaty and destroy existing stocks of bombs.

Immediately after Russia's position was stated by Andrei A. Gromyko, newly-appointed deputy foreign minister, Bernard M. Baruch, United States delegate, formally moved that the United States plan, incorporated in a report submitted today to the commission, be adopted as the Commission's report and sent to the United Nations Security Council.

Item-by-Item Discussion

"It is necessary," Gromyko said, "to distinguish the question concerning the prohibition of atomic and all other weapons adaptable to mass destruction, in order to take an urgent decison on it, since the atomic energy is still being used exclusively for the production of armaments, which, by their nature, are the weapons of aggression, and which by their very nature are destined for an attack mainly on large cities with numerous civil population."

Gromyko also declared that the United States' proposals were in conflict with the arms-limi-

Gen. De Gaulle Not a Candidate For President

By ROBERT C. WILSON

Paris, Dec. 30 (AP)— Gen. Charles De Gaulle said today he would not be a candidate for President of France's new Fourth Republic.

The French legislature is to elect the President Jan. 16 or soon after.

The wartime leader of the Free French and first head of France's post-war provincial government said he did not believe "according to my conscience" that it would be well for him to "preside, with impotence, over the impotence of the state."

De Gaulle said he was making his statement in answer to a question put to him about his future intentions.

The general has objected to the constitution of the Fourth Republic on the ground that it gives too much power to the legislature and too little to the executive.

The National Assembly (Lower House) and Council of the Republic (Upper House) adjourned last night until Jan. 14 Two days later they will meet in joint session at the Palace of Versailles to elect the first president of the new Fourth Republic.

Socialist Vincent Auriol is the only avowed candidate for the post up to now.

Poisoned Servants Found in Tomb Of Queen Who Ruled 5,000 Years Ago

Cairo, Dec. 30 —(AP)— Discovery of the tomb of a First-dynasty Egyptian who ruled the Nile Valley some 5,000 years ago was reported Saturday by Dr. Etienne Drioton, director of the Egyptian Antiquities Department. The tomb was said to be the largest yet discovered of the First dynasty.

Dr. Drioton said a seal on a vase bore the name of Queen Merneith but that it had not yet been proved that the queen was buried there. He expressed the belief that the grave had been looted by thieves in the Second dynasty.

The tomb, 68 feet long and 26 feet wide, is in the Sakkara district in the Nile Valley near Cairo. Another grave found nearby was reported to bear the name of King Menith of whom archaeologists said they had never heard.

The tomb of the Egyptian queen, who lived 2,000 years before King Tut-Ankh-Amen, provided evidence that 23 young servants had been sacrificed and buried with the queen to care for her in the land of the dead.

Walter B. Emery, English archaeologist who made the discovery recently for the Egyptian Antiquities Department, believes that the servants were poisoned.

The skeletons were found surrounding the queen's brick-walled burial chamber and showed no signs of violence. But any idea that they died from natural deaths and were buried one at a time is dispelled. Emery said, by the fact that the pavement over the Royal tomb extended unbroken over their graves and that pottery found beside their bones all appeared to be the work of the same hand.

Committee Levels Sharp Criticism Against Russia

By ALEX H. SINGLETON

Washington, Dec. 30 — (AP) — Charges of economic enslavement, political terrorism, religious repression, broken promises and ambitions for military power were levelled against Russia today by the special House of Representatives committee on post-war economic policy.

The committee report — the sharpest official United States criticism of Russia since the Soviet Union went to war with Germany — demanded that the United States exert "positive leadership" in European economic affairs.

Simultaneously it was asserted that if Russia actually is found to be using German war plants to rearm, the Western Allies should denounce the entire Potsdam Big Three agreement and demand that the Soviets "evacuate Germany completely."

First reaction to the committee's document came in the form of a protest against "headline hunters" by Representative Sol Bloom (Dem. - N.Y.), retiring chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, who said the committee should have submitted its evidence, "if it has any" to the state and war departments for investigation.

He contended the report would do "far more harm than good" in current diplomatic negotiations.

The State Department declined any immediate comment.

The unanimous committee report offered a number of specific recommendations, among them:

1. A review of the financial aspects of American occupation policy in "order to substitute productive and self-supporting economies in ex-enemy countries for the present method of supporting them with American money while they, in turn, are being drained by Russia and France."

2. Loans to American occupation authorities through the export-import bank to start the flow of raw materials necessary for industrial production.

3. An inquiry into restrictions on the movement of American businessmen.

4. A specific study of safeguarding the trade recommendations "with respect to the abuse of state trading practices, particularly by the state monopolies of nations who are not members" of the world bank, monetary fund or similar international organizations.

TRIALS OF ABOUT 27,000 GERMANS START IN JANUARY

Now Held in Civil Internment in British Zone of Germany

Berlin, Dec. 30 — (Reuters) — Trials of about 27,000 Germans now held in civil internment in the British zone of Germany by German courts will start at the end of January.

They are former members of organizations declared criminal by the Nuernberg War Crimes Tribunal — the leadership corps of the Nazi party, the Gestapo, the Security Police and the SS. Among them are a few women.

The future of thousands of other members of these organizations awaiting repatriation in Britain or elsewhere or at large in the British zone, is under consideration.

Special rules of procedure now are being drafted by the German Central Legal Office, which is responsible for the trials. It is estimated that between 100 and 130 German tribunals will be required to dispose of all the cases by the end of next year.

The tribunals will have power to impose a maximum sentence of 10 years' imprisonment and confiscation of property.

Finish in Year

A British spokesman said it was hoped to finish this series of trials by the end of the year, but the 27,000 were only a quarter of the people liable to charged in virtue of their membership of the convicted organizations.

The whole operation is being handed over to the Germans, with Karl Meyer of Oldenburg, a barrister who was one of Hitler's Jewish victims, as inspector general.

Each court will have a chairman with legal qualifications, and two lay assessorts.

Each camp will have a legal advice bureau, where internees who are lawyers can help their fellow internees to prepare their defence. Thus a man tried one day may have been legal adviser to another the day before, though he will not be allowed to appear as counsel in court.

Former members of the Nazi party are barred as defence counsel.

To insure the speediest possible justice, British experts are examining the German legal code with the aim of making changes which will simplify procedure.

HINTS AT WAY TO REALIZE AMBITION

Niagara Falls, Ont., Dec. 30 — (CP) — Arthur Trosti of Miami, Fla., hinted Saturday that he has devised a way to realize his life's ambition of walking across the swirling Niagara gorge on a wire 2,000 feet long and two inches thick. But both he and his manager, Edwin Brockman of Buffalo, N.Y., mindful of previous objections to Trosti's wire-walking proposal, were reluctant to divulge details.

CHURCHILL GREETS STALIN

London, Dec. 30 (AP). — Recent harsh words were forgotten when Winston Churchill sent birthday greetings to Prime Minister Stalin.

"All personal good wishes on your birthday, my wartime comrade," said a telegram from Churchill to Stalin which was released for publication Saturday.

"My warm thanks for your good wishes on my birthday," Stalin replied.

LABOR MINISTER SAYS PESSIMISTS ARE CONFOUNDED

Claims Employment Situation in Dominion "Remarkably Good"

Ottawa, Dec. 30 — (CP)—Canada's employment situation is "remarkably good, confounding the pessimists who prophesied widespread idleness, Labor Minister Mitchell said in a year-end message today.

Expressing hope for goodwill in industry in 1947, the minister said reconversion had moved with expedition, and "considering what we may have expected in the way of post-war problems, I feel that we have come through the first 16 months much better than might have been anticipated."

Reports from a labor group of employers showed employment this year was more than 45 per cent higher than in 1939. In the manufacturing industries, the increase was more than 60 per cent, while in logging it was more than 150 per cent.

"We are further fortified, of course, by having the protection of unemployment insurance against particulad situations of temporary unemployment. Before the war we had built up no social measure of this kind.

"Without being too optimistic, one may look to 1947 with confidence. Apart from seasonal setbacks which were to be expected in late 1946, the general level of employment shows no tendency to drop. On the contrary, there are factors which should make for a continuance of the present level. We still have many shortages which can be overcome only by intensive production."

Since V-J Day, Canada's economy has had to absorb into peacetime civilian occupation nearly 750,000 veterans, as well as 500,000 war workers. This task has been carried through almost to completion, "which is another exemplification of the resiliency of the Canadian people and particularly the good common sense in all walks of life.

UPROARIOUS DEBATE ON COCKTAIL LEGISLATION

Toronto, Dec. 30 (CP)—New Ontario liquor legislation providing for cocktail lounges was debated at an uproarious open forum in Bathurst Street United Church last night with R. M. Willes Chitty, K.C., President of the Toronto Property Owners Association, as the sole upholder of the change. The two other speakers, Controller Stewart Smith of Toronto and Rev. John Coburn, National Secretary of the Canadian Temperance Federation, attacked the revised legislation.

STOLEN TRUCK RECOVERED

Campbellford, Dec. 30 —(CP)—A brand-new one-ton truck owned by Joel McArthur reported stolen on Christmas Eve was recovered yesterday by Provincial Constable James McKenzie of Campbellford.

The constable, who had been checking all possible clues, located the vehicle in a ditch on a lonely side-road not far west of the town, the thieves having evidently abandoned it while trying to make the main highway. A wrecking crew brought the truck, which was not badly damaged, back to its owner.

CRIPPLING STORM FOLLOWED BY SUB-ZERO WAVE

Road, Rail And Air Communications Tied Up With Heavy Snow And Sleet Prevailing

(By The Canadian Press)

Below-zero from the Rockies to Quebec; snow and sleet and strong winds combined over the weekend to give most of Canada a year-end smash from Old Man Winter had interrupted road, rail and air communications and in Western Ontario brought the greatest wire communications tie-up of the past 20 years.

Clear, cold weather spread over most areas today.

But a new blow was moving up from the United States Atlantic seaboard, promising the Maritimes freezing rain on top of a snowfall of three inches or more.

Snow was much heavier is Quebec, Ontario and the west, as much as 26 inches falling in Northern Ontario. Roads were badly drifted by high winds in many parts of the country.

Low marks Sunday included 9 below at Edmonton, 27 below at Prince Albert and minus 35 at Regina. Winnipeg had 29 below at the worst and readings of five to 30 below continued eastward. London had 14 above and Toronto 11 above but north of these Ontario had an unofficial reading of 25 below at Bancroft and an official 16 below at Kapuskasing.

Highways that drifted badly and then were coated with a glare of ice were impassable at many spots. The wind reached 25 miles an hour in some parts of Ontario.

Typical of train delays were the runs through Sudbury, as much as four hours behind schedule, while bus services were cancelled Sunday in many areas.

While the wind, hail and rain lashed the streets taxicab companies pulled their cars off the road in Toronto.

The ferry service from Toronto to the islands across the harbor was discontinued Sunday when seacocks on the boats froze, and city tugs maintained a skeleton service.

Of Ontario highways a provincial department official said the general picture was "bad" but that with clear and cold weather gangs will be able to get to work on some of the worst drifts.

The Niagara Peninsula, like Western Ontario, was dotted with fallen poles and crashed tree branches. Cars in ditches were a common sight.

Few cars however ventured out on Ontario streets and roads Sunday. In the Galt area large sections were in darkness for a time Saturday night and power failures also occurred in the Vineland and Vinemount districts.

Guelph district was hard hit, with telegraph and telephone poles down in the blizzard. Cutters and sleighs carried worshippers to church Sunday.

Twelve inches of snow was recorded in the Halliburton district while in Eastern Ontario Cobourg, Belleville, Kingston and Cornwall all shared heavy snow and sleet.

Extremists Sought For Flogging of 4 British Army Men

Districts Along Palestine Coast Placed Out of Bounds

By CARTER L. DAVIDSON

Jerusalem, Dec. 30 — (AP) — British military authorities today announced that all Jewish communities along the Palestine coast had been placed out of bounds to the 30,000 British troops on duty in the area, as authorities pressed a search for the kidnappers who abducted a British major and 3 sergeants last night and gave each 18 lashes in what was described as a retaliatory move.

A military source predicted that authorities, fearing British troops might seek vengeance for the floggings, would keep the ruling in force at least until after New Year's Eve. The Provost Marshal's office said that "feeling is running high" in the military camps.

Jewish agency sources expressed regret for the floggings.

Meanwhile the British ship, Ocean Vigour, arrived in Haifa Harbor, bringing 750 Jewish refugees who were deported to Cyprus when they originally arrived here without immigration certificates.

Search for the perpetrators of last night's floggings continued, with British authorities and Palestine police participating in the manhunt.

Authorities said the major was whisked away by five armed men from the lounge of the Hotel Metropol in Nathanya, 40 miles north of Tel Aviv, where he was sitting with his wife. He was said to have been blindfolded, tied to a rack and beaten with a cane.

Meanwhile eight men, armed with sub-machine guns, abducted two sergeants from in front of the Armon hotel on Tel Aviv's waterfront. Forced into an automobile, they were taken to the outskirts of the all-Jewish city, where police said their abductors "took down their pants and administered 18 strokes apiece."

A third sergeant was flogged at Rishon le Zion, the historic Jewish settlement founded by Baron Rothschild, 20 miles south of Tel Aviv. He was said to be in serious condition in a military hospital.

Police, scouring the area in search of the floggers, reported that four Jews were arrested and one seriously wounded by gunfire when they tried to rush a roadblock near Lydda, East of Tel Aviv during the night.

Authorities said they found two five-foot rawhide whips, a Tommy-gun, two revolvers, a quantity of ammunition and three grenades in the car in which the arrested men were riding.

Police said the major, who was identified as Major Brett of the 6th Airborne Division, was stripped of his uniform by the floggers. He limped back to the hotel clad only in his underwear, an hour after the incident.

Police received an anonymous call notifying them where the sergeants could be found, but before they reached the scene the soldiers had walked to the police station.

26 Persons Left Homeless In Ottawa Fire

Ottawa, Dec. 30 — (CP)—Owners and officials probing through the blackened, ice-coated ruins of the Bon Accord Apartments today jotted up a heavy damage toll from a blaze which raged three hours yesterday and left 26 persons homeless.

The fire, which broke out about 4 p.m. in the basement of the business section block at the corner of Lisgar and Bank Streets, also resulted in serious smoke and water damage to stores on the ground floor.

Practically the entire Ottawa Fire Department was called out to fight the two-alarm blaze, which nevertheless spread under a high wind. Saturday the same firemen battled a $10,000 fire in the Ottawa paint works on Wellington Street and brought it under control despite the highly-inflammable merchandise.

The Bank Street fire, besides driving the tenants into bitterly cold weather, held up traffic along the main artery for hours and flooded the street with freezing water which menaced fire-fighting operations.

There were no injuries. Firemen rescued by ladder John Crowson, 85; Mrs. Mary E. Kealey, 72, and her sister, Miss Margaret Kealey, 82. The three had been trapped on the top floor.

Highlight of the fire was the rescue by Fire Chief Gray Burnett of his deputy, Alex Gardner. Gardner entered the building to direct firemen and fell down a flight of stairs, bruising himself painfully.

The fire chief, hearing cries for help, found Gardner injured and on his knees, unable to get to his feet. Water which had seeped from the upper storeys was up to his chest. Rescued, he later returned to the fire.

Accurate estimates of the damage were not available last night, although it was believed they might reach $150,000.

Worst Disruption In Twenty Years

Toronto, Dec. 30 — (CP)—The snow and sleet storm with high winds that raged over a wide area of Canada Sunday resulted in disruption of wire communications through Western Ontario that was described by one telegraph chief as "the worst in 20 years."

That was the description by the Canadian Pacific Telegraphs to the major breaks, just west and north of Toronto, which cut hundreds of lines. Sleet-laden poles were toppled in the wind and the Canadian National Telegraphs and Bell Telephone lines were affected equally with those of Canadian Pacific.

All three major companies had full staffs working throughout the weekend trying to bring some order into the system but it was a hand-to-mouth business most of the time. Lines were switched from one company to another as they could best handle traffic.

Oue in the countryside numerous linemen were hard at work but it was expected to be late Monday before anything approaching normal would be reached.

Anything Left of 1946 Bankroll Will Die Noisy Death New Year's Eve

(By The Canadian Press)

Thousands of Canadians—many of whom will wish they hadn't on New Year's Day — are going to send 1946 on its way in a traditional burst of glory. They will flock to night clubs, dances, movies and private parties and anything left of the 1946 bankroll will die a noisy death as the old year ends at midnight Tuesday night.

In Montreal the famous Normandie Roof will cater to between 700 and 800 celebrants who have paid $9.18 each to see a special floor-show and to forget their inhibitions with noise-makers, favors and dancing.

Other famed bistros in cosmopolitan Montreal have been sold out for weeks. Everyone seems to have the necessary money to do things right.

Torontonians are paying as much as $15 per person to do the same things Montrealers will be doing. The large hotels report "sold out" signs have been in evidence for weeks. It has been estimated that young swains can squire their lady loves to the better hostelries for an average of $30 including the corsage, the taxi and the "refreshment."

In Winnipeg prices are slightly lower than in the east but the number of celebrants per capita is just as high — no pun intended. House parties are planned on all sides but the down-town spots are booked to capacity.

Only hotel with dining and dancing in Regina is sold out and other dances around town will cater to capacity crowds. An ex-army, navy and air force officers club will hold a dance that will sparkle with a military flavor. Uniforms will be worn — or at least dinner jackets.

For the less boisterous citizens of Edmonton, a number of theatres are holding previews and seats will go for $3 down. The Macdonald Hotel is sold to capacity at $8 a couple and has been for weeks. Other dine and dance spots report capacity crowds expected.

In Vancouver prices are soaring and it will take $12.50 in most of the better bistros to get past the doorman. Some dance halls report tickets still available but they are going fast. Country clubs are booked to the hilt and innumerable private parties are scheduled.

It will be a noisy, hilarious welcome for 1947 and from thousands of homes across the country will go the cry "Never Again"—on New Year's morning, that is.

MOTION IS DEFEATED

London, Ont., Dec. 30 — (CP)—A move requiring individual reaffirmation by members on moral issues such as drinking, smoking and boy and girl relationships was defeated Saturday night in the first division of the 26th Older Boys' Parliament now in session at the University of Western Ontario. Sessions continue to Dec. 31. A budget of $15,000, double that of last year, was passed Saturday afternoon.

QUICK-MINDED MOTORIST AVERTED SERIOUS ACCIDENT

A quick-minded motorist averted what might have been a serious accident at the corner of Victoria avenue and Pinnacle street shortly after seven o'clock this morning.

The sidewalks piled high with snow and pedestrians were forced to resort to the roadway which had been cleared by city snowplows. There was a brisk wind blowing and snow drifted across the road covering treacherous slippery footing.

The young lady who was hurrying to work lost her footing as she turned the corner and failed to see the approaching car. The driver, however, was alert and slued his vehicle to a stop, missing the fur-coated young lady by inches. She was unhurt but a trifle scared and waved her thanks to the driver who smiled back a trifle white of face and slowly went on his way.

TOW TRUCKS USED TO START MOTORS

With below-zero weather serving to make motors difficult to start, local garages did a land office business with their tow trucks on Monday morning. Every garage in the city operating tow-trucks reported frequent calls from owners who could not coax their autos to life and cars receiving a "tow" were a frequent sight on the streets.

NO DELIVERY BY LETTER CARRIERS ON NEW YEAR'S DAY

Postal service on New Year's Day will be very restricted, according to Postmaster J. C. Waddell at the Belleville office.

There will be no delivery by letter carriers, rural couriers or stage services, while the post office lobby and wickets will be closed all day. There will be but one letter box collection in the evening.

Mails will be received and despatched as usual, however, and special delivery service will be given.

HOUND AWAITS OWNER

City Poundkeeper Thomas Thorne has a brown and white male hound in custody which was picked up over the week-end. The hound was wearing no collar or tag and will be kept the customary time awaiting his owner.

ONE MINOR BLAZE

Only one alarm was answered by the local fire department over the week-end, this being to the T. J. Holland property on Pinnacle street where a minor blaze was reported in the flooring beneath the furnace. The trouble was quickly remedied with little damage being reported.

LARGE CROWD ENJOYS FIRST INDOOR SKATING

One of the largest crowd in years enjoyed the first indoor skating of the year at the Hume Arena on Saturday afternoon and evening. On a near-perfect sheet of ice, the gaily-caparisoned throng swung over the surface to the music from the public address system. While the afternoon attracted a majority of young people, the evening session was marked with a larger than usual throng of more mature skating enthusiasts.

Passenger Traffic Up; Airmail Service Down

Montreal, Dec. 30 — (CP) — Passenger traffic over Trans-Canada Air Lines facilities grew rapidly in 1946, President H. J. Symington said in a year-end review last night, but air mail volume declined and was a matter of "serious concern" to the company. The airline president said a new contract between the company and the post office department based compensation on the amount of mail carried rather than on miles flown as previously, resulting in less revenue.

He was a successful pastor and was held in high regard by the members of his congregation and by Trenton citizens in general. His death has brought much regret to many friends.

Surviving him are his wife; two daughters, Mrs. L. M. Johnston, New Hamburg, Ont., and Miss Margaret L. McKee, Toronto; one sister, Mrs. A. S. Hammill, Calgary, Alta.

Rev. A.M. Laverty Named Chaplain Queen's University

Believed to be the first appointment of its kind in Canada, Rev. A. M. Laverty, B.A., B.D., of St. Paul's United Church, Stirling, has been made chaplain to Queen's University at Kingston with duties to commence as of January 1st. It is understood that Mr. Laverty will receive a professorship at the university.

Successor to Mr. Laverty as pastor at St. Paul's in Stirling will be Rev. Ralph W. Barker, M.A., S.T.B., of Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, who it is expected will take over his new duties on February 1st.

A native of Toronto, Mr. Laverty came to St. Paul's in 1940 and in 1942 joined the chaplain service of the Canadian Army serving overseas for three and one half years as chaplain with the 2nd. Canadian Corps, Signals, and with the 4th. Field Regiment, R.C.A. He returned to Stirling late in 1945.

Although his duties at the university will commence with the new year, Mr. Laverty will keep his family at Stirling until accommodation has been arranged in Kingston. It is also expected he will have charge of several services at St. Paul's until his successor arrives.

The position of university chaplain is quite common at the larger universities in the United States, but Mr. Laverty's appointment to Queen's University is believed to be the first such appointment at a Canadian university.

Five Below Zero Registered in City During the Night

Residents of the city and district experienced a third phase of heavy winter weather today as temperatures plummeted to sub-zero marks in the wake of heavy snow and sleet storms.

With the mercury hovering around the five below zero mark at eight-thirty this morning, the lowest mark of the night, a shivering citizenry awakened to brilliant sunshine with little wind but a decided snap and sparkle to snow and air.

Bancroft is reported to have borne the brunt of the frigid attack as the northern village buried beneath twenty-six inches of snow, blew upon frosty fingers with the temperature dropping as low as 25 below zero.

With a let-up in the fury of the wind which accompanied the violent sleet and snow of the past two days, snowplows of the city, county and province made better headway in clearing drifted streets, highways and byways which were clogged by drifting snow despite consistent efforts of clearing crews and equipment.

Bus services were resumed although traffic conditions on the highways were heavy. The big vehicles plunged through drifting snow yesterday and Saturday and although some schedules were late the service was maintained.

Train schedules were delayed on Saturday during the heavy sleet storm with main line crack passenger trains being from two to three hours late.

Although telegraph and telephone services were disrupted in Western Ontario to some extent due to frozen sleet and snow causing damage to wires and poles, no hold-up in service was experienced here, company officials said. Everything was normal today.

ABBOTT FORESEES SIZEABLE SURPLUS

Ottawa, Dec. 30 — (CP)—Finance Minister Abbott, in a year-end review of matters under his jurisdiction, said yesterday that a balanced budget for the 1946-47 fiscal year "is practically certain and a sizeable surplus not improbable. It now is clear that we shall spend less than even the very much reduced amounts forecast in the budget, and take in more by way of revenue," he said.

Early Ambitions of Young Boy Pay Off in Rich Dividends in Later Life

Harry Hill, Who Recently Disposed of Valuable City Property, Started Career as Blacksmith

"I'll give you twenty-five cents a week and your dinner, and that is better pay than what apprentices like you should be getting."

"All right, sir, I'll take it."

That conversation took place in a Cannifton blacksmith shop in the year 1892 between blacksmith John Palmer, and the then sixteen-year-old Harry Hill, who later became one of the best-known smiths in this district, a mayor of this city and at present a well-to-do retired resident of Belleville.

Palmer was right regarding the pay, Mr. Hill reminisced today. Blacksmith apprentices at that time were paid $20 and their board for the first year; $30 for the second year and $50 for the third.

MR. HARRY HILL

Long Daily Walk

At that time Mr Hill was living with his parents the late Mr. and Mrs. David Hill at Corbyville and night and morning he trudged through all kinds of weather a distance of two miles to the smithy.

Like all boys, Mr. Hill had conjured visions of what he wanted to be "when he grew up." Locomotives had something of a thrill for him, and racing fire engines horse-drawn with all their color and excitement had no allure for the boy.

In his younger days he was attracted to the smithies. Day in and day out he watched sparks fly from white-hot iron as brawny smiths pounded shoes and other equipment into shape. He was fascinated by the glowing fire that slowly heated steel into something that could be turned into a desired shape by the clever hands of the smith.

"That" he decided, "is what I will be when I grow up."

But he didn't wait that long.

Finished Schooling

He wanted to leave school before he reached the "fourth book" but his parents said "no." So Harry waited impatiently until he had "passed the entrance" then rushed pell-mell to the nearest smithy.

He worked for John Palmer for six months. Then his parents moved from Corbyville to Madoc. Young Harry was not to be left behind so he reluctantly said good-bye to his beloved smithy work and went to Madoc where he secured employment in the Bob Casement hardware store for the magnanimous salary of $3.75 per week.

But he had not forgotten his early love, and after three years in the hardware store became associated with Blacksmith John Brown, Madoc, at a wage 25 cents less per week than that he received in the store.

But young Hill had been endowed with something more than ambition to become a successful blacksmith. He was gifted with foresight and saw the wide possibilities of a business of his own.

So, some eighteen months later, he took matters into his own hands and acquired a smithy at Melrose. But in order to do this he had to borrow money. He secured $100 at 10 per cent from a bank on a note backed by his father and went to work.

He was highly successful, and some nineteen years later, in 1914 to be exact he disposed of his property in Melrose and came to Belleville with $1,900 in his pocket.

He installed a small shop in a shed at the rear of the old Ackerill feed stables, meanwhile looking around for another business.

A year later he bought the Phippen's property at 145-149 Front Street which he recently disposed of to a Belleville restaurateur, (the story of the deal appears elsewhere in to-day's paper), and conducted a highly successful business until 1936, when he sold the business and equipment and retired from active smithy life.

While he believed in banks and interest, he had an early yen to own real estate. "Almost every dollar I put away I invested in some sort of property," he said.

That early foresight proved to be of value, for early investors in property are reaping good dividends in these hectic days.

Number of Men Face Arrest On Illegal Trafficking

Ottawa, Dec. 30 —(CP)—An "undisclosed" number of men shortly will face arrest by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police as a result of illegal trafficking in butter coupons stolen from the E.B. Eddy Company plant in Hull, Que., the Ottawa Citizen said in a newspage story today.

No figure of the number of persons involved could be obtained, but the paper quoted a prices board official as saying there would be "considerably less than 50 persons involved."

It was believed the prices board might issue a statement early this week setting out in detail the position of the board as far as thefts are concerned.

Both R.C.M.P. and Prices Board officials emphasized that the E. B. Eddy company was in no way involved in the removal of the butter coupons from the company premises.

The coupons were stolen from the company plant, where they were slated for destribution in huge pulping machines. Some of the persons involved were said to have been working in the plant and it was through them the coupons had been removed and sold.

Thousands of the coupons were distributed throughout the Ottawa Valley and in certain areas in Quebec with the result that hundreds of pounds of butter were purchased with illegal coupons investigations were started several months ago when the prices board discovered coupons were turning up that obviously did not come from authorized sources.

Police traced the source of the coupons to the Eddy factory, which had been used by the Prices Board since 1945 to destroy used coupons.

Prices Board inspectors had been taking the coupons to the plant and saw they were placed in the shredding machines and the power turned on.

Says Atomic Issue Must be Settled on International Basis

Detroit, Dec. 30 (AP) — Kent Cooper, Executive Director of The Associated Press, said in a broadcast interview yesterday that "no real advances can be made, no real security can be achieved unless the atomic issue is settled on an international basis." 'European States' Plan by Churchill Brings Comment

London, Dec. 30 (CP)—Though Winston Churchill has been silent on the matter, he has been working "behind the scenes" to further his plan for a United States of Europe, the political correspondent of the Liberal Manchester Guardian said today.

The Guardian story referred to the first of two copyrighted articles by Mr. Churchill which appeared in the Conservative Daily Telegraph this morning, elaborating his suggestion of a United States as a means of stopping wars.

The article, in which Britain's wartime prime minister suggests that France should give the lead by extending the hand of forgiveness to Germany and expresses the opinion that the United States of America should further this design since the Atlantic Ocean no longer is a sure barrier, was written originally for Colliers Magazine.

The Guardian's political correspondent said that while Mr. Churchill has been silent on this matter since his return from Switzerland, he has not been idle and hoped to obtain a public statement of support from the British government.

Directed Against Churchill

Since that has not been made, the Guardian correspondent said, Mr. Churchill has gone off on another track. The story suggested that one of the difficulties hindering Mr. Churchill's suggestion of a Franco-German reapproachment was shown by the bitter French comment on Dr Schumacher's recent visit to Britain.

Further comment was forthcoming from "Analyzer," who Sunday renewed criticism of any plan for a "western bloc" with a broadcast particularly directed against Mr. Churchill.

Reviewing progress towards peace made during 1946, the commentator said: "Churchill and his like in England and the United States — whom Generalissimo Stalin called the instigators of a new war—were certainly busy throughout 1946.

"The London 'Daily Telegraph and Morning Post' thinks the eve of 1947 just the time to renew the campaign for Churchill's plan for a merger of western Europe, i.e. a western bloc, with Great Britain at its head."

Mr. Churchill made his appeal for a United States of Europe in his speech at Zurich last September.

New Congress May Limit Term Of President

Washington, Dec. 28 (AP). — Leaders of the new Republican majorities in Congress today planned speedy action on proposa' that future United States presidents be limited to six or eight years in office.

Senator Hugh Butler (Rep-Neb.) told a reporter he will "have a resolution ready to drop in the hopper" soon after Congress assembles next week, making two terms the maximum presidential tenure.

House Republican leaders planned an identical step.

Even if Congress approves a term limitation and it is signed by the President it may take several years to become effective because all pending proposals have been offered as constitutional amendments.

If approved by the Congress and the President they then must be ratified by three-fourths of the States and this always has required considerable time.

The late President Franklin D. Roosevelt shattered the tradition against third terms in 1940 and then went on to win a fourth in 1944.

OLD BOOK BOUND IN HUMAN SKIN OWNED IN B.C.

Bookseller Says Binding Books in Human Skin Was Method Popular in Middle Ages

Vancouver (CP)—William Dorbils, proprietor of a small, downtown bookstore, has a book which literally has that "human touch." But then, it should have — it's bound in human skin.

The book, which he says is the biggest of its type he has seen in 35 years as owner of a bookstore, weighs about 10 pounds and measures 16 inches long and 10 inches wide. It is completely bound with a waxen yellow cover of human skin, the pores of which are still discernible.

Entitled "Lexicon-Graeco Latinum," which translated means Greek and Latin lexicon, it was compiled by Joannis Scapulae in 1615.

Mr. Dorbils bought the book from a California collector.

"Wrapping precious tomes in human skin is not new," he says, in fact it was quite the thing in the Middle Ages.

"Mostly the French and Germans did it to counter sacrilege. If a thief stole pewter from a church altar, he was flayed alive. Then his skin was sliced and used as binding for holy books.

"Apart from ivory," Mr. Dorbils says, "there is nothing more durable than the human skin. It contains a certain oiliness which makes it a wonderful preservative."

Deep-sea Fishing Crew, Draggers Out on Strike

Lunenburg, N.S., Dec. 30 (CP)—Most of the deep-sea fishing schooners and draggers which have made this south shore port famous were tied up at their docks today as the three-year-old Canadian Fishermen's and Fish Handlers' Union (T.L.C.) called a strike among crews of 30 vessels to win a new agreement with ship owners.

Unless the vessels, which came home for an overhaul while crews spent Christmas with their families, put to sea again within a week, the whole Nova Scotia fishing industry—a source of livelihood for 3,000—is likely to be affected.

The decision to strike was taken at a union meeting here Saturday when representatives of 500 deep-sea union fishermen voted "that all fishing cease until the owners indicate a change of attitude that will make possible the conclusion of a suitable agreement."

Meanwhile, vessel owners said they had not been notified officially of the strike. H. C. Meade, Union Secretary, said they would be advised today.

Mr. Meade said last night that "95 per cent of the deep-sea fishermen are members of the union and they are determined not to go to sea again until an agreement with the owners is reached."

It was considered doubtful whether the unorganized fishermen could maintain the flow of fresh fish necessary to keep shore processing plants operating at capacity.

Chief issue of the strike is the fishermen's demand for a 60-40 "lay"—a 60 per cent share in the proceeds of their vessels catches, compared with the current 40 per cent.

It was the second general tie-up of the fishing fleet in eight years. In 1938 captains and fishermen walked ashore demanding an increase in the price of fish.

At that time they formed the fishermen's federation, which was succeeded in 1943 by the C.F.U., later to merge the Fish Handlers' Union.

Rival Governors Of Georgia Battle For Vacant Post

By ROMNEY WHEELER

Atlanta, Dec. 30 —(AP)— Two rival governors of Georgia, with offices less than 60 feet apart, may result from an unprecedented scramble over the late Eugene Talmadge's fourth term.

The rivals would be Herman Talmadge, 33-year-old son of the dead governor-elect; and his political foe, Governor Ellis Arnall, incumbent. A high Talmadge source said the situation is expected to arise if the legislature designates Herman to become governor and if Arnall refuses to surrender his office.

Talmadge lieutenants claim 155 pledges of legislative support—26 more than a clear majority of House and Senate. But Arnall has indicated he regards such a move as illegal. But Arnall has to retain office unless allowed to resign in favor of the lieutenant-governor-elect, M. E. Thompson.

Talmadge leaders originally planned to impeach Arnall if he refused to yield, but they abandoned this. Now, they are understood from trustworthy sources to plan merely to by-pass Arnall, allowing him complete freedom of the capitol and possession of his office — but no money.

Herman Talmadge would be sworn in as Georgia's youngest governor in history and take possession of a desk in the rotunda, beneath the capitol's dome. There he would conduct state business in disregard of his rival.

Key to the Talmadge strategy would be control of state purse-strings.

All warrants must be signed by three persons — State Auditor B. E. Thrasher, State Comptroller-General Zack Cravey, and State Treasurer George Hamilton. Thrasher and Cravey, a Talmadge lieutenant, are understood to be ready to recognize Herman as legal governor if he is elected.

Hamilton, who broke with 'Gene Talmadge over finances in 1936 and was thrown out of office by the National Guard, has indicated he propably would accept warrants for most state departments but might question those for the governor's office if there are rival claimants.

Nova Scotians Liable for Prov. Income Tax

Halifax, Dec. 30 (CP). — The Nova Scotia government has power today for the first time to impose income tax by virtue of the proclamation of an almost forgotten law passed in 1919.

A reliable source said the 27-year-old measure was brought out so the provincial administration would be assured of a source of revenue in case of failure of negotiations with the Dominion government for a new financial agreement replacing the wartime pact which expired Nov. 30.

The action was taken while the province awaited a reply from Prime Minister Mackenzie King to Premier Angus L. MacDonald's Dec. 18 letter urging Ottawa to call another Dominion-Provincial conference and make the provinces a new offer.

Premier MacDonald, on a visit to the Bahamas, was not available for comment on the latest move by his government which has declined to accept the financial proposals offered in the June 27 federal budget.

But a reliable informant said the action means "that an old taxation bill is being proclaimed to inform Ottawa that we are prepared, if necessary, to collect provincial taxes rather than submit to an unfair agreement."

Wanted To Be Prepared.

The province, this source said, did not contemplate using the old legislation if a fair agreement could be reached with Ottawa. But it wanted to be prepared to meet any eventuality.

The Halifax Herald, whose reporters dug through the old legislation, said it allowed an exemption of $1,000 for single persons and $2,000 for married persons.

Corporations, partnerships, companies and the like were also subject to the levy which, the newspaper said, ranged from one half of one per cent to a combination of basis, supertax and surtaxes that might amount to about a quarter of a person's income.

So little was thought of the measure, the Herald added, that in 1924 when the statutes were revised, the legislation was left out of the printed volume except for a reference note and the statement "not proclaimed".

The Canadian Press' informant said that if a new agreement between the Dominion and Nova Scotia were not reached by Mar. 1, when the legislature was expected to convene, a new bill would be provided, revising and modernizing the measure.

A Scot Asks If Scots Are Less Intelligent

(From the Edinburgh Scotsman)

The people of Scotland are becoming healthier, but existing evidence seems to show that the level of general intelligence is falling, according to Dr. F. A. E. Crew, FRC, FRCPE, professor of public health and social medicine in the University of Edinburgh.

Professor Crew said children were taller and heavier than were their parents at the same age, life expectancy for the young and the middle-aged had been increasing, infant mortality—in respect of which Scotland had occupied so unenviable a place amongst the nations —was falling in significant fashion, the marriage rate and the birth rate had risen, and the population had increased in total size.

Remarking that there still remained one cause for some considerable anxiety, Professor Crew made this observation:— "Such evidence as exists would seem to show that the level of general intelligence of the people, as measured by the yardsticks of the educationist and the educational psychologists, had been failing.

"Should this prove to be the case in Scotland, then we are indeed a sick people, however complete our conquest of tuberculosis, rheumatism and such like diseases may become."

It seemed that an increasing proportion of our population would not be capable of fully enjoying and exploiting the environmental opportunities that were to be provided. Prenatalist policies must consider not merely numbers but also the quality of the children whose entrance into Scotland was to be welcomed.

BEER NOT EXPECTED TO SHOW UP

Looking Ahead in Ottawa

(By the Ottawa staff of The Canadian Press.)

Ottawa, Dec. 30 —(CP)— Supreme Court of Canada decision on the validity of the Saskatchewan Farm Security Act, originally expected to be delivered before the year end, will not be handed down before February, it was learned today.

The validity of the Act was contested at November hearings of the Court by the federal government and the Dominion Mortgage and Investments Association on the grounds that in conflicts with federal legislation.

A section of the Act, passed by the C.C.F. government of Saskatchewan in 1944, provides that in any year in which a farmer's crop yield is less than $6 per acre, the principal owing on all mortgages or bills of sale shall be reduced by the amount of the interest due. At the same time the date for the final payment of principal would be postponed a year.

Saskatchewan's arguments in suport of the Act were backed by H. J. Wilson of Edmonton, counsel for the attorney-general of Alberta.

Reason for the delay in handing down the judgment was not disclosed. It is known, however, that the court had a particularly large number of cases to deal with before beginning a study of the arguments in the Saskatchewan Act case.

Besides Chief Justice Thibaudeau Rinfret, the court's Chief Justice, has only recently returned from a month's trip to France.

Income and other tax changes, forecast in the budget last June 27, will come into effect Jan. 2 and, on the basis of government figures, between 550,000 and 600,000 persons will drop from income tax payment lists.

Under changes to become effective the exemptions for single persons will be increased from $660 to $750, and those for married persons from $1,200 to $1,500.

The system of exemptions for dependants will be changed so that an allowance of $300 will be made for dependants over 16. All dependents under 16 will be considered in receipt of family allowances which average $72 a year per child. In addition to the allowances an exemption of $100 will be allowed for each child under 16.

The wartime provision under which a husband retained his marital status for income tax purposes even though his working wife was in receipt of more than $660 a year will be repealed. In future married allowance of $1,500 will be reduced by what the wife makes above $250. If she makes more than $750 both husband and wife will be taxed as single persons.

Business concerns, other than co-operatives, will benefit from tax reductions. Co-operatives will become subject to taxation for the first time.

The corporation tax paid by business concerns will be cut from 40 to 30 per cent. Excess profits will be cut from 20 to 15 per cent on all income above 116 2/3 per cent of standard profits.

On announcing the tax changes Rt. Hon. J. L. Ilsley, former Finance Minister, said that as a result of the changes more than 500,000 persons who paid income tax in 1946 will wind up 1947 without having to pay any tax.

Searchers Brave Cold to Seek Missing Girl

St. Catharines, Dec. 30 —(CP)—Scattered groups of volunteer searchers in St. Catharines and surrounding sections of Lincoln County braved cold weather today to hunt for clues to the disappearance a week ago of nine-year-old Marion Rusnak.

"There were no developments at the week-end," said a senior police officer. He added that the police still were receiving "dozens of tips" from people who sought to assist them. Every clue, no matter how slender, was investigated.

Mr. and Mrs. John Rusnak continued to hope that their daughter still was alive. She was last seen in the company of a tall, dark stranger who is thought to have enticed her away from home by promising to buy her an extra Christmas present for her baby brother.

Last week saw hundreds of citizens form posses to help police conduct a house-to-house search in St. Catharines. Other groups scoured the nearby countryside for clues and extended the hunt to adjacent towns and villages. They found the wrapping paper from a Christmas parcel the little girl carried at the time of her disappearance but turned up no trace of the child.

Winter Comes

The weather we have always with us, infinite in variety and at the same time assuring that there will be winter, spring, summer and autumn, however long delayed.

The year 1946 is closing, a year of generally fine weather, from the beginning of January for last winter was not extremely cold, the spring was a little late but had all the marks of spring, the summer too had its appeal, the autumn was unusually mild and the early part of what is called winter was also very moderate, so much so that up to a few days before Christmas there was every appearance of a green Christmas. But a white Christmas is the normal and natural condition for this country and so it came to pass but with a light coating of snow.

Now that Christmas has gone for another year, a rugged Canadian storm took possession of the country at the weekend with a heavy snowfall of very heavy snow, mixed with sleet, and accompanied by winds causing blockade conditions in many parts of the Province as motors found difficulty in making their way through the deep crusted snow covering sheets of ice on the roads. Then the storm halted and the work of clearing the roads, avenues and streets began.

This is winter and that is what Canadians expect and rather relish except for the inconvenience of getting about.

Modern equipment can cope with winter's storms today. Many centres have snow plows for use on roads and walks. Belleville has two plows for walks and has ordered more equipment which it will have when production gets into its full stride. The war helped in developing the public mind for ways and means of keeping traffic open. Two years ago in the last year of the struggle Western Ontario was struck by the worst storm in many decades and many cities were surprised for they had not adequate equipment to cope with the winter's worst blasts. Some now have equipment and will buy more and others have been endeavoring to secure equipment. Storms in the future will not have the same threat as they have had in the past.

The use of snow plows for walk clearance is welcomed everywhere it is undertaken. It is of invaluable assistance in getting the roads cleared for early workers. It relieves individuals of a heavy task of clearing walks before their premises and that to older people is of a great importance for the unusual exercise of shovelling snow is in too many cases dangerous to the personal safety.

Over to The New

Man is turning from the old calendar to the new and from the old almanac to the latest edition for the year's end and the coming of the new year are at hand. Calendars keep many pictures before the household for a twelvemonth and the days and weeks of the month of the year. The almanac brings its calendar too, along with the events for which the individual days are famous in births, deaths and major happenings which have exerted an influence upon peoples and nations in the past. Also in the almanacs are the probabilities for the year, along with homely philosophy dealing with the affairs of life, as they relate to people in city, town and countryside and with humorous anecdotes and many other matters.

Both these have an irresistible appeal to the public. Calendars are needed in every house and there are few homes in which the calendar is not examined many a time in planning for gatherings, for holidays, in counting how much money will come in by such and such a date and even for the day of the week and date. On its twelve sheets are the marks of the days that go to make up the full year, which adds another to one's age. In the almanac there is the supreme attraction of guessing at the weather a day ahead or a week in advance or almost a year ahead. This makes one take up the almanac and read it from beginning to the end. At the same time it gives in its own way records of historical events in the anniversaries it records. But for many a child and adult the almanac has brought its mystery in the signs of the zodiac, the astronomical calculations, the hours of the sun's rise and setting, the phases of the moon, the list of dates of fixed and movable festivals, the time of the appearance of the planets to human ken, the occurrence of eclipses of sun and moon and such information that never fails to draw one to a corner and an arm chair with the almanac in hand.

The almanac of 1946 is discarded already and the new 1947 edition is taken up while the new calendar too is already in place on the desk or on the wall with its foremost sheet open to all eyes telling that on Wednesday of this week, New Year's comes, the first of 1947.

Master in Comedy And Humor

One of the great figures who added to the mirth and gaiety of millions, W. C. Fields, has passed. In spite of trials and difficulties he never lost the sense of the humorous and ridiculous. Even to the last he quipped with all his brilliance of wit and good fun. He was always a showman and the world loved him.

Fields, who played in films based upon the novels of Charles Dickens, acted the part of such characters through his robust sense of humor and vitality. So full of the element of orginality and the sense of the ridiculous was he that he gave free scope to ad libbing in most roles; in fact he said the only lines he followed truly were those of Dickens, no doubt because they were so apt and so in harmony with Fields' own sense of fun and humor. His success in the role of Micawber in "David Copperfield" in the movies was one of his greatest.

He was highly endowed by nature, which gave him a face worth a king's ransom to a comedian. His highly expressive face with its bulbous nose, says a critic in the New York Times, was invaluable. To this must be added a fine comedy voice and "a profound capacity for punishment." While he could outslap-stick the best slap-stick artists and out-clown most funny men of the stage, circus or screen, "he possessed just a little more than his contemporaries. He was a master mimic, inimitable in his droll asides and improvisor and innovator of new tricks."

Fields, whose real name was Claude William Dukenfield, came to the top by the hard way. His success is a proof of his stoutness of heart. In the face of difficulties which would have crushed a lesser man he triumphed over the world's buffetings to win a supreme place on the stage. He had run away at the age of eleven from his home where his father reigned with severity. Then followed the life of a homeless waif, he was in rags as a boy, took up juggling and after infinite practice found a job with the theatre. He juggled his way through Europe and South Africa. Returning to the United States he entered the Ziegfeld Follies to fill in between acts but his part was cut down and after a time he went into the silent pictures. Here his training in pantomime was of the greatest value in his development for stage and silent and sound screen.

The theatre will see him no more but theatre goers and film fans will remember him among the artists who enriched life with a sense of wit and humor in the depiction of which he was a master.

Power of Garlic

Garlic now reigns unchallenged as the vegetable with the greatest knockout punch says The Vancouver Province.

That humble onion no longer needs to hide its authority under peppermints, mouthwashes or excuses. Science has elevated it to the same medicinal level as penicillin and sulpha drugs and given the garlic lover the right to breathe in the best circles.

From Moscow comes the good news that scientists have found the phytoncides of onion garlic can be used to kill staphylococci, streptococci, Asiatic cholera vibrio, dysentery bacteria and the diphtheria bacillus.

Of course, nobody will want to run the danger of those little bugs, and it is beginning to look as though everyone, blue bloods and all, will have to go for garlic.

And anyway, if everybody eats it, who will know the difference?

THE PASSING YEAR

The year is old; a few more hours
And it is done with bickering powers,

With a human failure and success,
And all man's innate selfishness.

A few more hours of life, and then
The Old Year leaves this world of men,

Forever more to be a date
Of human dealings, small or great.

A few more hours Old Year to run,
Then just the tale of all we"ve done,

The record brief, where will be seen
How strong and weak our age has been.

Fuel Position In Britain Major Problem

By JOHN DAUPHINEE
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Dec. 30. (CP Cable)—Weekend deliveries of coal by road and rail have temporarily eased fuel-short factories in some parts of England today. Indications are that many industrial firms, faced with the prospect of closing or curtailing production, will open their doors to normal production.

But the fuel position, although eased, still remains a major problem and it is expected that the situation will be the main concern of Cabinet Ministers, most of whom returned to their Whitehall desks today.

Fuel chiefs in the industrial centres of the north and the midlands estimated that about 1,000 workers would be turned away from plants today because of coal shortages.

A threatened close down of factories in Lancashire and Yorkshire has been averted by last minute improvisations but the situations in both counties still is regarded as "grim".

Coal From Colliery

Fresh proposals for conserving coal will be considered in detail by a cabinet meeting Tuesday or Wednesday, and emergency orders diverting supplies from luxury trades to essential industries are expected.

Meanwhile badly-needed coal has been moved from colliery sidings to coal wharves in Lancashire and Yorkshire cotton towns. It was announced that 11 of 12 Blackburn cotton mills which closed down Saturday on account of the coal shortage will re-open.

A major portion of the blame was placed on transport holdups in moving dwindling stocks of coal from mines to factories. The loss of coal through absenteeism has been estimated at 500,000 tons. The fuel shortage also threatened to affect production in Scotland as well as Northern Ireland. Fuel controllers began imposing a 10-per-cent cut on industries rated "non-essential."

Authorities see the threat of an industrial fuel crisis on the midlands continuing into February. The wool textile industry in West Yorkshire expects a five-per-cent fuel cut despite its priority position in both the export and home market set-up.

SEGREGATION OF FIRST OFFENDERS

Ottawa, Dec. 30 —(CP)—Segregation of "first offenders" and youthful delinquents will be continued "on an ample scale" during the coming year and extended to many parts of Ontario, Hon. George Dunbar, Ontario Minister of Reform Institutions, said in an interview yesterday. Mr. Dunbar said Ontario was embarking on a program of education and rehabilitation of first offenders broader and more comprehensive than any yet attempted in Canada.

PERSONAL HEALTH TALKS

By WILLIAM BRADY, M.D.

STUTTERING

A man 44 years old has stammered (rather than stuttered, he thinks) all his life. He was the victim of doting grandparents and parents, who bandaged his left hand so that he would have to use his right hand only, had his tonsils removed, sent him to stammering schools etc, etc., and still he stammers. He seems to have no air supply when he needs it—runs out of wind after a few words and begins to miss fire, so to speak—that is, stutter, or, as he calls it, stammer. However, in quiet conversation with a relative or friend, once he gets under way he seems to run along smoothly without missing—but not when he has to say anything to strangers or to an audience of more than a few persons.

What I (Brady) don't know about stuttering, stammering and the relation of handedness to this and other impediments makes fine material for popular magazine articles by Tom, Dick and Harry, who generally purports to know a lot about the subject but never reveals how he learned so much that the rest of us just can't understand.

I do believe, however, that it is wrong from every point of view to interfere with natural left-handedness, wrong for parents or teachers and injurious to the child's development and welfare.

I have never been able to understand why some parents, some teachers and even some doctors are so insistent that a child who prefers to use the left hand for writing, drawing or other fine work must be forced to use only the right hand regardless of which hand Nature has chosen.

One in each twenty-five children is naturally left-handed — born left-handed.

Brain centres for the control of muscles used in writing, drawing, crocheting etc., are in the left side of the brain, in a right-handed person. In the left-handed person these centres are in the right side of the brain.

These centres are close to, and functionally associated with, the centres controlling speech. Speech centres are in the left third frontal convolution of the cerebrum under the temple, in a right-handed person; in the right cerebral hemisphere of a left-handed person.

I don't know, and I don't believe anybody knows, but it seems to me that stuttering, stammering and other impediments develop with too great frequency in naturally left-handed children shortly after the poor kids enter school and are compelled to use the right hand for writing, drawing and the like.

Anyway, if my child showed a preference for the left hand I can tell you no one would interfere with the child's preference.

In talks to follow I'll tell you what I think about the relation of handedness to general nervous stability, the practical significance of ambidextrous training (learning to use either hand or both), and other aspects of the question—I say I'll tell you what I think about it — I don't know any more than anybody else knows about it.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Corns and Warts

Kindly give your advice on prevention and treatment of corns, calluses and warts.

(L. MacG.)

Answer—Best all-around remedy for corns, calluses or warts is a daily painting of the lesion only, not the surrounding skin, with a solution of thirty grains of salicylic acid in one-half fluidounce of flexible collodion. When applying the solution the trick is to dip out just enough on a wee wisp of cotton wound on the tip of a toothpick, to leave a drop or so on the corn or wart to dry, and avoid touching neck of vial with the solution. If the collodion does not get on the neck of the bottle the liquid may be kept tightly corked or stoppered. Otherwise it thickens and hardens in the bottle when the ether and alcohol evaporate. Usually the corn, wart or callus softens after a week or so and may be wiped off. Prevention of corns and calluses is discussed in booklet "Care of the Feet" and prevention and various treatments for corns in booklet "Cosmetic Blemishes." For either booklet send ten cents and stamped self addressed envelope. No clippings, please. Ask for it in writing.

Can salamanders live in fire?

In ancient times it was commonly believed that certain Old World small tailed amphibians resembling lizards and newts and known as salamanders possessed bodies invulnerable to fire and heat.

Literature contains numerous allusions to the salamander's ability to breathe flames and live in fire unharmed.

The creature, so it was said, not only endured the flames without being harmed but also extinguished them like ice.

This story, now regarded as a fable, was universally believed in the time of Aristotle, who referred to it without questioning its authenticity. Even at the present time one not infrequently meets with persons who believe that the body of the salamander is protected from fire in a particular manner.

Pliny the Elder, who perished in 79 A.D. when Pompeii was destroyed, doubted that salamanders could withstand fire, notwithstanding the statements of ancient naturalists and philosophers. He caught a salamander and placed it in flames to test the belief. The creature was sacrificed in the cause of science. Instead of breathing and extinguishing the flames it was itself soon burned into powder by them.

Galen, a Greek physician who lived at Rome about a century later, concluded that the belief had been suggested by the natural coldness and dampness of the salamander's body, which enables it to endure flames for a short time, although it is soon consumed. By absorbing water through its skin a salamander can increase its weight by 30 or 40 per cent within a few hours.

Salamanders often crawl into crevices in damp logs and no doubt they were often carried into houses and in the vicinity of fireplaces with wood. The notion that they are fond of fire may have been suggested by the fact that occasionally one of these tiny amphibians, thrown into the fire with fuel, would in desperation jump into the flames to escape the heat of the log.

The belief about salamander being invulnerable to fire may have been [illegible] to some extent by the [illegible] that certain [illegible]

SPY PROBE TOP 1946 CANADIAN NEWS HEADLINE

Fred Rose, Montreal M.P., Most Prominent of Those Involved, Sentenced to Six Years

By DOUGLAS HOW
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Ottawa, Dec. 28 (CP)—Canada's first full year of peace since 1938 brought her the unique and startling discovery that Russia, one of her great wartime allies, had embarked on a fifth column policy within her far-flung borders while war still raged.

If there were bigger domestic stories in 1946, they failed to hit the headlines and the front pages more often than what became generally known as the Canadian spy probe. Its reverberations, both internal and international, were still coming as the year ended.

The first startling announcement came late in the afternoon of Feb. 15. It came from Prime Minister Mackenzie King himself. The government, he said, had learned that a foreign power was receiving unauthorized confidential information in this country.

Early that morning, R.C.M.P. squads swooped down on the homes of 13 persons, two of them women, all of them either government or armed forces officials. For weeks they were detained without legal counsel and were eventually reported by a Royal Commission as having given information.

Slowly, piecemeal, their names came out and were splashed across the land. Then came another detention, the most spectacular of all, that of Fred Rose, Labor-Progressive member of parliament for Montreal-Cartier, and alleged recruiting agent for a Russian network of agents in Canada.

Official Secrets Act

For the first time, the government began prosecutions under the Official Secrets Act, a 1939 statute tailor-made for this exigency. It covered the communication of information to a foreign power.

But without one man, all its scope would have meant nothing. He was Igor Gouzenko, the 27-year-old cipher clerk who had fled the Soviet Embassy Sept. 5, 1945, with the files and telegrams and notebook sheets that started everything. Months went by without Gouzenko ever leaving the protective shadow of R. C. M. P. guards who accompanied him to the courts, then spirited him away to his unknown hideouts.

The Russians demanded his deportation as a "capital criminal," a thief. The Canadians asked for details of his theft, never received any, ignored the demand.

The courts began the long process of the trials. Rose was convicted of conspiring to communicate information, was found guilty and sentenced to six years. He appealed. Other convictions followed, and other appeals, then some acquittals.

Publish Report

In July, the royal commission's two Supreme Court of Canada judges made known their findings. Their report ran through 733 pages. It pulled no punches, tabbed the Labor-Progressive or Communist party as the incubator of Russian agents, said it had only been able to probe one of possibly five, possibly more, Soviet networks and labelled the Russian Embassy the headquarters of it all.

Four more detentions followed. Two other alleged agents vanished. Some 17 officials left the embassy for Russia. No replacement came for Ambassador Georges Zarougin although he himself had been publicly exhonerated of complicity by Prime Minister King.

Internally, through all the developments ran the thread of protest against the unprecedented methods of detention and questioning of the original 13, against their names being stamped with guilt before trial.

The storm rumbled in parliament, in civil liberties leagues, in editorials. The Progressive Conservatives tried to initiate a Bill of Rights in the Commons, were told their rights already existed and they said they would try again next session.

By Dec. 20, 13 of the 18 trials had been concluded with five acquittals, seven prison sentences and one fine. The prison sentences ranged from six years to 2 1-2 years.

Laughs at Doctors Skates Quite Well

Moose Jaw, Sask. (CP)—About two years ago at a Canadian Army hospital in Birmingham, England, a medical officer told 23-year-old Doug Cushway of Moose Jaw he might be able to get around with the aid of crutches or a cane, "but skating, my dear boy, is positively out of the question."

Today, Cushway not only gets around without the crutches or cane but skates as well.

A trooper with the Royal Canadian Dragoons, he lost both legs after stepping on an enemy shoe mine in Italy late in 1944. At the department of veterans affairs office in Regina, he was fitted out with artificial legs, and started experimenting with crutches, later a cane and finally neither.

Besides skating, he has tried swimming, bowling and dancing.

"I don't pretend it's as easy as skating with natural legs," Cushway says. "There isn't the same resilience to the foot, for one thing, and you have to watch how you put your skate on the ice. But I guess I haven't done too badly so far."

PRESENTS GOLD MEDALS

London, Dec. 28 — (CP)—Mayor George Wenige at the third annual police boys' club banquet last night presented gold medals to 30 members of the London Police Boys' Band who participated in the Waterloo Musical Society festival last June. The band won the Ontario championship in competition with seven other bands.

Boys' Parliament Picks Officials

London, Ont., Dec. 28—(CP)—Members of the Ontario Older Boys' Parliament, now in session at the University of Western Ontario, will be asked to pass legislation designed to bring closer relationship with the boys' parliament in other provinces.

The resolution tabled yesterday points out that insufficient emphasis has been placed on "interprovincial relations" generally and that the Ontario Boys' Parliament should exchange constructive ideas with similar groups.

The parliament opened Thursday with nearly 100 boys attending for the week-long "legislature."

Friday's business was confined chiefly to the selection of officials of the four departments within the parliament. The departments and their officers are as follows:

Devotional and educational affairs, minister, Art Waters of Toronto West; under-secretary of leadership training, Robert Sherwin of Northumberland West; under-secretary of educational services, Murray Maclagan of Toronto East; under-secretary of social affairs, William Hiltz of Scarboro; opposition committee, Dan Bovair of York North, chairman; Dean McKague of Victoria, Elgin Lougheed of South Hastings, Robert Sherwin of Northumberland West and Glenn Mills of St. Marys.

Department of parliamentary affairs, minister, Donald Hill of Kingston; provincial secretary, Otto Ivany of Algoma; parliamentary secretary, Jack Currie of Halton; under-secretary of publications, Neil Harris of Toronto East; director of public relations, Alf McAlister, London; opposition committee, Alf McAlister, chairman; Donald Richardson of St. Thomas, Val Vandewall of Barrie.

Department of boys' work, minister, Don Hooper, of Peel South; associate minister of boys' work and under-secretary of camps, Ross Anderson of Northumberland East; under-secretaries for national athletic contests and for conferences and rallies will be appointed later. Opposition, Cameron Clark of Peterborough, chairman; Keith Stoner of Sarnia, Jack Speake of London East and Bill Anniss of Owen Sound.

Department of finance, minister, Gordon Bean of Toronto; ranking cabinet minister, under-secretaries of finance, Ontario, North, Mac Cameron of Sault Ste. Marie; Ontario West, James Smith of Windsor; Ontario East and Central Ontario will be appointed later. Opposition, Mac Cameron of Sault Ste. Marie, chairman.

Orders Inquiry Into Break in U. S. Butter Prices

Washington, Dec. 27 —(AP)—Agricultural Secretary Anderson today ordered an investigation of yesterday's break in New York butter prices.

The investigation will cover consumer complaints that the market had been manipulated to prevent a drop in producer prices of milk in the metropolitan area during January.

In announcing the inquiry, an aide to the secretary said Anderson does not see in the butter price break any sign of a widespread decline in prices of other farm and food prices.

WOMAN ELECTED

Preston, Dec. 28 — (CP)—The distaff side broke into Preston council this year for the first time in the town's history with the election of Mrs. W. H. Heise. Women have served on the public and high school boards and the Board of Education, but this is the first time a woman has been elected to a council seat.

LEADING FIGURES IN MANY SPHERES DIE DURING 1946

H. G. Wells, Lord Keynes, Sir James Jeans, Soviet President Kalinin Among Those Who Died

By The Canadian Press

Famous figures in literary and scientific fields were included in a long list of world notables who died during 1946.

Internationally known were Lord Keynes, noted economist, H. G. Wells, historian, economist and novelist, Sir James Jeans, astronomer and scientist, and Gerhard Hauptmann, brilliant German poet and novelist.

Lord Keynes, credited with playing an important part in influencing the spending policies of President Roosevelt's government died at his home in Sussex, England, April 21. He was 62 years old. Wells, son of humble parents, who became a famous author died in his sleep in his London home Aug. 13, at the age of 79 and Sir James, 67, described by the late Sir Oliver Lodge as "one of the greatest men in the world," died in Dorking, England, Sept. 16. Hauptmann, a former winner of the Nobel prize for literature, died June 8, aged 83.

In various fields, of distinction, death in 1946 took these notables:

Politics-economics: Michael Kalinin, "grandfather" of the Russian revolution and former Soviet Union president, June 3, 70; Will Thorne, veteran British Labor M. P., Jan 2, 88.

Military: Viscount Gort ("Tiger Gort") commander-in-chief of Britain's expeditionary force to Europe in 1940, March 31, aged 59; Gen. Joseph (Vinegar Joe) Stilwell, United States army commander in Burma in 1942, Oct. 12, 63.

Religion: A. F. Winnington-Ingram, former Anglican bishop of London with numerous relations in Canada, May 26, aged 88; John Cardinal Glennon, archbishop of St. Louis, March 9, 83.

Sportsmen: Jack Johnson, former world heavyweight boxing champion, June 10, 68; Col. E. R. Bradley, owner of four Kentucky Derby winners, Aug. 15, 86; Walter Johnson, ace pitcher, member of baseball's hall of fame, Dec. 10, 59.

Retribution overtook 11 Nazi master war plotters as 10 died on the gallows and one by self-administered poison. Hermann Goering, ex-Luftwaffe chief, cheated Allied justice by committing suicide a few hours before 10 others of the Nazi wartime hierarchy were hanged in Nuernberg prison Oct. 16.

WEDDINGS

LOBB—WILSON

A pretty wedding was solemnized at Bridge Street United Church on Friday, December 27, at 2.30 p.m., by the Rev. E. Farnsworth, when Helena Mae, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Wilson, became the bride of Ronald James Vernon Lobb, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Lobb, of Rock Creek, British Columbia.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride looked lovely in a floor-length gown of white sheer with lace panels with an embroidered veil trimmed with orange blossoms and she carried a bouquet of red Talisman roses.

Miss Betty Mumby, of Belleville, as bridesmaid, wore a floor-length gown of heavenly blue with matching headdress and carried pink Talisman roses.

Mr. Thomas Muirison, of Vancouver, acted as groomsman.

During the signing of the register Miss Jean Sheffield, of Holloway, gowned in a floor-length gown of turquoise blue taffeta with a corsage of baby 'mums, sang "I Love You Truly."

The bride's gift to the bridesmaid was a gold cross necklace. The groom's gift to the groomsman was a cigarette lighter.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the Queen's Hotel for the immediate relatives of the bride and groom, after which they left on a wedding trip to Toronto and Alliston. For travelling the bride wore a turquoise blue suit and top coat with black accessories and a corsage of red roses. On their return they will reside at Northport as the groom is stationed at Mountain View on No. 1 Armament Course.

MIDDLETON—WILKIN

On the afternoon of December 28, in Bridge Street United Church, a very pretty wedding was solemnized, with Rev. D. C. Amos officiating, when Lois Elayne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Wilkin, Belleville, was united in marriage to Herbert Alan Middleton, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. Middleton, of Toronto.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, entered the church to the strains of the "Bridal Chorus" from Lohengrin's played by Mr. Alec Gordon. She wore the traditional satin gown, with veil, and carried a cascade bouquet of Sweetheart roses. The bridesmaid, Miss Margaret Middleton, sister of the groom, wore a gown of ice-blue satin with matching net headdress, and carried a cascade bouquet of pink 'mums and Talisman roses. Little Margaret McKay, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. McKay, made a winsome flower-girl in a quaint gown of white taffeta with matching halo, and carrying an old-fashioned nosegay.

The groom, a former resident of Belleville, who is completing his rehabilitation course, was attended by Mr. John Harrington, of Toronto, and the ushers were Mr. Alan Browne, of Toronto and Mr. Charles Pearson, of Kingston.

During the signing of the register, Miss Peggy Freeman, of Toronto, sang "Because".

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride in St. Agnes' Manor, where the bride's mother received in a gown of old-gold crepe, with black accessories, and the mother of the groom assisted, wearing an original model of poudre blue and black crepe with a matching flower hat.

Later Mr. and Mrs. Middleton left by motor for Buffalo, N.Y., followed by the best wishes of their many friends.

Out-of-town guests were from Montreal, Kingston, Toronto, Ottawa, Hamilton, Kitchener and London.

Watch Your Weight Carefully

Of course, a nice girl would thank the designer who contrived these be-jeweled Paisley beauties as well as the grandma who left the heirloom shawl to her. For the handsome theatre coat and bumper turban are made of gorgeous Indian shawls, real Paisley wool antiques, rescued for fashion from the desuetude of life in the mothballs or inappropriately dust-covering a grand piano.

Paillettes in jewel tones chosen to best glitter-accent the colors used in each individual shawl are hand embroidered over the entire surface pattern. The lining of hat, bag, or coat picks up a sequin color brightly. Incidentally the hats and bags make wonderful dressy models for daytime wear.

Home for Aged Inmates Enjoy Christmas Season

Christmas festivities at the Home for the Aged in Belleville began on the afternoon of December 22, when members of the "Invictae Mission Circle" of Bridge Street United Church visited the Home and entertained the ladies and gentlemen there with a fine Christmas concert, later serving them a supper which included sandwiches, ice cream and cake, and presenting each with a small, nicely wrapped gift.

On Monday evening, the Salvation Army, also visited the Home, singing carols and giving a concert of musical numbers.

Christmas morning found the Home in gala attire, with a beautifully decorated and lighted tree containing gifts for every one; and the tables in the dining rooms decorated for the occasion in the usual Christmas colors. Santa was present and unburdened the branches of the tree shortly after breakfast. At the dinner hour the Home family were served a dinner which included turkey and all the trimmings, and they anticipate another turkey dinner on New Year's Day.

Gifts received at the Home for Christmas were as follows—from Mr. P. H. Wills, $50 for Tobacco Fund; Mrs. Bunting, 2 dozen oranges; Mrs. N. Edwards, 2 pineapples and grapes; St. Julien Chapter I.O.D.E., $1 for each person; Argyll Chapter, I.O.D.E., $1 for each person and 1 lb of candy; Ladies of the Moose, grapes, oranges, pears, grapefruit; Mr. and Mrs. H. Ackerman, 1 turkey, Miss Niblock, 3 cakes and a gift for each lady (there are six); Dr. and Mrs. J. Marshall, Jr., 1 case of tomato juice; Mr. and Mrs. Graffer, hosiery for each person; Mrs. H. Joyce, Montreal; candy, popcorn and biscuits; A friend, chocolate bars for all; Catholic Women's League, basket of oranges, and gifts for Miss Bradford, Mr. Whalen and Mr. Leveque; Corby Estate, 1 turkey, case of peas, 2 bushel of turnips, 1 case of pumpkin; Mrs. Ruston, grapefruit and candies; Stewart & Miles, 1 case of oranges; Mrs. Ross, magazines; Christ Church, 1 quilt; Mr. Roblin, 1 pint cream; Mrs. Dracup, in memory of her husband's birthday, a parcel for each person containing chocolate bars, oranges, bananas and biscuits; The Home Board of Management, a gift for each person, and candies.

The Home Board of Management would like to thank all who have contributed so generously toward the Christmas festivities of the home and with gifts for the tree. Appreciation is expressed to Mrs. Harrison, the matron, who did so much to make the "Home" a happy place for all who live there, and to Mr. Harrison for his efforts to make the Christmas Day a complete success in expressing the Christmas Spirit.

DISTRIBUTES TURKEYS INSTEAD OF $10 BILLS

Brockville, Dec. 30 — (CP) — Harry F. McLean, better known as Mr. X, distributed Christmas turkeys instead of his customary $10 bills this year. Mr. X's turkeys are special — they are grasshopper fed exclusively. He has great faith in grasshoppers as food. He tried them himself and says they are not disagreeable.

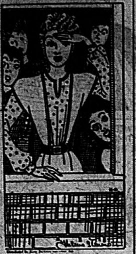
Eyestrain Brings Good-Looks Griefs



Stand at a window and gaze at the sky.

Of all foolish mortals, the woman who is suffering from impaired vision and won't wear glasses—because she fancies they will make her look older or plainer—heads the list. There are countless thousands who have glasses, but wear them only occasionally. At other times they go about partially blind. It is all due to vanity.

These misguided women put on their factory blushes in splotches. They wash dishes "by feel," with the result that dishes are not clean, and unclean dishes are a health menace. Eyes that are kept under tension and strain, trying to do work for which they have neither strength nor vitality, become progressively weaker.

Ideas about specs have changed. They do not necessarily suggest advanced years. They are used by individuals of all ages. To refrain from putting them on is evidence of poor reasoning. Impaired eyesight that is not given the ease and relief offered by lenses brings a host of pulchritude defects—squint lines around the eyes, frown lines between them, and an expression of tension that makes the face look hard and [illegible].

The effect upon the nervous system is devastating in some cases.

The eyes do not need much care; all they need is freedom from abuse. You don't have to diet and exercise, as you do to keep your figure in form, or spend oodles of money, as you do for cosmetics. All you have to do is treat them with respect and, when vision is no longer clear, provide them with the aid of glasses.

Cold water is refreshing when the eyes are tired. After a rush day and when the date for the merry evening is on, dip a thick washcloth in ice cold water, lie down, and press the cloth against the lids. The ice cold compress will reduce swellings under the eyes that may have appeared because of fatigue. Eyes will gain a much-needed rest, will appear brighter, more expressive.

In every medicine cabinet there should be an eye lotion to be used when the eyes have been exposed to dust or when some foreign substance has invaded them. Use the medicine dropper for the purpose of application. When the eyes have been flooded, turn the head so that the water will flow out at the inner corner of the eye. If the invader is not dislodged, do not attempt to remove it; that is a job for the doctor.

Every woman who does close work, like sewing or typing, should give the eyes a rest every two or three hours. The best way to do this is to look at some distant object. Stand at a window and gaze at the sky.

New Soapless VEL Is New Modern Cleaner

by Frances Thompson
noted homemaking authority

Soapless VEL has changed my ideas of washing clothes and doing dishes. This modern discovery has shown me for all time that heavy suds, such as soap products produce, are not necessary for cleaning.

The light fluffy suds you get with VEL are somewhat like a frothy drink or an ice-cream soda—the goodness is beneath the froth and bubble—and lasts long after the suds subside. You don't need lasting suds with VEL. I've found that the clear solution left after VEL suds dissolve, has all of VEL's original cleaning power. And it acts just as soft as rain water. That's why VEL is so easy on the hands and so beneficial in the bath-tub.

VEL FOR DISHWASHING

A teaspoonful or two of soapless VEL in dishpan or sink (nothing else, please!) is all that is required to speed up dishwashing. No need to add soap or any other cleaner to your VEL solution. Soapless VEL alone cuts grease quickly and leaves no smears on glass or china, nor scarcely any scum around the sink. For hard-to-clean pots and pans and for egg-stained spoons and plates, VEL's cleansing action is really amazing.

VEL FOR DELICATE FABRICS

I have found that soapless VEL dissolves instantly and completely in lukewarm water. This makes it particularly good for washing lingerie, woolens and nylons. Unlike soap, VEL is a neutral product, free from soapy alkalis. It contains nothing to harm colours or delicate fabrics. Use a little less VEL than soap (no need to add more when the suds subside). You'll find one rinsing is sufficient and it eliminates soapy film and scum.

VEL FOR HOUSEHOLD CLEANING

A tablespoonful of soapless VEL in a pail of warm water quickly removes grease and dirt from painted surfaces, walls, windows, mirrors and tiles. No rubbing, rinsing or drying is necessary. Just wring out the cloth and wipe off the dirt.

Actress Diana Lynn's slim loveliness is a tribute to her wise program of regular exercise and careful diet

By HELEN FOLLETT

SLENDERNESS of figure is one of the perquisites of pulchritude. Don't fancy that one should accept it as a gift of the gods, do nothing to retain it. There is not only danger of putting on too much weight through wrong eating habits, but there is a chance that slenderness may demote itself into emaciation. very woman should be a weight watcher. One never knows which way the scales will turn.

If the girl who has always been slender suddenly discovers that her collar bones are showing, that elbows are less rounded, the calves of the legs somewhat depleted, she had better stop trying to live on a lettuce leaf a day and consume some nourishing groceries. If she is in a normal state of health, it will be easy enough for her to put on cruves where curves should be.

Fat-building foods consist of starches, sweets and fats. That does not mean that the diet should be composed mainly of these elements, but the intake each day should be increased.

Meat and eggs provide protein, necessary for the balanced diet. A cereal and a soft boiled egg for breakfast will help cover the bones, put fat on the ribs. Put plenty of sugar and cream in coffee. Drink a quart of whole milk a day.

Plenty of Exercise

Exercise in the open air is necessary to create appetite and to keep the blood streams romping. It should not be strenuous if one is wooing extra poundage.

As it is during sleep that Nature makes repairs, it is wise for Miss Skinny to get in nine hours of repose. Late hours are responsible for many beauty griefs.

GLOVE, bag and shoes can make last year's suit or coat take on new sparkle and charm. Black suede gloves with a turn-backed cuff of satin are out to enhance a suit or dress for late afternoon wear. Black suede is also used for the handbag which has a gilt metal frame and bracelet handles. The frame is pointed up with large rhinestones on either side of the tab. The street shoe, of black suede brings back the closed toe and heel and so has a quite new look about it. Decorative green stitching outlines the vamp and heel quarter. An extension sole makes it a good walking shoe.

Advice to the Lovelorn

Couples Who Quarrel Over Trifles

The following two letters, typical of many received every day by this department, present a very common situation.

The first one says:

"Dear Miss Fairfax:

"I am a girl of 18, and very much in love with a boy 18, who is old for his age. We have been going together for almost a year, and it seems that all we do is fight. We never argue over anything big. It's always the little things.

"Our parents disapprove of our going steady, but we still do. I see him almost every night. My folks like him very much, and his folks like me, but they just don't want us to go steady. We have decided to write you about our problem and would like you to give us a little advice.

"Anxious"

And the second:

"Dear Miss Fairfax:

"I am 19 years old, and am in love with a boy 21. I am pretty sure he loves me, but still we are always arguing about silly things. He is very stubborn about making up, but he always does, or, rather, he always did.

"But just recently we had a quarrel. I know I hurt him a little more than I should have. I want to make up with him so much, but don't know what to do. Every time I quarrel I say mean things. I am sure that this time he won't come back. I know I have been wrong. Please help me.

"Jerry"

Now when couples continually quarrel over trifles, the trouble may lie in any one of three directions. It may be, for example, that either the girl or the boy has been spoiled by a doting family to the point where she or he must always have her or his own way, no matter how insignificant the issue at stake.

If this is the cause of the constant friction, then unless the selfish one decides he loves the other enough to make an effort to overcome his selfishness, the relationship had better be broken off at once. For as long as one member of a team insists on everything going his way, the other must either yield his own rights entirely, or live in a state of continual quarreling. And who wants to do that?

Or again, it may be that the two are temperamentally incompatible, and that the basic differences in their ways of thinking and feeling explode, when they meet at cross-purposes, in repeated small irritations. Any specific thing they quarrel about may indeed be silly as silly can be. But remember that the thing itself is merely a symbol of some fundamental inability to understand each other—the bubble on the surface that indicates some lively invisible boiling down below—and, as such, has much more serious meaning than superficially it appears to have.

And so, if the continual disagreements over trifles appear to stem from below-the-surface incompatibility, it would be better for the two to remain casual friends rather than to think of any closer relationship. For here, too, the outlook would be none too promising for the future.

But there is a third reason for silly quarreling that is much less significant than either of these others, and that is, that the two people are seeing too much of each other. In the case of the girl writing the first letter quoted, who says she sees her boy friend almost every night, I should say this almost certainly would have a lot to do with their bickering. When any two people, however devoted to each other, are constantly in each other's company, giving up all other interests and friendships so as to concentrate entirely on themselves, they're bound to get on each other's nerves. If these two would be sensible enough to take a little advice from their parents and put off "going steady" until they are older, they'd no doubt find that the quarreling would stop.

As for the girl who writes the second letter I suggest she think over what I have just said about the causes for constant quarreling, decide which of the three fits her case and proceed accordingly.

Birthday Party

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I'm planning a birthday party for my sister. (1) When I invite the guests, shall I tell them it's a "birthday" party? (2) Are gifts expected at birthday parties? (3) If gifts are brought, should they be opened during the party, or afterward? (4) Is it necessary to have any decorations? (5) Must there be a birthday cake?

Alicia

(1) This is as you prefer. But guests usually are told that it's the birthday of the guest of honor. (2) Yes; if guests are told it's a birthday celebration, they bring gifts, even if it's only a gadget or "toy" from the five-and-ten. (3) gift should be opened when presented, or at least all gifts should be opened during the party, each gift exclaimed over enthusiastically, certain features particularly admired, and the guest thanked. (The person honored should write notes of thanks as soon after the party as possible.) (4) No. (5) Yes......no birthday party is complete without a birthday cake, brought in festively lighted, the candles blown out by the birthday-er, who also cuts the first piece and perhaps the entire cake.

Addressing a Catholic Priest

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

If you are a Protestant should you address a Catholic priest as "Father Bryan" as a Catholic does?

Ted.

Yes.

Engagement Announcement at Open House

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. I am planning to announce my daughter's engagement at an Open House, perhaps naming the hour as "four to seven." Since the guests will be arriving at different hours, what form would you suggest for making the announcement at the party?

2. Would it be permissible to indicate on the invitations that I am announcing the engagement of my daughter, or would it be better to have the announcement come as a surprise when the guests arrive.

A. C. H.

1. The customary procedure, and I think best and most dignified, in making the announcement at a party when the guests arrive at various times, is for the girl's mother to stand first to welcome the guests, then turn to her daughter standing next to her and say...."Here is Betty" and then to Jim, standing next to Betty, and say, "....and her fiance, Jim Robbins."

2. Usually the reason for the engagement announcement party is not given in the invitations.

Bride Chooses to Use Her Middle Name Rather Than Surname

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My cousin has just been married and we are all amazed that instead of using her maiden surname in her new informal name, she has decided to use her middle name, which was her mother's maiden name. To explain: instead of using "Mary Smith Brown" (Mary Smith being her maiden name), she uses "Mary Chatfield Brown" (Chatfield, her mother's maiden surname, was her middle name). Is it correct for her to do this?

Irene

Yes....she may use the name she chooses, and if she prefers her middle name to her maiden surname, it is proper for her to use it. (However, there may be some occasions when she would be requested to sign legal papers "Mary Smith Brown.)

Toronto Leafs and Montreal Canadiens Racing Ahead In N.H.L., Others Far Behind

Believed a Canadian Club Will Again Win the Stanley Cup

By JACK MITCHELL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

With Toronto Maple Leafs and Montreal Canadiens threatening to run away with National Hockey League honors, it appeared today that swelling export markets hadn't even dented the ability of the Moguls to keep the cream of the hockey crop in what could loosely be called their own backyards.

Nearing the halfway mark of their 60-game schedules, the two Canadian Clubs turned in triumphs over the weekend, the Leafs edging Boston Bruins 4-3, and Canadiens swamping Chicago Blackhawks 8-2. Both now are so far behind it would take a sustaining winning streak by any of the other four to head them off.

Although play-off time still lies in the distance, the front-running performances kindled hopes that Canada could maintain a stranglehold on the Stanley Cup that Canadiens have won twice and Leafs one in the last three seasons.

Of course, the players on all six clubs are all Canadian born with such notable exceptions as Scotland-born Adam Brown of Chicago Black Hawks and United States natives Johnny Mariucci of Chicago and Frankie Brimsek of Boston.

With Toronto's weekend victory coming over the third-place team, the Bruins, it was a blow struck for both Canadian Clubs in the point standings. The Bruins regained one point Sunday night by playing a 2-2 draw with the Rangers at New York but now are nine points behind Canadiens, in turn three behind the leading Leafs.

Second Draw For Rangers

The draw was the second in two nights for the Rangers, held to an identical 2-2 deadlock by the Red Wings in Detroit the previous night.

The Blueshirts, two points ahead of the Red Wings in fourth position, gained their first tie on Hal Laycoe's goal with but seven seconds to play at Detroit. Doug McCaig and Pete Horeck gave the Wings a 2-1 lead against Church Russell's goal for New York. The Rangers knotted it up after Laycoe took Cal Gardner's pass from a faceoff.

Played before a crowd of 13,246 the game marked Detroit's 13th start without a victory.

Boston spotted the Rangers a 2-0 lead and came from behind for the deadlock before a crowd of 15,925 at New York. Rene Trudell and Tony Leswick shot the Rangers into the lead while Bauer and Murray Henderson got the goals back.

Bruins Put On Rally

The Bruins, down 4-1 with but six minutes to play against Maple Leafs the previous night, started their comeback too late before a Toronto crowd of 13,762. In a sustained offensive, they scored twice but still sought the tying tally when the bell ended the game.

The Toronto goals were divided by Howie Meeker, Harry Watson, Garth Boesch and Bill Ezinicki while Joe Carveth, Don Gallinger and Woody Dumart scored for Bruins.

The Canadiens fattened their scoring totals against the last-place Black Hawks. They gave up two early goals but got them back before the first period ended and raced away with one in the second session and dive in the last.

Buddy O'Connor, replacing the injured Elmer Lach at first-string centre, was high point-getter with a goal and four assists while Maurice Richard, with three goals and an assist and Toe Blake, with two and two, gave the line a total of 13 scoring points. Billie Reay and Bobby Fillion scored the other Montreal goals.

For Chicago, Bill Mosienko and Alex Kaleta tallied.

THE BIG SEVEN

(By The Canadian Press)

Maurice Richard of Montreal Canadiens hoisted himself into a commanding lead in the National Hockey League scoring race as he rocketed in three goals and an assist during the weekend to boost his total to 20 goals and 15 assists for 35 points. Ted (Teeter) Kennedy, Toronto, and Billy (The Kid) Taylor, Detroit, both held scoreless, are tied for second place with 16 and 12 and nine and 19, respectively, for 28 points. Milt Schmidt, Boston, nailed an assist, to put himself in third berth with 11 and 15 for 26 points. Roy Conacher, Detroit, Max Bentley, Chicago and Bobby Bauer, Boston, are grouped for fourth berth with 24 points apiece.

CAPITALS MOVE INTO 2ND PLACE AMERICAN LOOP

Nine Hard-Fought Games Played in League During the Weekend

(By The Canadian Press)

Nine hard-fought American Hockey League games were contested during the week-end with but one change of standing — Indianapolis got sole possession of second place in the western sector, breaking its tie with Pittsburgh.

Indianapolis got its grip on the No. 2 spot while Pittsburgh was resting last night. Both teams had won Saturday, leaving the standing tied.

But last night the Caps took on visiting Philadelphia, cellar team in the east, and eked out a 4-3 win.

Counts by Tony Licari, Cliff Cl
Simpson, and Burdette gave the Caps a 3-0 lead at the end of the second frame. Eric Unger, Mike Narduzzi and Phil Hergesheimer came back with tallies for the Rockets in the second and third. Tony Bukovich chalked up the winner for the Capitals.

Providence Reds were shellacked 7-3 last night by the Western Division leading Cleveland Barons at Providence. Gordie Davidson, Pete Leswick, Johnny Holota, Bob Walton, and Normie Mann each scored once for Cleveland. Pete Bessonne, Charley Scherza and Roche netted for the losers.

Lose After Six Wins

After a series of six victories, Buffalo Bisons were stopped 3-3 by St. Louis Flyers last night. The Flyers bunched their counts in the second period when Paul Gladu, Hec Pozzo, and Rollie Rossignol counted. Johnny Mahaffey netted for the Bisons in the first and Freddie Hunt and Tommy Cooper in the third.

Springfield Indians trounced New Haven Ramblers 5-3, Woody Woodward, Joe Benoit and Bill Summerhill each tallied once for Springfield before Eddie Kocussen came through in the third frame with two tallies to make victory certain. Jean Denis, Alan Kuntz, and Ian McIntosh counted the Ramblers' markers.

In Saturday's contests, the Bisons scored their first victory of the season over the Barons 6-3; Indianapolis nosed out Hershey 4-2; Pittsburgh edged the Hustling Providence Reds 2-1; St. Louis swamped Philadelphia Rockets 8-3, in a clash of the cellar teams, and, on the strength of superb goal tending by Jim Henry, New Haven blanked Springfield 1-0.

Chips Off The Sports Block

By George H. Carver, Sports Editor

THE SPORT PARADE

This city in conjunction with other centres over the Dominion experienced a sharp upsurge in sports interest in 1946. Practically all fields of endeavor noted quickened tempos on the part of the fans while more teams engaged in active competition than in year. With the groundwork laid for another year, and with park illumination now a practical certainty, with the boys back home and getting back to sports normalcy, Belleville is looking forward to a banner year in 1947 along athletic trails.

BASKETBALL

This great summer sport experienced the biggest come back last year in a decade. Raised from a ten year state of lethargy in 1945 by a group of interested sportsmen, the game received a great impetus last year, with a six team league that was productive of some outstanding teams and play. The Belleville juniors went to the semi-finals being eliminated by that good team from Hull, the Wrightvilles. Batawa went to the Intermediate finals bowing to the superior Chatham Seniors, while Latta and Napanee were eliminated after winning one or two playdown rounds. The season was by far the best seen here in many a moon with record crowds taking in the playdown series.

HOCKEY

A travel-hockey-weary but fighting team of Belleville Redmen carried high the banner of hockey here last year, but were eliminated in the intermediate "A" OHA playdowns after engaging in a terrific schedule. They went to the finals of the Van Horne series but the toll was too heavy and they went down before a Queen's University squad in the finals. The Junior Bears had their group leadership in the bag against the classy Kingston juniors only to toss away a lead to be eliminated. — This year both squads should be better than the teams that fought so gallantly a year ago.

LAWN BOWLING

The Belleville Lawn Bowling Club had one of the best years in its history and attracted the cream of bowling experts here last summer when it sponsored the Ontario District championships. It was one of the best events of its kind ever staged here and the LBA deserves a well earned pat on the back.

WRESTLING

Reputed to be one of the "hottest" wrestling towns in the circuit, the city enjoyed one of the longest seasons on record, thanks to good weather. The Phil Lawson-Walt Gerow combination was responsible for some of the greatest mat attractions in the country, and the fans responded with sell-out crowds. Primo Carnera, former world heavyweight boxing champion climaxed a highly enjoyable season as the final attraction of the year.

BOXING

There were some good cards brought here at the beginning of the season, but some poor management and not too good matching partially spoiled what should have been a good year. This city has some good boys, fellows who made a name for themselves in outside points. Let's hope it is revived next year.

SOFTBALL

Despite the fact that there were some good teams entered in softball in 1946, attendance was not of the best. Sacos won the city championship but were eliminated by the starry Oshawa Roblin Tanners in two straight games. Point Anne also went out before a superior team while the juniors, 1944 Ontario champions bowed to the Toronto Lizzies in two straight games. Softball authorities are of the opinion the Fair Grounds are too far away, and there are rumors of playing this year's games at the Alemite Field.

GOLF

There was plenty of activity on the links of the Bay of Quinte Country Club and the Belleville Golf Club last summer with a marked uptrend in interest in the ancient and honorable game. Both clubs reported a substantial increase in membership and some exciting tournaments were played. An interesting feature of the summer pastime was the various contests for the Branscombe cup which was twice annexed by Tommy Carruthers with other playing members of the Country Club. Both clubs are looking forward to the best year ever in 1947.

FIGURE SKATING

That live-wire organization the Quinte Skating Club although handicapped by lack of building material for a covered rink enjoyed a great season last winter and are looking forward to a banner year in 1946-47. Plans are already under way for another of their traditional winter carnivals which enjoy a district wide reputation for color, glamor and beauty.

WRONG NUMBER

A New York radio station invited Jackie Robinson and Kenny Washington, Negro baseball and football stars respectively, to appear on its nightly sports show.

As one of them entered the studio a receptionist looked up, assumed it was Robinson and said:

"Hello, Jackie."

"I'm not Robinson," replied the athlete, "I'm Washington."

The flustered clerk fumbled mentally for a moment and then replied brightly:

"Hello, George."

OSHAWA GENS ONLY FOUR POINTS BEHIND ST. MIKES

Motor City Crew Defeat St. Catharines' Falcons 11-2 on Saturday

(By The Canadian Press)

While the league-leading Toronto St. Michael's Majors continued to enjoy a protracted holiday lay-off, some of their opposition in the O.H.A.'s junior A loop crept within shouting distance as a result of Saturday's games.

Closest of the pack were the Oshawa Generals whose 11-2 victory over St. Catharines Falcons left them four points behind the Irish, the closest any team has come in many weeks. Meanwhile Galt Red Wings defeated Stratford Kroehlers 7-5 at Galt. The victories gave both Generals and Wings a sweep of their two-game home-and-home series started Friday night.

In a Toronto double bill Windsor Spitfires climbed out of the cellar for the first time this season by downing Toronto Young Rangers 8-5 and Toronto Marlboros moved into third place two points back of Oshawa by beating Hamilton Szabos 6-1 in a 4-point tussle.

Their ranks badly thinned by injuries, St. Catharines finished with nine players left in action as two Falcons joined a number of teammates on the inactive list. Defenceman Bob Wood suffered a spine injury and a bruised shoulder and elbow when he crashed into the end boards and McOustra, a forward replacement, suffered possible internal injuries when struck over the ribs during a tussle with Dick Gamble of the Generals who drew a major for his part in the skirmish.

Gamble Leads Scorers

Gamble took time out from the fisticuffs to lead the Oshawa scoring parade with two goals and two assists. George Scholes and Ray Ceresino also scored doubles with Curik, Blair, Millidard, Pogue and Hildebrand getting the others. Junior McDonald and Tom Twaddle were the Falcon scorers.

The goaltending of former Red Wing Tom McGratton kept Stratford in the hunt despite Galt superiority in a tight battle that saw the Wings pull the game out of the fire with four third-period goals. Bert Giesbrecht paced the winners with three goals and two assists while linemate Lyle Wiseman had one and four. McBride, Hnatiuk and Pavelich were the other scorers. George Drysdale and Arnie Kullnan got two each for Kroehlers while Service had a single.

Six third-period goals boosted Windsor to eighth place past Falcons and Rangers as Ed Wildey's crew fell apart after holding a 5-2 lead in the second period. Earl Keyes led the Spitfires with three goals, followed by Gord Haidy with two. Russ Marchand and Kavanagh also found the range. Trent Anderson counted twice for Rangers with single goals going to Bolton, Cruikshank and Sullivan.

Marlboros had no trouble with the Szabos, Naylor, Ford, Kent, Fomica, Cox and Hassard all clicking for goals while Barnes was Hamilton's only scorer.

Galt play at Hamilton in tonight's only junior game. In the senior loop the unbeaten Hamilton Tigers invade Toronto to play the second-place Staffords.

KANSAS CITY WINS 4 STRAIGHT

(By The Canadian Press)

Kansas City's fourth straight victory and a tie pulled the defending champions to within three points of Omaha and Minneapolis, who finished the weekend playing in another frontline deadlock in the United States Hockey League's Northern Division.

Omaha tied Minneapolis Millers in the standing by nudging Dallas 4-3 Saturday, and the Millers missed a chance to step ahead last night by bowing to St. Paul 4-3.

It was St. Paul's first victory in four starts against the Millers on the Saints' home ice, and was credited to a two-goal performance by Bucky Davis supported by a goal apiece from Cliff Purpur and Bob Kirkpatrick. For Minneapolis Walt Atanas and Leo Gasparini did the scoring.

Kansas City downed Tulsa 5-2 Saturday, then last night gained a 4-4 tie with Dallas, narrowly averting a defeat through the deadeye shooting of Wingy Johnston who potted three goals for the Pla-Mors.

Dallas had forged ahead three times on counts by Murray Armstrong and L. Smoke only to have Johnston knot the score at 2-2 and 3-3 in the second period, then 4-4 in the last two minutes of the game.

Blade scored the other Pla-Mor goal.

Bob Thorpe, Dallas centre, scored the longest goal of the season on Kansas City ice by driving a shot 120 feet from centre ice.

Other teams were idle during the weekend.

No games are scheduled tonight.

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

The Kibitzer

Some bridge players yowl in protest against being caught in a relentless squeeze play. That's silly. The worst is happening. So, they might as well take it with the least amount of suffering.

South was declarer at seven no-trump in this deal:

West led a heart. The north nine was covered by the east ten and south won with the ace. Two club rounds were headed by the ace and king. A small club entered dummy for a diamond lead from there.

When east played the ten, diamond queen in south won a finesse. The heart deuce was led and taken with dummy king. There was a chance that the queen might drop.

Back came a diamond to the south ace and the club queen was led. On this, dummy sluffed a small heart. After this trick, each hand was down to five cards.

South has a club, two diamonds, a heart, a spade; all small. West has four spades and diamond jack. Dummy has four spades and the heart jack. East has four spades and heart queen.

The last club was then led from south and dummy heart jack was sluffed on it. This 13er club was a squeezer. Opponents are caught as in the vise of a nutcracker.

West dare not throw diamond jack. This would give south diamond and spade tricks for the rest. On the other hand, west hates to give up a spade. But east may have a spade stopper.

So, suppose he throws a spade. East is now in bad shape. Should he let go of a spadelet? If he does, the four last tricks will be taken with the spades in dummy.

The only alternative is for east to fling heart queen. If he does south takes heart seven and wins the rest with top spades.

You have probably been squeezed so much, it bores you.

The Movie Column

By HELEN BANNERMAN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

"Great Expectations," the British-made screen version of Dickens' story, is going to bring a lot of pleasure to both Dickens' devotees and those who never read him. The devotees probably will suffer most at some necessary adaption of characters.

Cineguild, which also made "Brief Encounter," had to drop many minor characters to get the novel compressed into two hours. Apart from this the producers have spared no pains to make the picture a perfect Dickens gem and the period and the people are vividly brought to life.

The stars are John Mills and Valerie Hobson, with Bernard Miles, Francis L. Sullivan, Martita Hunt and Alec Guinness. The film was directed by David Lean.

Sam Again:

Samuel Goldwyn roused up a furious controversy over his subject and his motives when he announced loudly in public just before the world premiere of his picture, "The Best Years of Our Lives," that Hollywood had better get out of its gilded rut or be beaten on all counts by British pictures. Now he has said it again but toned it down.

Recently arrived in England for a short holiday, he told reporters he was "interested in the making of finer motion pictures in Britain, in the UUnited States or anywhere else in the world. It is a fortunate thing that British pictures are finding larger audiences in America and throughout the world."

Since the screen is "democracy in action, I believe that audiences can and will find out what they want to see," Mr Goldwyn said.

Rags to Riches:

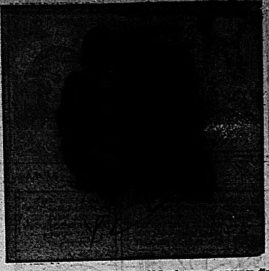
A few months ago a down-and-out languished in Hollywood—in the dog pound, to be exact, and he even was on the condemned list. Today movie producers in search of good dog actors are are beating a path to his door, which no longer is at the pound. "Shag," a three-year-old French sheep dog galloped to fame by his appearance in "It's a Wonderful Life," supporting James Stewart. His chance to appear in the picture was just luck.

Easy Money:

Sydney Greenstreet has been signed by Metro-Goldwyn-Meyer to play Evan Llewellyn Evans, the soap magnate, in "The Hucksters", starring Clark Gable and Deborah Kerr, and will be paid $50,000 for his role, which will require four days before the cameras.

TO INVADE NAHANNI VALLEY

Toronto, Dec. 30 — (CP) — A peacetime airborne invasion that will seek to crack the mystery of British Columbia's famed Nahanni Valley will be launched next summer by a group of veterans of the U. S. Marine Corps it was announced here yesterday. Heading the group is Lieut. W. E. Bateman of the U. S. Marines who is member of a company of adventurers formed while serving in the Pacific. They will use parachutes and employ army "ducks" to invade the valley.



AT THE McCARTHY — Catherine McLeod, screen newcomer discovered by Frank Borzage, producer and director of "I've Always Loved You," Republic's Technicolor musical romance. Miss McLeod plays the leading feminine role in this dramatic story of a talented and lovely young girl who falls under the spell of the great Goronoff, fascinating and brilliant conductor-pianist, starting today at the McCarthy Theatre.

If you've ever been swept up by glorious music, by dreams of greatness—touched by the magic of breath-taking color, there is something waiting for you that you'll never forget . . .

It's a motion picture called "I've Always Loved You." Seeing it, you'll find yourself bound up in the story of a great love—intoxicated by magnificent music and flawless color. You'll travel to Paris, Rio, to the sleek, cosmopolitan cities of an era just past. You'll roam over the lush, quiet beauty of American countryside. You'll share in the work and genius, the hushed expectancy of a great moment in a woman's life, and a great moment in music.

It's a touching, powerful story pictured with rare skill and feeling, bringing you the particular kind of enchantment that only a director like Frank Borzage—who gave you such never-to-be-forgotten screen triumphs as "Seventh Heaven," "Farewell to Arms" and "Three Comrades"—can make. Mr. Borzage has had a superb cast to work with . . . Philip Dorn, William Carter, Mme. Maria Ouspenskaya, and a new actress of unusual charm and talent. Her name is Catherine McLeod.

If you'd like to live with love, with splendor . . . see magnificent costumes, hear the superb music of the great pianist, Artur Rubinstein . . . if you'd like to sparkle, to sing, to soar into a radiant world, you'll see

CHAPTER 32.

"Here's my ticket, and here's all the letters Mother wrote and all Mrs. Crittendon wrote. You can read them on the train! Tell them—tell them I was married today if you like, but say that Ken has to go away immediately and that then I'll come. Oh, if you'll do this for me, Miss Richie — if you'll save me—we'll always be grateful, won't we, Ken? You see, the Crittendons are leaving for Washington or somewhere tomorrow; it would put them out terribly not to have anyone come. And as long as somebody does . ."

"We've got to get started, honey," said Lieutenant French.

"We're driving!" said the new Mrs. French on a gasp of delighted excitement. "We're going — where are we going, Ken?"

"I don't know. But we'll never get there unless we get going," her husband replied. Again Emily laughed for sheer joy.

"I'm simply wearing him out!" she announced proudly; "and thank you, thank you, thank you! You'll never know what you've done for me. Good-by!"

"Good-by," Jennifer returned. She gathered her umbrella, suitcase, and handbag together and composedly walked toward the gate. "The Sacramento train at eleven-thirty stops at Davenbury, doesn't it?" she asked the official.

"No ma'am," he returned promptly, punching tickets busily. "You take a bus from Berkeley. The last bus waits for this train."

"I see." It sounded somewhat complicated, but Jennifer, who had felt tired and achy a few minutes earlier, was quite refreshed now. She had escaped from the doubt and weariness of uncertainty; she was going somewhere, to an unknown household, to persons who neither knew nor cared who she was. She would be given a blessed interval for planning and thinking. When Emily French came to take her job Jennifer could go home and have a talk with Mary, perhaps see Mollie! To neither would she dare say more than "At the last minute I just couldn't!" but other brides had said that and had not been disgraced. She would get the hardest war work she could find, and after a while everyone would begin to talk of something else.

The train window reflected her face and the swaying lights of the car as in a black mirror. A conductor called Berkeley, letting in a blast of cold air. Jennifer got out onto a platform whose iron roofs ran sheets of rain. It was very cold. The big green bus was waiting; she was the only passenger. She had fallen into a sort of uncomfortable dream when they reached the end of the line, and an eager-faced woman of perhaps forty-five looked into the bus from under a dripping umbrella and said, "Oh, thank goodness! You're Emily Waskell? Come on. She's here, Kane!" the woman then called over her shoulder, and a man came forward, took possession of Jennifer's little suitcase with a look of yawning bewilderment, and escorted both women to a waiting car.

Jennifer explained her presence; neither man nor wife offered any objection to the change. They were both evidently concerned only with the possibility of getting away the next day upon what was to them, at least, a highly important trip. Jennifer was too tired to elaborate much upon her own circumstances; she satisfied herself by saying that she was to substitute for Emily Waskell for ten days and had had "no time to pack."

She was only vaguely aware that they had reached a large house, looming up in a steep garden full of trees, that she was following Mrs. Crittendon up various flights of stairs and steps, indoors and out, that they had traversed a wide upper hall and that she was alone in a comfortable bedroom with a bathroom and a big empty closet flanking it on one side and two dripping french windows evidently giving on a veranda on the other. What attracted her more than any of these was a bed opened to show fresh sheets and warm blankets. She got out of her damp clothes, snapped off lights, and in less than five minutes after entering the room had sunk deep in exhausted and dreamless sleep.

Mrs. Crittendon, evidently in a very whirlwind of packing and last preparations, came into her room on the following morning at nine o'clock. Jennifer had been lying in a dreamy state, drifting between waking and sleep; now she roused fully and gave a startled glance at the clock.

"My goodness! I am sorry . . . . I am sorry . . , I should have set the alarm," she stammered. The other woman's smile reassured her.

"You needn't worry, everything's biggledy-piggledy this morning," she said. "I looked in on you before, but you were sound. My trunk has to go off before ten—we're flying, you know, and sending the trunks by train. Did you sleep?"

"Too well," Jennifer sat up, blinking. Rain was still veiling the windows; the day was dark. Mrs. Crittendon, who had been moving briskly about the room, opening a drawer here or a closet there, and gathering such unrelated objects as an electric warming pad, a bathing suit, and a silver-framed triple folding leather frame with the pictures of children in it, came at last to sit by the bed.

"Take a bath if you want to," she said, "for Gloria spent last night with my sister in San Francisco and she isn't home yet. All I want you to do, Miss— Miss Richie, is it?—is just stay here with her, companion her for a month, go with her to movies or downtown to shop or have sodas—that sort of thing. I've a good staff here: Tom Lung in the kitchen, Minna—she's Swiss and she's been with me twelve years, I couldn't get along without her—and Gerda who helps Minna — she's her niece and she isn't much use but she's company for Mina. We've a boy, Tom; he's fourteen. He's in a school in Santa Barbara.

"Tut-tut-tut," muttered Mrs. Crittendon, finding an infinitesimal moth hole in the bathing suit. "What I want," she went on, "is company for Gloria. I suggested her staying with my sister — that upsets school. I forgot to tell you she goes to Miss Percival's; you've heard of that school?"

"Oh yes. I think Nancy Newell went there."

"She did indeed." Jennifer's hostess looked pleased. "You know her?"

"I've been a model in Vogelsang's for more than two years. I had just given it up to—to go into war work, when I—got this chance."

"From Emily Waskell?"

"She's Emily French now."

"I haven't seen her since she was about seven. Well, I'm sure we are enormously obliged to you for taking her place. You won't find it hard, and you and Emily make any arrangement that seems good to you for dividing the salary. . . . Minna will die when I show her this," said Mrs. Crittendon, referring again to the moth hole. "Aren't they the little devils! Now, my dear, I'm going to show you something," she went on as Jennifer, who had been going back and forth between bathroom and dressing table, suddenly presented herself completely dressed with an expectant expression. "Mr. Crittendon's mother was a semi-invalid for years, and we had this little kitchen installed for her nurses right here across the hall from her rooms. I see Minna has left your tray here. Can you cook enough—of course you can!—to make yourself some toast? There's orange juice; heat up the coffee. Did she bring eggs? She did. Then just pile things; Gerda'll take them away — and come to my room right straight in front and by that time Gloria ought to be home."

Jennifer followed these directions scrupulously if somewhat nervously, and enjoyed her breakfast. When she had finished and entered the upper hall again, it was to cautiously open doors that might lead to the rooms of the mistress of the house.

The great open vault of the stairway, faced with tall windows, was plunged in a grayish gloom this morning, like a place under water and framed in wihte closed doors. This one opened upon a neat pleasant room, perhaps a guest room; that one must give upon Gloria's apartment. There was no mistaking the mirror stuck with snapshots, the bed swept by a pink silk cover, the camera and radio and victrola, the framed photographs—two of them of the same handsome young man in uniform. She was standing undecided before two still unexplored portals when she heard Mrs. Crittendon's voice, light, cheerful, and penetrating, at the telephone.

"She is an absolute darling, Antonia. Tom fell for her instantly. We've got hold of a gentlewoman!" he said. Quite lovely, tawny-colored all over—warm skin, and gray-blue eyes. I wish to goodness we could keep her, for I certainly can't imagine Emmeline Waskell's child having any charm. You never heard a nicer voice, with a laugh in it like a nice boy's. Gloria'll love her.

Jennifer retreated with blazing cheeks and a happily hammering heart and sat down upon a medieval carved black oak bench at the top of the stairs.

She heard the click of the telephone as her employer put the receiver back on its hook, but she sat where she was for a moment or two, waiting for her cheeks to cool and the elated beating of her heart to grow normal. A moment later a young blonde maidservant came upstairs and Jennifer could ask directions from her.

While Mrs. Crittendon was distractedly moving about her beautiful bedroom with arms full of exquisite apparel and Jennifer hovered near her trying to help, Gloria came in. She was so exactly the type of girl who bought frocks at Vogelsang's that Jennifer knew a great deal about her at once. She was pretty enough—all the girls were—with a mane of silky, well-brushed hair hanging on her shoulders and curling up with just the right casualness at the tips. Her skin was flawless, her eyes skillfully enlarged and enhanced by violet shadows and oily black paint; her lip red matched her rouge, her handbag, and the tiny cap that was set far back on her head in a sea of waves. Her stockings were transparent. All her clothes — she did not wear many garments—were expensive and smart; her heels were elevated on spindles five inches high.

She had exactly the manner Jennifer expected her to have — languid at moments, fiery at others, artificial always. Bored, insolent, amusing, arrogant, and friendly by turns, she followed the exact pattern of the younger set as they exhibited themselves at Vogelsang's. It was a Vogelsang dress, Jennifer noted, that she was wearing at this instant.

The older saleswomen knew exactly how to handle these girls. Quiet amusement as if to say "You're completely unpredictable little character, Miss Doris, you think of things no other girl alive ever thought of," was one method. Deep attention and concern were always acceptable. Flattery was, of course, the surest and quickest way.

Jennifer's eyes, fixed on Gloria, deliberately flattered her. It was easy to look shocked, entertained, amazed at the younger girl's sallies. Gloria was seventeen; her constant effort and ambition were to appear cultured, sophisticated, experienced as any worldling of forty. She took an immediate fancy to Jennifer as supplying a sympathetic and credulous listener, and by three o'clock, when Mrs. Crittendon said good-by, the arrangement she had made for her daughter appeared to be a definite success.

"No listen, Gloria," she said, "week nights you're to be in bed at nine. Be reasonable, dear; you know you need your sleep while school is on. You know exactly what you can do, and I trust you to do it. Any plan you make for Saturdays or Sundays is all right. Miss Summers is to be here those days, but telephone Aunt Natalie if you want to go into town, go there to her house, and start on your party from there. May Summers was my governess," Mrs. Crittendon interrupted herself to say impressively to Jennifer. "She's sixty, but she's a perfect darling! And little parties, Gloria," she went on, "just a few of you, and all boys and girls you know. You will remember, won't you? Miss Richie and May Summers will be with you, so that if you get into any pillakia, have her telephone somebody—Uncle Ross or Dr. Jordan—anyone. Minna'll take care of your clothes, Miss Summers will telephone me every Sunday night, and I hope everything will go all right!"

Gloria was lying across a low, stuffed armchair, her neck resting on one arm, her knees hooked over the other, her mane of hair falling free.

"I wish you'd kindly tell me why Miss Summers has to horn in every Sunday. I thought it was just if I was going to town," she observed sulkily.

"Now please don't start that again, darling," her mother said absently, looking thoughtfully into her purse as she stirred its contents with vermilion-tipped fingers. "Daddy is very fussy about the conventions, and rightly; you'll have a very nice time, and we'll be back five weeks from today. Good-by dear . . . ."

For the final kisses and farewells that ensued Gloria hauled herself to her feet. She and Jennifer had entered, bedraggled and weary, the night before. The rain had stopped; clouds were rolling off to the southwest; watery sunlight shone over the garden and over the panorama of hillside and bay that unrolled below it.

When the girls turned back into the house Gloria instantly led the way to her own luxurious bedroom upstairs and seized a blue-enameled telephone. Her eyes were lazily fixed on Jennifer as she talked.

POISONED

Emery found evidence a number of years ago, however, that the custom of killing servants and burying them with their masters was revived by the Nubian kings 500 or 600 years before Christ. The Nubians bashed in the skulls of their victims, and even buried the king's horses with him.

At Sakkara, before the war, Emery found what he believes to be the graveyard of United Egypt's first kings. Before he quit digging in 1939 to become a colonel in the British Army, Emery found the tombs of Hor-Aha, who, he said, was almost certainly the first king of the First dynasty, and of Zer, second king of the First dynasty.

Now Emery has opened a tomb which he believes to be that of King Zer. He thinks that Merneith was Zer's Queen, because their names appear together on imprints made in the mud which sealed the wine jars found in the tomb. The hieroglyphs representing their names are among the oldest known.

In Merneith's tomb, Emery found the remains of a great wooden coffin, broken vessels of Alabaster and other stones, pottery wine vessels, the remains of burned furniture and a few charred bones which may be those of the queen.

RUSSIA CHARGES

tation resolution adopted unanimously by the United Nations General Assembly Dec. 14.

He called for an item-by-item discussion of the American plan in order to make "absolutely necessary corrections and then proceed without delay with preparation of the international convention of the prohibition of the production and use of atomic and other major weapons adaptable to mass destruction, having in mind the draft convention, submitted by the Soviet government on July 19, 1946 (this was the Russian plan for atomic control)."

Gromyko spoke first when the commission convened at 11:11 a.m. E.S.T. He delivered his talk in English, a rare thing for him.

His proposal for a detailed consideration of the United States plan would have the effect of postponing the final decision by the commission, for which the American delegation has been pressing.

After attacking the United States' proposals that the veto be removed from atomic punishments as a revision of the charter, Gromyko said that the Soviet government had no objection to discussing the United States proposals "in detail".

"The Soviet government considers it necessary that the above mentioned and other defects in the American draft be removed and that the submitted draft be brought into conformity with the decision of the General Assembly and with the charter of the United Nations," he said.

Fight for No Veto.

The United States was fighting strongly for a decision on an atomic control system which would permit no veto on the punishment of powers breaking an atomic code.

"The problem was put squarely before the full United Nations Atomic Energy Commission in the shape of an 89-page report which laid the ground-work of a complete system of international control and inspection advocated by the United States.

Every section of the report was approved by at least 10 delegates of the 12-member commission except the bitterly-contested provisions on the veto. The majority was said to be divided on the matter of wording, and not because of a fundamental split on the necessity of prompt, unhindered punishments.

The long document was completed last Friday by commission delegates sitting as a working committee. Russia did not participate in the final work on the report and the Soviet position was left in doubt as the commission met today. Poland abstained in the hope that the five Great Powers could achieve unanimity before the show-down came.

The report was written for the U. N. Security Council and was due to be submitted by tomorrow.

Follow Lines of Baruch.

In the main the report followed Bernard Baruch, U. S. delegate, the lines of the plan proposed by last June 14, when the commission first met, for an international system of control and inspection established by treaty among the member countries.

This treaty would set up an international authority having atomic energy and any new developments that might arise in that field.

In brief, the treaty would:

1. Prohibit the manufacture, possession and use of atomic weapons.
2. Require the disposal of existing stocks of atomic weapons.
3. Afford representatives of the authority full freedom of inspections in the participating countries, "unhindered by national or local authorities."
4. Require the authority to promote among all countries the exchange of basic scientific information on atomic energy for peaceful ends.
5. Specify those violations that would constitute international crimes and establish the nature of measure of enforcement and punishment.
6. Require that serious violations be reported immediately by the authority of the nations signing the treaty, to the U. N. General Assembly and to the Security Council.

Baruch earlier lined up his forces for a finish fight.

REPORT BREAKUP OF FALANGIST NETWORK

Hendaye, France, Dec. 30 — (AP)—French police reported Saturday the breakup of a Spanish Falangist spy network in southern France which they said was compiling information on the numerous Spanish Republican refugees north of the border. Five persons were arrested in three different places along the coast between here and Bordeaux, then released on parole. Two of these, a French woman from St. Jean-de-Luz, and a Basque youth, were rearrested and taken to Toulouse for trial by military authorities.

PANTHERS GET PRIVATE CAR

El Paso, Tex., Dec. 30 (AP) — Three freedom-loving panthers who found their cage on a train crossing Texas too cramped and chewed their way out have won their fight for a private car. They left El Paso yesterday en route to California with an entire car for pacing purposes. Dr. Noble Hamilter, trainer and shipper of the animals, who flew here Saturday night from Dallas, decided it would be safer and simpler to put the panthers in another car than attempt to repair their wooden cage and crate them again.

Students Protest Alleged Rape Of Chinese Girl

By TOM MASTERSON

Peiping, Dec. 30 —(AP)—American authorities ordered U. S. military personnel and their families off the streets of Peiping this morning as students of Yenching University began marching into the city in a demonstration against the alleged rape of a 20-year-old Chinese girl by a U. S. Marine.

All Marines were confined to their compounds.

Chinese authorities sought to dissuade the students from the anti-American demonstration but no physical resistance was offered.

About 2,000 Yenching students were moving into the city from the north. The university is seven miles from the city limits. Students of Fujen Catholic University and National Peking University were expected to join the march.

Unrest over the "incident" spread to Shanghai, where buses owned by several Chinese universities coursed the main streets bearing such placards as "Down with America" and "Americans, get out of China."

In Tientsin, students of Peiyang and Nankai universities decided to stage a three-day strike starting today in protest against the alleged rape. They prepared to cable President Truman, urging the withdrawal of all American troops from China.

Distribute Leaflets

Students distributed leaflets reading "We were objected for American aid to China during the war but today the U. S. government still is supplying China with weapons and military personnel. What for? American military supplies are greatly prolonging China's civil war."

The situation was aggravated by the alleged fatal beating of a Chinese factory worker at Tangku, near Tientsin, by a group of Marines celebrating Christmas Eve. Marine authorities detained two Marines in connection with the man's death.

A Chinese newspaper's charges that the Peiping girl had been raped precipitated the first protest meeting of students on Saturday. Some students during a disorderly assembly demanded capital punishment for the Marines but the gathering broke up when others shouted "Why don't you protest the rape of Chinese women by Soviet troops in Manchuria?"

The Marine Corps announced Saturday that two Marines "allegedly involved" were being held, and that one had admitted relations with the girl on a professional basis.

Tip by Trucker Proves False

Hamilton, Dec. 30 (CP).—Police said today that James Mutch of suburban Westdale had informed them that he and his small daughter were the persons a Toronto truck driver picked up on the outskirts of Hamilton last night. The trucker, Charles Collins, later told police he thought the little girl might have been the missing Marion Rusnak of St. Catharines.

Mutch telephoned police after hearing a broadcast based on the truck driver's report. Collins said he picked up a man and a little girl on the outskirts of Hamilton and let them off as he entered the built-up section of the city.

"The man asked me for a lift to Longwood Road, Hamilton," Collins said. "I'm not supposed to carry any passengers but I could not refuse a little child a lift in that weather. The girl only spoke once after she got into the cab and that was to say she was cold."

After Brantford police received Collins' report, they stopped automobiles and trucks travelling east and west to check passengers. They also asked the drivers to notify Hamilton police if they saw a man and a little girl on the highway.

Chemical Fumes Overcome 75 Atlanta Firemen

Atlanta, Ga., Dec. 30 (AP). — Chemical fumes released when a stubborn eight-hour fire ate into supplies in a drug store in Atlanta's financial district overcame 75 firemen yesterday, sending 52 to hospitals.

Firemen dropped like flies as the unidentified gases poured up from the basement of the building. They fell in the building and on the street. Twenty-seven were sprawled along the street and sidewalk at one time as doctors and attendants moved among them administering oxygen.

Ambulances with sirens screaming dashed from the scene to Grady Hospital and then back again in a steady stream reminiscent of the Dec. 7 conflagration which snuffed out 119 lives at the Winecoff Hotel.

"Every time the wind tossed that smoke at a fireman, he went down," said F. J. Bowen, assistant fire chief. "It had a sweetish smell, and when you licked your lips you got a sweet taste. This was the most difficult basement fire we have ever battled in Atlanta."

The wind wafted the smoke and fumes to the street in heavy waves. As the fight went on in the early morning hours, Bowen ordered evacuation of an adjacent three-storey hotel and the five-storey Atlanta Journal building housing southern division headquarters of The Associated Press.

Bowen said firemen discovered several gallon cans that had contained an embalming fluid in the drug store basement. H. C. Naylor, president of the Lane Drug Co. which operated the store, said the basement contained "general drug stocks" and that no embalming fluid or ether was stored there. He estimated the loss at $40,000 to $50,000.

"A whiff of that gas made everybody sick," said Fire Chief G. D. Maddox. "Practically the whole bunch had to quit at some time or other. I got sick, but rested and got over it."

Pravda Brands 'Ultimatum' Story An 'Invention'

Moscow, Dec. 30 (AP) — A special Pravda dispatch from Dairen today branded as "tendentious" and "sensational" reports that a United States naval vessel had been given an "ultimatum" to leave the Russian-controlled port on Dec. 21.

The dispatch—first Soviet press comment on the reports—said that "several days ago correspondent (William H.) Newton of the Scripps Howard staff reported in the press that an American vessel, which was in Dairen Dec. 18 to Dec. 20, was compelled to leave port through an ultimatum by Soviet military authorities.

"This report", the dispatch continued, "was presented by Newton in a sensational tone as an 'incident in Dairen.' In connection with this, our correspondent learned from an authoritative source that Newton's report does not present correctly the facts of the visit to Dairen by the American war vessel, and is tendentious.

The Pravda dispatch said local port authorities received word of the vessel's arrival after it had appeared Dec. 28, and that the American Embassy in China had asked the Soviet Embassy to inform proper authorities an unarmed vessel carrying a government courier with official mail for the Consulate General would arrive Dec. 18 and stay for 48 hours.

But, Pravda said, the presence of any other passengers aboard was not mentioned. When the vessel arrived, the captain informed a representative of the Soviet command that besides the American diplomatic courier two American correspondents and a representative of the Standard Oil Company were aboard and coming in for a stay in Dairen.

"A representative of the Soviet command said that inasmuch as he had received no notification of the supposed arrival of the persons mentioned, these persons could not remain in port."

The Pravda dispatch which said that after the 48-hour deadline had expired—a time limit which it said the Americans themselves had established—the U.S. Consul informed the Soviet representative that the vessel could not leave on the appointed date, because the captain had been detained in the city of Dairen.

"In connection with this representation," the dispatch said, "the ship remained in port several more hours unobstructed."

The dispatch concluded by asserting that Newton's report on the ultimatum and demand to leave port were "inventions" to create a sensation. Newton's story was written for the combined world press.

The Pravda story indicated that the Russians do not regard the situation as an "incident" and believe that they behaved correctly. Apparently they feel that the matter is closed.

FAIL TO HEAR WHOLE OF HIS SPEECH

Boston, Dec. 30 (AP)—Dr. Harlow Shapley, Harvard astronomer, innocently started a minor tempest last night by wise-cracking that the only way to save the human species might be to kill off all young men of promising genius. Shortly after his speech was delivered before American Association for Advancement of Science, Dr. Shapley began getting queries from persons who had not heard the whole speech. They wanted to know how he would accomplish the destruction and how soon he proposed to begin.

Carrie Jacobs Bond Dies in California

Hollywood, Calif., Dec. 30 — (CP)— Carrie Jacobs Bond, author of "End of a Perfect Day," "I Love You Truly" and other well-loved songs, died following a heart attack Saturday.

Her song writing career destined to produce 175 songs, began at 32 after the death of her second husband.

It was not until she established her own publishing house and began giving recitals that the rewards were large enough to stave off hunger.

On the night of her first recital she had no proper dress for the occasion. Alone in her apartment she noticed a pair of lace curtains on a window. She went to work and when she sat down at the piano, she was clothed in her curtains.

"End of a perfect day" was written at the end of a perfect day. With the sun setting behind the California mountains, she sat at the summit of Mount Rubidoux, California, viewing the scene. Soon she had out a pencil and paper and jotted down the lyric.

A survey in recent years showed that "End of a Perfect Day" had sold 5,000,000 copies.

Of her music she said: "The multitude needs music perhaps more than their cultured friends. Let me write simple songs for simple people."

During a recital at the White House, President Theodore Roosevelt told her: "Mrs. Bond, you will never say any truer words than those." She had just played one of her songs containing the words: "It ain't so much the doing as they way the thing is did."

One of her mother's ancestors, John Howard Payne, was the author of "Home Sweet Home."

IRELAND MAKING REAL MONEY BY EXPORTING DOGS

Shipping Majority of Greyhounds to England but Some to United States

Dublin, Dec. 30, —(AP)—Ireland is exporting more Greyhounds than it did O'Leary's during the potato famine a few decades back.

Breeding, training and shipping the racing canines to Britain—and lately to the United States—has become big business which may soon catch up to the kindred horse breeding.

Latest figures from the department of Industry and Commerce show that it has proved profitable for Ireland to have gone to the dogs.

During the eight months ending August, 1946, 6,252 Greyhounds were exported at an aggregate value of £641,900 ($2,567,960) That's an average price of £103 ($412) per pooch, representing in addition to a potential purse winner, plenty of beef and soft-boiled eggs, a necessity to the training diet.

This figure was an increase of 1,300 dogs over the corresponding period of 1945. In addition, the dogs brought an average of £5 ($20) more per animal.

While the Greyhounds are creeping up, they still have a few laps to catch the equine racers. During the same period 17,978 horses were exported at an average price of £161 ($644) for a total of £2,894,381 ($11,577,524).

Greatest market for Greyhounds is across the Irish Sea in Britain, where dog racing is booming, London alone supporting 20 tracks. Britain breeds many of its own Greyhounds, but food rationing restricts kennels.

FLOODED WITH OFFERS TO BUY CONTEST CAR

Toronto, Dec. 30 — (CP)—Mr. and Mrs. Scott, of suburban East York, found that the 1946 model car they won in a radio contest Saturday night brought them a first-class headache. Before the radio contest ended they were deluged with a flood of telephone calls, messages and personal visits from prospective buyers. One man appeared at their door with a bundle of bills and a cash offer to buy the auto.

Canadian Sport Snapshots

Montreal, Dec. 30—(CP)—Indications that the days of the strictly amateur hockey player may be numbered came from two significant actions by the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association at its semi-annual executive meeting at Toronto last week.

In one blunt ultimatum the C.A.H.A. served notice on the Canadian Olympic Committee that the latter body would have to make its amateur standards conform to those of the C. A. H. A. otherwise they could go dig up a Canadian representative for themselves from the ranks of the wholly idealistic puckchasers, if there are any, for the 1948 Olympics.

Then, as an important condition for the merger of the two big international hockey bodies in the world, the C. A. H. A. would require the new federation also to accept the same definition of amateurism, which winks openly at payments to athletes as long as they aren't "actively engaged" in professional sport of a pro league.

The two bodies involved in the intended tie-up are the International Ice Hockey Association on this continent and the Ligue Internationale de Hockey sur Glace, which controls the sport in Europe.

The big snag in the Olympic problem is that the committee for the world games has a very strict code which would bar any C. A. H. A. team. The C.A.H.A. agreement with the National Hockey League provides a professional taint on the Olympic amateur viewpoint.

The Olympic standard allow only bare expense payments, working on the assumption the athlete is well enough off so that loss of his pay cheques while participating in the games won't make any difference to him.

The C.A.H.A. wants it understood that the vast majority of hockey players are just honest working blokes, and that they should be recompensed for loss of their salaries while away from their jobs. The little matter of payments from their clubs also would rank high with the boys, who probably prefer substantial green stuff to the laurel wreaths of the Olympics.

Many of the boys are veterans too, so the lure of travel to far places isn't as strong as it used to be.

With Canada the major source of hockey players for the world, other countries may be forced to play ball and adopt the "semi-amateur" idea. Otherwise their sources of raw material might be threatened.

Sports Roundup

By JOHN D. HAMILTON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New York, Dec. 30. (CP)—One year ago Johnny Greco was being touted as the best Canadian welterweight since Jimmy McLarnin but today he was skidded down to eighth place among the division's contenders and doesn't appear to have a chance to get a title bout. . . Our authority for the Montreal slugger's rating is Nat Fleischer, editor of "The Ring" magazine and one of the most authoritative observers of boxing. . . .

The Rise And Fall of El Greco

Greco's story has been featured by so many ups and downs that he has been termed "the Elevator Boy" . . . He slugged his way nearly to the top of a somewhat shoddy heap of wartime welterbelters but never managed to get a title shot . . . His most widely publicized bouts included a series of three with Beau Jack, a pretty good fighter who once held half of the lightweight crown, but Johnny was disposed of last Summer by the Augusta, Ga., Negro. . . In his last meeting with Beau Johnny was badly beaten and in his most recent local outing —against Tony Pellone at Madison Square Garden —the Canadian lost by a single point on a split decision. . . .

Boarding House Pie

One of Johnny's troubles has been management. . .From the start he was, as they say on Broadway, cut up more ways than a boarding house pie. . .He started out in Montreal under the tutelage of Pit Audette but by the time he was a main eventer, a pair of New York managers—Murray and Abe Elkin—had taken over. . .When Johnny came to New York. The Elkins were eased out and Frankie Doyle took over as "front man". . .A number of New York sports writers, notably the Waspish Dan (N.Y. Daily Mirror) Parker, claim that Doyle "Fronts" for one Frankie Carbo, a mysterious figure said to own the contracts of many fighters—including Greco's last opponent here, Pellone. . . Whether the confused management setup of Greco has anything to do with it or not, Johnny has defied form throughout his New York career. . . .

Tougher And Tougher

While Johnny slipped, the welterweight division grew tougher and tougher. . . Only 10 days ago Ray Robinson—recognized as out of Grego's class—won the title in a bout with Tommy Bell of Youngstown. . . According to Fleischer's ratings, Tippy Larkin of Garfield, N.J. is No. 1 contender, with Bell second, Beau Jack Third, Marty Servo, the retired champion, fourth, Jackie Wilson, of Los Angeles fifth, Willie Joyce of Gary, Ind., sixth and Pellone, seventh. . . .From most corners of the ring it doesn't look as if McLarnin's laurels are in danger . . . . .

Open Letter Read in Toronto Roman Catholic Churches

Toronto, Dec. 30 — (CP) — An open letter to Roman Catholic voters was read yesterday in almost all Toronto churches urging that Catholics exercise their voting franchise to defeat "those who have shown themselves to be bigots" and those connected with "a party basically anti-Christian and revolutionary." The letter noted that while no alarming crisis is imminent in Canada, "the anti-Christian party which is so strong in many European countries has its representatives in our midst."

Kramer and Mulloy Take Last Two Single Matches From Bromwich and Pails

By GAYLE TALBOT

Melbourne, Dec. 30 (AP)—Jack Kramer and Gardnar Mulloy completed the rout of Australia's Davis Cup defenders today with smashing victories in the two final singles matches, thereby giving the United States a clean sweep of the series.

Kramer, top-ranking member of the American team, battered the veteran John Bromwich into submission in straight sets, 8-6, 6-4, 6-4, while Mulloy bowled over Dinny Pails 6-3, 6-3, 6-4.

In the five matches comprising the challenge round, which got under way here last Thursday, the invaders lost only two sets, giving a demonstration of superlative play and setting a mark that other countries may find hard to match in many years. It was the first time since Great Britain blanked the United States in 1935 that the challenge round had been decided by a 5-0 score.

Sir Norman Brookes, President of the Australian Lawn Tennis Association, who presented the historic trophy to Walter Pate, non-playing American captain, paid high tribute to the victors who, he said, "have without doubt proved themselves the champion nation."

"My team has done a good job —better, perhaps than I hoped for," Pate smilingly replied.

Although the last singles matches were little more than exhibitions, inasmuch as the United States had clinched its title to the cup last week by winning the first three matches, a crowd of 13,000 crowded into Kooyong stadium for the finale and gave the Americans a thundering ovation.

In the opening matches last week, Ted Schroeder—surprise singles selection by Pate—whipped Bromwich in five sets 3-6, 6-1, 6-2, 0-6 and 6-3. Kramer trounced Pails, second-ranked Australian player 8-6, 6-2, 9-7, and Kramer and Schroeder then clinched the cup for the United States by downing Bromwich and Adrian Quist in the doubles 8-6, 6-2, 9-7.

Pate, Kramer, Schroeder and Frank Parker will start home by plane on Jan. 5, bringing with them the cup which the United States lost to Australia by a 3-2 score at the Merion Chick Club at Haverford, Pa., in 1939. There have been no matches since then because of the war.

Mulloy and William Talbert are entered in the South Australian championships starting at Adelaide Jan. 4 Mulloy, Talbert and Tom Brown will compete in the Australian championships opening at Sydney, Jan. 17.

What's Doing in Sport

(By The Canadian Press)

Tom Yawkey, wealthy Boston sportsman who sank a fortune into the Red Sox to bring them from the bottom of the American League cellar position to the 1946 pennant, was named Major League baseball's No. 1 executive of 1946 in the Sporting News' annual citations of the year's outstanding men in the diamond sport, it was announced yesterday. Yawkey was openly criticized when he started off several years ago by spending lavish sums to obtain top flight players like Jimmy Foxx from the Athletics and Joe Cronin from the Washington Senators. They said he would find a pennant winner could not be bought. Yawkey went ahead, devoting time and effort to development of farm clubs as well as the Red Sox. His efforts paid off in the 1946 American League race and almost gave Boston a world series winner.

Eddie Dyer of the world champion St. Louis Cardinals and Clay Hopper of Montreal Royals of the International League were named top managers of the major and minor circuits respectively.

A touring University of Toronto basketball team was defeated last night at Cincinnati 73-37 by a fast-breaking Cincinnati team.

A crowd of 15,000 yesterday saw Misissippi College score a 43-7 win over the University of Mexico football team at Mexico City.

Jackie Callura, 126 of Hamilton, was given a technical KO by Archie Devine, 126, New York at the end of the fifth in a scheduled eight-round bout at Brooklyn Saturday night.

Several skaters from Manitoba were expected to compete in the third annual midwest open skating championships at Detroit New Year's Day, including Eileen Whalley of Winnipeg, Canada's No. 2 senior women's skating star.

A touring United States hockey team from Boston lost its third straight game to a Swedish club yesterday at Stockholm. The score was 4-1. The Boston team is entered in the World Amateur Championships in Prague in February.

Long - Range Agreement With N.H.L. Wanted at a Higher Figure Than $20,000

By WILLIAM H. DUMSDAY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Dec. 30 —(CP)— New deals which would provide more income from professional and amateur sources today were aims of the already-prosperous Canadian Amateur Hockey Association officers of which think it has grown into such a "big business" it should start shelling out worthwhile remuneration to its leaders.

A three-day semi-annual meeting of the C.A.H.A. ended Sunday at a closed session with the relations committee of the National Hockey League in which the association sought a long-range agreement with the pros on better terms than the $20,000 annual payment received now for amateurs jumping to moneyed ranks.

Delegates also decided to extend negotiations with the Amateur Hockey Association of the United States with hopes of receiving a $100 fee for each player transferred across the border, an amount the American organization refused to pay.

Secretary George Dudley of Midland said the C.A.H.A. had developed into such a major enterprise that the men who run such a business should receive reasonable remuneration.

Can't Release Details.

Following Sunday's camera session, Dr. W. G. Hardy of Edmonton, president of the International Ice Hockey Association said N.H.L. and C.A.H.A. committees had made offers "acceptable to each other" but details could not be released until confirmation was obtained from respective principals.

Jim McCaffrey, manager of Ottawa Senators, who spoke unofficially, said his club was not a party to an interim injunction against Buffalo Bisons hockey club by the Ottawa Forum Company, operators of the Senators, when the meeting dealt with a protest from the N.H.L. that the injunction violated the agreement between the organizations.

Officers of the C.A.H.A. considered the protest in closed session Sunday but issued no statement regarding the injunction by which two members of the Senators are detained at Fort Erie by U. S. immigration officials.

Next Thursday and Friday in New York, Dr. Hardy and George Panter of Gravenhurst, president of the Ontario Hockey Association, are scheduled to reopen negotiations with Tom Lochart and other officials of the A.H.A. of U.S. in relation to player transfers.

Gordon a Test Case.

Test case in the dispute will propably revolve around Johnny (Flash) Gordon, voted Winnipeg's "most valuable" juvenile last winter and now a member of New York Rovers, amateur farm club of New York Rangers, for which Lockhart is business manager.

Jimmy Dunn of Winnipeg, president of the Manitoba Amateur Hockey Association, objected to Gordon's transfer when the youngster's name was read out with 109 others seeking transfers to play with American teams.

Gordon was scheduled to line up with Winnipeg Rangers juniors this season and Dunn said the M.A.H.A. had not been advised of the move until members read about Gordon playing for the Rovers in newspaper reports.

Pincher Creek Residents Have Had Fill of Snow

Pincher Creek, Alta., Dec. 30 — (CP)— Winter may be at the half-way mark but residents of this community 330 miles south of Edmonton have already had more than their share of it.

Isolated most of the time since mid-November, they are hoping a warm Chinook will stay with them long enough to do what neither man nor machinery has been able to accomplish — clear blocked roads.

Several brief Chinooks have melted some of the six feet of snow which has fallen in the district since then, but this weekend at least a couple of feet of snow lay everywhere except on small bare spots swept clear by winds.

Scores of residents have not been able to venture further than a neighbor's home, but most have managed to reach towns by using tractors, horses and sleighs.

In some cases ranchers have been forced to make roads with bulldozers to link their cattle with stacks of feed. Since mid-November residents of snowbound districts have been shovelling snow and plowing it aside with power machinery almost day after day, but for only a few days at best could they keep travel arteries open.

Highways Snowbound.

This weekend, more than six weeks after the beginning of a storm which blanketed southwestern Alberta with several feet of snow, some highways still were completely snowbound.

Waterton Lakes National Park, which received more than five feet of snow at mid-November and much since, continued to be isolated, and two hardy youths were forced to use skis to travel 40 miles to Pincher station so they might entrain for Lethbridge.

Not a single vehicle has been able to travel on the snowbound highway from Pincher Creek to Waterton Lakes National Park for six weeks and prospects for re-opening the highway were not encouraging this weekend.

Jitterbug Hockeyists! — When Boston's Bep Guidolin (left) collided with the Leafs' Joe Klukay during Saturday's night's fast-moving N.H.L. fixture at Maple Leaf Gardens, the two players gave out as though they were solid entrants in a local dance marathon. The Leafs withstood Boston's late third-period rally to win, 4-3.

TRUMAN PROCLAIMS END OF WAR HOSTILITIES

Army Repatriates 100,000, Releases 250,000 in Year

Beginning Made on Basic Framework for Peacetime

Ottawa, Dec. 31 — (CP)—The Canadian Army in 1946 discharged 250,000 and repatriated more than 100,000 of the men and women who brought it wartime lustre and, simultaneously, began electing the basic framework for a potential peacetime force of 25,000 regular and 180,000 reserve soldiers.

A year-end review issued by Army Headquarters was dominated largely by the bonded tasks of repatriation and demobilization; but it was dotted, too, with the establishment of the new system of five regional commands, with the opening training and research skirmishes against the wilderness of the north, with the formation of a brigade group as the nucleus of any new fighting army, with the announcement of educational qualifications designed to put the new force on a high mental plane.

Last January there were 110,000 Canadian servicemen and women still overseas. All but approximately 1,000 now have been returned.

Reperation officials also had to find transportation for half that many wives and children of Canadian servicemen.

More than 250,000 men and women left the army. Most of these veterans now are re-established on civvy street.

Although an advance party arrived at Fort Churchill, Man., late in 1945, that far northern port was not opened as a military base until shortly after the new year when several hundred men of Exercise Muskox — first major peacetime army manoeuvre — moved in.

Muskox, a 3,000-mile, 81-day trek of a handful of civilian scientists and soldiers through the little-known eastern Arctic and lush Mackenzie River basin, undoubtedly produced much scientific knowledge of benefit to soldier and civilian alike. Since late summer, Churchill, on Hudson Bay, has been a permanent joint service experimental station.

Takes Over Highway.

The army further expanded itself northward on taking over the Alaska Highway from its builders and former custodians, the Americans. Brig. Geoffrey Walsh, C.B.E., D.S.O., was appointed officer commanding and chief engineer in April, and the highway was renamed the North West Highway System.

The year saw disbandment of the Canadian Women's Army Corps. In all, more than 21,000 women and girls served with the C.W.A.C. at home and in the Mediterranean and European theatres.

In July, the army completed withdrawal of all men stationed in Newfoundland. Peak strength of the Canadian force there barely exceeded 6,000.

The long-awaited formation of the new brigade group of the new army was announced late in August. Its strength was given as about 7,000, and field units listed as components included the 71st. Regiment, Royal Canadian Horse Artillery; the 1st. Armored Regiment, Royal Canadian Dragoons; and the 2nd. Armored Regiment, Lord Strathcona Horse.

New Brigade Composed.

The brigade also contained components of the Royal Canadian Engineers, Signals, Army Service Corps, Ordnance, and Electrical and Mechanical Engineers. In addition, three former permanent force regiments, the Royal Canadian Regiment, Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry, and the Royal 22nd. Regiment were listed as comprising the infantry component of the brigade group.

Among many high-ranking officers retired during 1946 was Gen. H. D. G. Crerar, commander of the 1st. Canadian Army in Europe.

Biggest ceremonial anxiety undergone by the army was the visit of Field Marshal the Viscount Montgomery of Alamein. It created extra work but was singularly free from the volume of official red tape usually connected with similar affairs.

Defence Research Board

One of the last statements issued by former Defence Minister Abbott dealt with the formation of an Interim Defence Research Board.

At almost the same time, the army announced that five military districts would be disbanded and their functions absorbed by their respective command headquarters.

The districts done away with were No. 6 formerly at Halifax; No. 4, at Montreal; No. 2, at Toronto; No 10, at Winnipeg, and No. 13, at Calgary. The five remaining districts will be redesignated area headquarters under the commands.

Although there has been no organized recruiting drive since the formation of the new active force, enlistments during the latter part of 1946 came within approximately 10,000 of the proposed strength of the peacetime force.

In mid-April, new rates of pay and allowances for peacetime soldiers were announced. All ranks received a substantial upgrading. A married private, once trained, can draw more than $30 per week.

Early this winter the army, both active and reserve forces, obtained some 400 new Stuart and Sherman tanks. Among the first units to get them were the 1st Armored Regiment (Royal Canadian Dragoons), the Royal Canadian Armored Corps School at Camp Borden, the 2nd Armored Regiment (Lord Strathcona Horse), The R.C.E.M.E. School at Barriefield, and Reserve for units.

It was announced, too, that all personnel of the active force would be granted 30 days instead of the usual 14 days leave annually. And another announcement promised brighter fixtures and a more homelike atmosphere in barracks and barrack life.

Reeve 10th Term, Has Yet to Fight Election Campaign

Queenston, Dec. 31 — (CP)—Walter X. Sheppard, who has yet to fight an election campaign, yesterday was given an acclamation for his 10th term as reeve of Niagara township.

Robert Dawson, elected deputy reeve by acclamation, is about to start his 18th term on Lincoln County council. He served some of those terms as Niagara township's reeve.

BRITAIN, U.S. DRAFT PLANS FOR JOINT AIR FORCE

Schooling Would Be Standardized, Joint Trials Carried Out In Supersonic Flight

London, Dec. 31 — (AP)—The Daily Mail and Daily Telegraph today said in Washington dispatches that Great Britain and the United States had taken definite steps toward creation of "an Anglo-American airforce."

The Mail, discussing what it called the latest phase of the recently reported — and still not completely denied officially — British and American agreement for standardization of armaments, said "Draft plans for joint training" of R.A.F. and U.S. (Army) Airforce personnel were submitted yesterday to Gen. Carl A. Spaatz, U. S. Rrmy Airforce head, "for signature."

The Mail's dispatch, written by James Brough, its correspondent in Washington, said the schooling would be standardized; joint experiments would be carried out in such fields as supersonic flight and that British fliers would be taught the technique, at least of atomic bombing.

"The first step in this long term plan is the exchange of British and American fliers, already agreed to in principle by the United States," said Brough. "An Anglo-American airforce . . . is a logical conclusion."

No Official Comment

There was no immediate official comment either here or in Washington, but the Mail's dispatch was published just after an official denial was issued concerning a report published in the French press to the effect that Great Britain and the United States would sign a pact next March for mutual assistance in defence.

A foreign office spokesman, commenting on the French press report, said there had been no development along this line since Nov. 18, when Prime Minister Attlee denied in the House of Commons the existence of any reported military agreement between Britain and the United States.

The original report published here by the Communist Daily Workers concerning such as agreement admittedly was based on an Associated Press London dispatch of Oct. 30, which quoted "authoritative British military informants" as saying that the two countries had agreed to standardize weapons on American sizes and patterns.

Brough's story declared that "the exchange (of flying personnel for training purposes) goes further than any previously announced details for interlocking the two countries' armed forces.

"It means that besides arms and equipment, training and manpower will be standardized."

Survey Shows Hard-Boiled City Editor Not as Bad as He's Painted

By FRED KERNER
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New York, Dec. 31 —(CP)—If you are influenced by the movies and popular fiction—and most people are—then your impression of a newspaper city editor is not a good one. In movie and fiction versions, he is "one tough guy," just slightly less hardboiled than the fiction version of the managing editor.

You laymen are not the only ones who hold this impression. Just ask the average reporter what he thinks of his desk boss and you had better plug your ears when the news hound starts to reply.

When 26 of these ill-famed city editors get together, it should be something like a yarn from monthly horror stories. actually it was altogether different. Our curiosity got the better of us yesterday and we trotted down to Columbia University where 26 city editors from all parts of the United States are meeting at one of a series of month-long seminars for the purpose of studying the future of U.S. journalism.

Off to a good start, we discovered they aren't "old" ogres—the age average was 41. More statistical questions presented this picture about our quarry:

He averages 5 feet, 10 1-2 inches; weighs 175 pounds; is married; has 1.6 children; worked as a reporter 12 years before his present job; and is not athletic.

The editors spend an average of 47 hours a week at their respective desks. Spare time is spent in reading—and raising flowers, painting, sculpture and a few other like hobbies.

The main requirements of the job, they all agree, are honesty, enthusiasm, curiosity, college education, ability to spell and "a good pair of legs."

Reporters? They're all right and most said they would not stop their sons from getting into the newspaper business—but not their daughters. No explanation was forthcoming, but don't let that deter you girls.

"It's a Lucky Number" Said FDR When Approving 21-Cent Increase in Gold

Morgenthau Diary Reveals Late President's Unconventional Methods of Bolstering Prices

New York, Dec. 31. (AP)—The New York Times said today that first details of the voluminous diary of former Secretary of Treasury Henry Morgenthau, Jr., made public yesterday, disclosed that on one occasion during the first two years of the Roosevelt Administration the late President approved a rise of 21 cents in the price of gold commenting "It's a lucky number".

The disclosure of the contents of the diary was made in a paper by Jonathan Grossman, of City College, one of the historians preparing the diary for publication, at a meeting of the American Historical Association.

Grossman's paper dealt with President Roosevelt's grain and gold buying program in 1933-34.

Grossman quoted parts of the diary to describe the President's efforts to raise prices of farm commodities soon after his inauguration which showed:

October 16, 1933, the President called Morgenthau, then governor of the Farm Credit Administration, and said: "We have got to do something about the price of wheat. Can't you buy 25,000,000 bushels for Harry Hopkins (then Federal Relief Administrator) and see if you can't put the price up?"

Morgenthau bought 1,000,000 bushels at between 72 and 74 cents and bid for another million at 74 1-2 but the market dropped to 68. Morgenthau then placed a standing order for all wheat offered and the price rose to 74 7-8. The diary said that when the President heard about it he was elated. "Squeeze the life out of the shorts and put the price up just as far as you can," he said.

"I started in and evidently the crowd in the wheat pit was laying for me because I made little headway," the diary continued. "At about six minutes before closing time I gave them the gun and bought everything the Bears offered in order to reach our objective (90 cents). When the smoke cleared away we had bought 4,400,000 bushels. . . I felt literally dizzy while the thing was going on. I went home and went to bed for two hours after lunch."

To make the wheat price increase stick the President believed he would have to raise the price of gold and began to experiment with gold manipulation. The price was increased gradually from $20.67 to $29 an ounce. Beginning Oct. 25, 1933, each morning the President conferred with Morgenthau and Jesse Jones to set the price of gold for the day. On one day the conference decided on a rise of 21 cents.

"It's a lucky number," the President was quoted as saying, "because it's three times seven."

In the diary Morgenthau commented "if anybody ever knew how we really set the gold price through a combination of lucky numbers, etc., I think they would really be frightened."

COMMUNISM BIG ISSUE IN TORONTO ELECTION

Advertisements Stress Necessity of Voters Recognizing the Danger of Communism

Toronto, Dec. 31 —(CP)— Toronto's civic elections New Year's Day lost a certain amount of tang when the courts outlawed the vote on cocktail lounges — but the city's apathetic voters were roused again by the drums of an agitation to "beat the Communists."

It's an annual vote for mayor, four members of board of control, 18 members of council (two from each of nine wards), 18 members of the board of education. There's also a separate school board, but these members were elected last year for two-year terms.

Besides these ballots, Torontonians vote Wednesday on whether city council should be elected for two years instead of one; on whether they approve the Regent Park housing development which involves slum clearance and rebuilding; and on the civic square issue — involving development of a municipal buildings section adjacent to the present city hall.

All these ballots are just so much legal mumbo-jumbo to the average Toronto voter. They just don't vote unless something dynamic is involved. Last year, the vote was 20 per cent of the total eligible.

When city council after much nagging put the cocktail lounge question on the ballot — the question which now is disallowed —it was done with the expressed intentions of several councillors that such an issue would "bring out the vote."

Issue Being Boomed.

Just how much the Communist issue will bring out the vote remains to be seen. But it's certainly been boomed in the last mildly-frantic campaign days. Full-page advertisements have appeared in two of the three local daily newspapers urging that Communist candidates be rejected.

The advertisements were signed by Arthur Lowe, whom nobody knows for publication, and were printed in the morning Globe and Mail and the Evening Telegram, but not in the evening Daily Star.

These ads quoted at length from testimony by Igor Gouzenko in the Ottawa espionage trials and stressed the necessity of voters recognizing the danger of Communist infiltration in civic affairs.

SECURITY COUNCIL WILL DISCUSS ARMS LIMITATION

Delegate Gromyko Wants Prompt Consideration of Important Question

By FRANCIS S. CARPENTER

Lake Success, N.Y., Dec. 31 — (AP)—Spurred by the specific request of Russia, the United Nations Security Council turned today for the first time to discussion of general arms limitation.

A request by Russia, transmitted by its delegate Andrei A. Gromyko, for prompt consideration of the arms problem, topped the agenda of the Security Council. Its other business included arrangements for the formal retirement of Mexico, The Netherlands, and Egypt from the council.

The three members leaving the organization will be replaced tomorrow by Syria, Belgium and Colombia.

United Nations observers said the council would not deal today with the formal report submitted by the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission after more than six months of intensive work. The commission by a vote of 10 to 0, with Russia and Poland abstaining, sent its first report to the council yesterday afternoon.

It was expected that the report would be taken up as early as possible. One informant expected that Jan. 6 might be the date of first consideration of the report.

Specific Requests

The Russian request before the council made to specific requests:

1. That the council proceed at once with work on practical measures to implement the resolution on arms limitation adopted by the United Nations General Assembly Dec. 14.

2. That the council set up an 11-member commission with instructions to submit a draft plan for arms reduction and regulation within one or two months and not later than three months.

Gromyko, who voiced strenuous objections to the commission's report and remained silent when the atomic vote was taken yesterday, submitted his proposal to the U.N. Saturday.

The move was taken in U.N. circles as evidence of Russian determination to maintain the initiative on arms reduction which the Soviet assumed in the General Assembly.

The Atomic Energy Commission was expected to meet again Jan. 15, with Dr. Oscar Lange of Poland as chairman.

TWO GUNMEN GET $5,000 PAYROLL FROM TORONTO CO.

One Employee Races Out of Office After Bandits Leave And Obtains Car Number

Toronto, Dec. 31 (CP)—Two gunmen, with hats pulled well over their eyes, herded the staff of the Ontario Silknit Company in West-Central Toronto into a corner today and escaped with a $5,000 payroll in cash. One of the gunmen had two revolvers and the other, one, and both had coat collars fully turned up.

Police said one pay office employee at the plant raced out of the office after the automobile used by the bandits and succeeded in obtaining its licence number. It was believed the men had used a stolen vehicle for the hold-up.

There were about five employees in the cashier's office when the gunmen entered, police said, and all were threatened with death unless they complied with orders.

Residents Kept Under Virtual House Arrest

Jerusalem, Dec. 31. (AP)—Residents of the Jewish town of Rishon Le Zion and Petah Tikvah were kept under virtual house arrest today while British troops searched for persons who flogged four of their fellow soldiers.

Military authorities said 22 were under arrest at Rishon and Nathanya, where Maj. Paddy Brett was lashed 18 times Sunday night. Three sergeants also were flogged.

The military statement said Lt.-Gen. Sir Evelyn Barker had confirmed a 12-lash sentence against Aaron Cohen, a young Jerusalem Jew charged with distributing pamphlets of the illegal Irgun Zvai Leumi organization. A month prison term was remitted.

Curfews from dusk to dawn remained in force in the coastal areas.

The Jewish agency said it had received a cable from three of its leaders in Basel, Switzerland, condemning the floggings of British soldiers as "revolting brutality desecrating the good name of the Jewish community". The message urged Palestine Jews to assist all measures to prevent a repetition.

SAYS MANIFESTO ISSUED

London, Dec. 31 — (AP)—The Moscow radio broadcast today a Tass dispatch from Shanghai reporting that a "Chinese Women's Association" had issued a manifesto protesting against what it called "the lawless actions of American marines in China." Tass said the manifesto complained in particular of the alleged rape of a Chinese girl students in Peiping.

BUS STRIKES POLE

Winnipeg, Dec. 31 — (CP)—If among bus driver Jacob Smith's New Year resolutions is one that he won't be courteous in future, it is understandable.

A woman passenger dropped her fare after boarding his bus here last night and he stooped to pick it up. The bus crashed into a telephone pole and two of the 20 passengers were injured slightly.

Sun's Temperature 2,500 Times Hotter Than Estimated, Tests Show

Ottawa, Dec. 31 —(CP)— National Research Council scientists said today their experiments with radar have shown the temperature of the sun to be 1,500,000 degrees centigrate, or 2,500 times hotter than previously calculated.

Making known the results of tests conducted during the solar eclipse of Nov. 25, they said their discovery upset previous beliefs that the sun's surface temperature was 6,000 degrees, a basis on which some far-reaching theories of the composition, age and expectancy of the central planet were advanced and widely accepted by the world of science. The previous estimates were made through use of optical instruments.

The Canadian government scientists worked in war-built radar laboratories six miles south of Ottawa, using 10-centimetre radio waves to take the solar temperature and to listen to the vast uproar of the sun's raging fires. Their plant is believed to be the only one in the world conducting such tests.

The scientists are able to hear the solar tumult through their radar instruments, using a four-foot parabolic reflector which translates its findings through a radar screen to a visual pen and ink line traced on a graph. They agree that the sun is a great atomic energy plant, the source of all earthly power.

Wide Emergency Powers of Govt. Now Ineffective

Proclamation Does Not End State of War Itself

Washington, Dec. 31 (CP) — President Truman in a proclamation stripped his government of sweeping emergency powers when he formally proclaimed "termination of the period of hostilities of World War II as of noon E.S.T. today." The proclamation does not terminate the period of national emergency nor end the state of war itself.

Recommendations will go to Congress in the near future, Truman told a press conference, with respect to cancelling the national emergency and ending the state of war.

His proclamation ending hostilities erased from the statute books at once 20 wartime laws.

Still others will automatically die six months from today unless Congress acts to continue them. One of these is the Smith-Connally anti-strike act under which the government has seized strike-bound plants and mines.

Another is the law under which wartime leases of silver held or owned by the United States is permitted.

Certain Powers Continued

In few instances, Truman said, statutes affected by the proclamation give the government certain powers he believes should be continued in peacetime, or at least for the remainder of the period of reconversion.

In these instances the President said, he will ask Congress for additional legislation.

The President emphasized that termination of the period of hostilities had no effect on terminating the state of war itself.

Nor, he said, does it terminate the state of emergency declared by President Roosevelt Sept. 8, 1939 and May 27, 1941.

"With respect to the termination of the national emergency and the state of war I shall make recommendations to the Congress in the near future," his formal statement, read to the reporters, concluded.

The time has come, Mr. Truman said at one point during an exchange with reporters, when the executive branch should give up some of the powers exercised during the war.

"This is entirely in keeping with the policies which I have consistently followed," he said (reading again from his statement) "in an effort to bring our economy and our government back to a peacetime basis as quickly as possible."

Power to Act.

Power to declare an end to most wartime emergency laws was vested in both the President and Congress, either could act separately.

The President concluded the conference by telling reporters he would see them again at 4 p.m. E.S.T. Thursday. The conference was limited to discussion of his proclamation.

In a separate document, the White House listed emergency statutes immediately by the proclamation:

These include:

The Smith - Connally Act amendment to the Selective Service Act under which plant may be seized when their tie-up affects the war effort. The repeal would not affect past seizures.

The section of the National Defence Act authorizing the secretary of war to maintain camps of instruction for members of the reserve officers training corps for six-week periods.

An act of May 14, 1940 under which the President may authorize additional enlistments in the army medical department to such number as he deems necessary.

Similar To Canada's Action

Ottawa, (CP)—A government official said today he believed President Truman's proclamation ending Second Great War hostilities at noon, E.S.T., today for the United States was somewhat similar to action taken by Canada in December, 1945.

At that time the Canadian Government declared the war at an end for purposes of the War Measures Act, which gave almost unlimited powers. Co-incident with the declaration was the bringing into force of transitional emergency powers legislation.

Under this legislation, the government was given authority to carry on a large number of powers it had under the War Measures Act. At the forthcoming session of parliament the emergency legislation will come to an end but the government has announced its intention of bringing in individual bills to cover the powers and controls it believes should be retained for some time yet.

Like President Truman, the Canadian Government has made no move to declare the State of War at an end, and a government source said there were no indications of an early decision in that regard.

Thought Parcel Disguised Camera Woman Explains

New York, Dec. 31 (AP) — A woman was shot and seriously wounded today in the crowded Times Square subway station by a woman who, police said, told them she thought she was taking a picture of her victim with a camouflaged camera.

Instead, a package, wrapped with a Christmas paper, containing a shotgun. The victim, Mrs. Olga Rocco, 30, was taken to hospital in a serious condition with a wound in the left hip.

Police took the second woman, identified as Mrs. Pearl Lusk, to a police station for questioning and said she told this story.

Several weeks ago she was employed by an insurance investigator who told her he was investigating a jewel case and wanted Mrs. Rocco photographed. Today the man met her at a Brooklyn subway station and handed her the package, which was about 14 inches long with a small hole in it.

"This is a comsuflaged camera" she said the man told her. "Follow that woman and take a picture of her."

Patrolman William Walsh, one of the first police to arrive, said that a man who rushed to Mrs. Rocco's side reported she told him:

"I'm going to die. He threatened me before. This time he got me. He can have me now if he wants me I'm a cripple. What happened to the police? I call them but he was too smart for them."

Stranded on Ice, Is Frost-Bitten

Fort Frances, Ont., Dec. 31 — (CP) — Stranded on the ice of Baudette Bay near here for two hours yesterday when his artificial leg broke, Albert Haley is today recovering in hospital from a frozen foot, hands and ears.

Haley, who lost a leg in the First Great War, was taking a shortcut across the ice when the mishap occurred, his artificial limb locking in such a way that he couldn't move.

A woman finally became aware of his plight and Haley was removed to hospital.

City and District News

CHICKEN AND EGGS MAIN FEATURES ON CITY MARKET

City housewives showed but little interest in the pre-New Year market on Tuesday as only a few purchasers turned out while the attendance from a vendor standpoint was also definitely on the slim side.

Turkey was conspicuous by its complete absence while a few ducks and chickens were offered at usual prices. Ducks sold generally at 50 cents per pound while chickens sold generally at 40 cents. Eggs sold at 50 cents for "A" large while mediums were quoted at 45 cents.

MECHANICAL LOADER USED TO SPEED SNOW REMOVAL ON STREETS

A sand and gravel loader owned by Mason Rigby and used during the summer for loading trucks in gravel pits was pressed into service today by the local department of public works to assist in clearing snow from the downtown sections of the city.

Six dump trucks have been hired by the city to cart away the snow from the business section while shovellers have been retained for loading. The mechanical loader considerably reduces the loading time for trucks, thus speeding up snow removal operations.

ONLY MINOR CASES BEFORE THE COURT

Although no court had been held since prior to the Christmas season the regular Tuesday morning magistrate's court held before Magistrate T. Y. Wills was of short duration today. Only cases relative to speeding and traffic violations of minor nature were listed on the morning docket while only one drunk appeared in court. All others were pleas of guilty with fines and costs being paid out of court.

FLIGHT DELAYED

London, Ont., Dec. 31—(CP)—A Trans-Canada Air Lines flight to Toronto was held back for some time last night while airport officials waited for a report of a light aircraft which has been forced down near Preston.

The pilot later took off in the darkness and was reported to have landed at Kitchener. T.C.A. schedules were then resumed.

This New Year Will Be Given Noisy Welcome in Many City Homes, Places of Entertainment

There will be sounds of revelry tonight as a collective Belleville and district "let's down its hair" in traditional style to usher in the cherubic youngster who bears on his diapers the numerals "1947".

The smiling youngster who little knows the hard road that lies ahead of him will be heralded by a figurative fanfare of music, dancing, hilarity and general merry-making. And if tradition still holds good the top will blow when at the magic hour of midnight, celebrants will join hands and warble lustily, some of them incoherently, the familiar "Auld Lang Syne."

Rounds of private parties, dinners, dances and general celebrations have been planned. If reports can be vouched for, tonight's celebration will be one of the merriest in years.

Ball at Armouries

Outstanding in the social calendar is the annual Christmas Ball sponsored by the commanding officer and his staff of the 9th Anti-Tank Regiment, Argyll Light Infantry, in the Armouries. It is said that upwards of 1,000 invitations have been issued and that no effort has been spared to make the ball one of the merriest in regimental history.

The Belleville Club will also hold forth with its traditional annual party. St. Michael's Academy will be the scene of a "formal", while the Oddfellow's Hall will resound to the noise-making and mirth of a large crowd of dancers. The Belleville Shrine Club will be hosts to a colorful crowd also.

Vanity Fair will see the youth and beauty of the city in a colorful panorama of dancing and mirth with the Belleville Teen-Age Club holding forth in the gymnasia of the Collegiate Institute.

Throughout the surrounding districts many gay parties have been planned. Community Hall, Stirling, will be the scene of a gay party as will St. Carthagh's Hall at Tweed.

In the city many private dinner parties will inaugurate the general celebrations afield while a large number of intimate friends will "party" in private homes.

Special Programs at Theatres

Foresighted theatre managements have not forgotten those who like screen fare as their New Year's Eve entertainment and all three motion picture houses are providing elaborate screen shows for their clientele, plentifully garnished with noise-making paraphernalia, funny hats and what-not.

So all-in-all it looks like a gala evening for all concerned, with merriment the keynote and good fellowship the password.

But every bright picture has, sometimes, a sombre note in its lining. Accidents can and will happen. So here's the well-known warning: "If you drive, don't drink—if you drink, don't drive."

But "on with the dance, let joy be unconfined." There is always the cold grey dawn of the morning after. But right now who cares about that. There will be many a joyous Hic-Hic-Hooray for the New Year. So go to it—and don't forget the aspirin.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Eggleton, Stirling, to Observe 71st Anniversary New Year's Day

One of the longest married couples in Ontario, if not in Canada, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Eggleton of Stirling on New Year's Day will celebrate the 71st. anniversary of their marriage.

Mr. Eggleton is 90 while his bride of 71 years is 87 and despite their advanced years both are still enjoying "fairly good" health.

Lifelong residents of Stirling districts, both Mr. and Mrs. Eggleton have lived their entire lives within a short distance of the home which they today occupy. On January 1st. back in 1876, the 20-year-old groom and his 17-year-old bride, the former Violet A. Carr, daughter of Daniel Carr, Ridge Road, were married by Rev. F. M. Finn at the Episcopal Methodist parsonage at Stirling. The young couple's attendants were George Carr and Annie Carr, the former a brother of the bride.

Formerly a carpenter, Mr. Eggleton can drive almost in any direction from Stirling and see the work of his own handicraft. By his own count he can point to approximately 200 barns built by himself in the district while he has also built "a good many houses."

Sons Follow Occupation.

But with his retirement from active carpentry some years ago the name did not disappear from the building trade in the Stirling district. Three of his sons follow in their father's footsteps and owe their present skill to the thoroughness of their father's teaching.

One of the oldest Orangemen in the county, Mr. Eggleton, at the age of 18, joined the L.O.L. No. 251 at Holloway and later transferred to the Stirling lodge. He still visits his lodge and delights in visiting with its members.

Despite the fact that it is their 71st. anniversary, Mr. and Mrs. Eggleton are having no elaborate celebration. However, they assured they would be "at home" to all friends and relatives who might call.

As was traditional with families a few decades ago, that of Mr. and Mrs. Eggleton is large with ten children having been born to bless the union. Nine children still survive while 11 grandsons served in the last war and came home unscathed.

Surviving children of Mr. and Mrs. Eggleton are Mrs. Victoria Benson, West Huntingdon; Samuel Eggleton, Stirling; Mrs. Amos Reid, Ottawa; Irvine Eggleton, Moira Street, Belleville; Hector Eggleton, Stirling; Mrs. William Blakely, Madoc; Mrs. Luther Phillips, Gordon Street, Belleville; Miss Ivy Eggleton, Belleville, and Roy Eggleton, Stirling.

Sane Driving Asked By Chief of Police

The time honored warning that liquor and gasoline do not mix was repeated today by Police Chief Walter Probert who assured that no clemency would be granted to drivers convicted on drunkenness over the New Year.

"If you must drive, don't drink, and if you must drink, let some other person do the driving," warned the police chief as he made a special appeal for safe and sane driving over the holiday.

In answer to the old argument that a single drink does no harm, the police chief claimed that liquor taken in any quantity will leave an odor on the breath. This fact would be used against the motorist in the event of an accident.

Legend of Origin of Christmas Tree And Santa Claus Told to Rotary

Music, with a Yuletide setting and a brief address by President Bert Howard featured the Monday luncheon of the Rotary Club in its last meeting of the year.

The musical program, arranged by Rotarian Jack Deacon was a delightful one. The arranger's fine voice was never heard to better advantage than in his solo with Leo Riggs at the piano.

Ronny Elmy, boy soprano, was roundly applauded after he had offered in a fine voice three numbers. Miss Helen Grant, talented young daughter of Billy Grant, well-known city musician, offered xylophone solos which were exceptionally well received by the clubmen. Rotarian Riggs in his inimitable style played the accompaniment for all artists.

President Howard described the origin of Christmas as told by historians; the first Christmas Tree and pointed out by historical fact that there was a Santa Claus.

The Christmas Tree

The Festivals of the Unconquered Sun and of Saturnalia, two pagan rites, he said, were united by a Christian bishop with the Christ's Mass. The Festival of Saturnalia was one of great rejoicing when the rich entertained their slaves and there was a general feeling of good will. The bishop linked the three and out of that grew the festival of Christmas.

A Christian missionary, St. Boniface, who worked among the Hessian tribes in Europe, was so well liked by the tribesmen that he was permitted to see their sacred Tree ceremony.

In the centre of a great outdoor temple stood a huge tree at the foot of which was an altar. Five young men of splendid physique were chosen by the witch doctor and after they had marched about the tree, one was picked out and slain as an offering. St. Boniface stopped the slaughter and insisted the 'Blood Tree' be cut down. As it fell, he noticed a small evergreen growing in its top.

He took the tree and had it planted at the foot of the altar telling the Hessians it was the wood of peace. He compared its characteristics to a Christian mode of life and thus the Christmas tree was born.

Santa Claus

"There was an actual Santa Claus," President Howard related. "In a small European village many years ago a peasant boy was born. He was observant, a student of nature and a dreamer. He inspired others especially young men. Then he went out and became a missionary, and subsequently a bishop. His fad on Christmas Eve was to done a red coat, fill a bag with presents and leave them at the doors of homes of poor people, especially those which housed children."

As the custom grew, children began to leave their boots on the doorstep. But Nicholas, for that was his name, grew old and the peasants knowing this, used to leave their doors open and build huge fires and hang up their red stockings near the chimney. Nicholas died. But parents kept up the practice and each year appointed a man to do this work. Later parents did the work themselves and thus Santa Claus came into actual being.

A. Cruji Installed As New President Of Kinsmen Club

President-elect Arthur Cruji was duly installed as president of the Kinsmen Club at their final meeting of the year held Monday evening when Newton Wilbur turned the gavel over to his successor. In accepting the gavel President Cruji in turn presented Kin "Newt" with his past president's pin.

In his inaugural address President Cruji pointed out that a good program of community effort was needed if a service club was to flourish. Suggested projects that the local club might take on were the construction of a swimming pool, provision of a sports director or a social service worker. Ideas from club members were asked on the matter.

Committee chairmen for the new year were named and the matter of sponsoring a local juvenile hockey team was discussed by the members.

IT'S A LUCKY

The papers also disclosed that President Roosevelt called Montagu Norman, governor of the Bank of England, "Old Pink Whiskers"; that he thought Dean Achesson, now undersecretary of State and then undersecretary of Treasury, was a "lightweight".

As the United States price of gold rose above the world price, George Harrison, of the Federal Reserve Bank, was put in charge of Foreign Exchange operations. He was anxious to consult the English and French, but the President protested: "Every time we have taken the English into our confidence they have given us a trimming."

However, Harrison had his way and when he called Norman in England the reaction was "this is the most terrible thing that has happened: the whole world will be put into bankruptcy."

The diary related that the President and Morgenthau looked at each other, picturing foreign bankers with every one of their hairs standing on end with horror. Morgenthau began to chuckle and the President roared with laughter.

Things Human

THE NEW YEAR

The old year trembles pale and worn .. and waits to see the New Year born. With hope that days ahead may bring .. a peace, of which angels sings. This much we ask and nothing more .. to mark the year we're waiting for. Please God! give vision to the men .. who guide our destiny .. and make them see we'll have peace only when .. Leaders practise Christianity.

Cold Weather Expected to Last Nearly Week

Chicago, Dec. 31 —(AP)— The United States yesterday looked forward to a continued influx of Siberian air with the U. S. weather bureau's promise that it would be the better part of a week before sub-zero temperatures moderate appreciably.

"There's a lot of weather around," the forecasters said. "It's settling down pretty well all over the country and behind it is a lot more of the same air — with temperatures in parts of Canada as low as 35 and 40 below zero.

"There'll be some moderation in about two days, but even so, it will remain below normal most of this week."

In the East conditions remained treacherous.

Lockport, a western New York city of 24,000, struggled in darkness with a power failure resulting from Saturday's sleet storm. Only its business section had electricity.

Ten persons died in New England, most of them victims of exhaustion and heart conditions while shovelling snow. Two others died in Iowa from the same causes, and from accidents due to weather.

In Wishing All Our Friends A
HAPPY NEW YEAR

We are glad to add that for the first time in over 4 years we are free from Government regulations restricting Coal deliveries, and we can now take orders and deliver promptly any kind of coal or coke you may require, without mixtures if preferred;—a blessed relief for all of us!

We have a good stock of high grade American Nut and Stove coal, also Blower and Stoker coals, Coke, Alberta Hard coal, Briquettes, etc.

There is no change in price of any of these fuels nor will there be as long as the Government continue their policy of paying subsidies to cover the substantial advances that have taken place in our cost of all American coals as a result of the many strikes that have occurred during the past 4 years.

In spite of restrictions, strikes, shortages and many other difficulties we feel that your dealer has done a good job in maintaining his standard of service, in looking after your wants as capably and efficiently as restrictions and shortages permitted and we wish to express our very great appreciation and thanks for the patience and good nature displayed by all our customers in accepting what the regulations permitted us to deliver from time to time, which very often, we are well aware, was not what the customer preferred.

However, those conditions are of the past and we are hopeful that the public and the [illegible]alers will

Happy New Year!

The new year's coming brings in its train the hopes of millions upon millions of people that the course of their lives and of events will lead them into happy places in the next twelvemonth.

New Year's Day is a part of the great festival season as the year's end comes. At no other time do people so react to the festive spirit as at Christmas and at New Year's. Christmas Day has enthroned the family and child life and reaches the height of inspiration of rapture and joy and faith. Its mood is the spirit of gratitude and of unselfish giving, it is the noblest expression of the love of one's neighbor. It is centred in the home and in family relationships. But New Year's Day marks the turn from the old year. It points down the long vista to the days of spring and the promises which it brings with its hopes and expectation of blessings. It has the forward look.

It is a time of welcome to the coming months and weeks and days. It is a time when many form resolutions which they will hope to follow for their benefit and welfare.

The past year has been a year rich in experiences. It has been the first full year since the end of the war and it has made possible some appraisal of the results of peace planning. With its great problems there have been natural disappointments but there are at the same time great hopes and there is a profound sense of thankfulness that the world is so anxious to reach the goal for which humanity prays and strives, the assurance of lasting peace, which will be the greatest blessing that the world can ever receive.

New Year's is associated with the hopes of individuals and families and nations. Man is incurably optimistic and his faith is such that he will never be satisfied until the world reaches a solid basis of peace.

New Year's is the starting point of the year. It lends zest to activity, it has a lesson of hope for everyone. It offers a fresh start in life.

The greeting at this time "Happy New Year" is a message of good will and cheer which comes from the hearts of earth's teeming millions.

Prussia

Prussia which meant slavery and aggression, does not today mean what it meant for a long time. It meant Hitler's rise to power, to him and to others in Germany it signified the loot of the world and the enslavement of nations. Today Prussia is in a state of impotency to which she brought herself by declaring war upon humanity and enforcing the United Nations for the sake of the world to smash what aggressive Prussia stood for. As a state she does not exist. One of the greatest events of all the ages has brought this about, the blows that freedom delivered to the tyrant.

In this result to which Hunnish tyranny led Prussia, can be seen the spirit of justice triumphant. Proud, tyrannical, violent Prussia, which caused World War I and World War II has reaped the whirlwind.

The Big Four nations foreign ministers are to meet early in the new year at Moscow and experts are at work drafting a report on this state. What the United Nations were forced to do with that state because of its threat to humanity the world over is now a completed fact. Her fall will stand a memorial of collosal ruins which the warlike centre of Germany brought about by its soulless and selfish attempt to chain the world and grow fat on the labors and wealth of her nations.

Driving Advice

In rough weather such as that at the weekend which left highways in a condition difficult for travel and travelling dangerous as a spokesman of the Department of Highways said, it is well to consider the question as a heading in the Hamilton Spectator on Saturday expressed it, "Is Your Trip Necessary?" If not, he would be foolish who would risk a trip.

The best advice at such a time is that of the Department, "Don't drive if you don't have to."

Fortunately most people took that advice. And they and their friends were more comfortable and were not ill at ease.

Step Up Coal Production

A new peak in Britain's postwar coal production was announced recently by Mr. Shinwell, Minister of Fuel and Power. He stated that the output a recent week was 3,852,000 tons, the highest since 1944. Rise in Britain's coal production—output has been increasing every week despite decline in manpower—is due partly to the increased effort of individual workers and partly to the introduction of one of the most noteworthy coal mining machines ever invented, the Meco-Moore combined cutter and loader. This machine is now being installed at an ever increasing rate in United Kingdom collieries and is estimated to increase output by 25 per cent. Meco-Moore is strictly Britain's development, and is the first machine of its type that has the outstanding merit of eliminating labor hitherto involved in loading coal after it had been cut out by a cutter.

In The Icy South Wastes

Long the scarce-disputed domain of the penguin, the Antarctic wastes until recently interested no one but the occasional explorer and a few seasonal whalers.

The atom bomb blasted its peace. As a rumored source of uranium, the bleak region became overnight the Mecca of a dozen "scientific" expeditions and projected expeditions.

Admiral Byrd's Navy invasion heads the list. Despatch of an oversize "whaling feet" from Russia for the contentious area comes next in significance.

Meanwhile, Britain stresses her maintenance of a meteorological station in the area. New Zealand recalls her "sovereign rights" near the Pole; Chile and Argentina, politically opposed but having the common interest of propinquity in this issue, talk of a joint expedition.

The possibilities of friction are obvious. All would be speedily dispelled, we imagine, should scientists discover that Antarctica is innocent of uranium.

A Dickens Scene

George Henri Legare, a pleasant-faced chap of 54, runs the Neptune taven on the Montreal waterfront—the oldest saloon in the city and dating back to 1832. Legare himself is the 17th child of a family of 17, and he and his wife in turn have 17 children. On Christmas Day Legare sat down to dinner with them all—with his wife, his 17 children and eight grandchildren, his mother-in-law, who is 81. To feed them Legare carved two 20-pound turkeys and sliced up six Christmas puddings. He was, said Legare, the happiest man in Montreal.

It would need the pen of Dickens himself properly to tell of this delightful domestic scene—Father Legare at the head of a great table with two enormous turkeys under his carving knife, 27 members of his family before him in festive and expectant mood. That was Christmas in the grand tradition, and Mr. Pickwick himself would have liked a place at the Legare table.

Canadian Culture

Not only should our new citizens be made to realize what advantages they gain with naturalization. They should also be taught the things in Canada of which they can be proud. There are, of course, many of these.

Not the least is our culture. Some are inclined to sneer at Canadian claims in this direction, but actually we are taking a larger and larger place in the finer arts. The plan here to stress, during Citizenship Week, the works of our own authors, is wisely conceived. We do have a distinctive literature of high quality, even though our progress in this field has not been outstandingly fast. The more appreciative attention paid it, however, the more rapid and satisfying will be its growth.

EXPECTANTS ALL

The birth of a year is a blessed event.
Expectants we are, one and all.
As loved ones whose time must in waiting be spent,
We walk up and down in the hall.

With eyes on the doorway, we watch as we pace
For the nurse from the room to appear,
With a smile of delight on her glorious face,
To tell us the baby is here.

With eyes on the clock, now all over the earth,
Men and women are waiting to cheer
At the moment the nurse, who assists at the birth,
Announces the baby is here.

Predict Millions Of Tons of Spuds Will be Dumped

By OVID A. MARTIN

Washington, Dec. 31 —(AP)— United States agriculture department officials predicted today that millions of bushels of frozen and rotten potatoes will be dumped under the government instructions during the next several weeks.

They will be part of the 1946 crop surplus of nearly 100,000,000 bushels.

Officials estimated the government's final loss on the surplus will amount to around $80,000,000. The explanation is this:

Under wartime legislation, the agriculture department underwrote the 1946 crop of potatoes as well as many other farm products. It assured farmers that they would get at least 90 per cent of parity—the theoretical price determined to be equally fair to producers and consumers.

The potato trouble developed when the crop turned out to be about 100,000,000 bushels larger than the department had planned for and about that much larger than estimated consumer requirements.

Potato Prices Tumble

When this surplus became apparent, potato prices tumbled. And the department was left to carry out its legal obligation to assure growers at least 90 per cent of parity.

To do this the department bought large quantities of potatoes and resold them to commercial firms—such as distillers—who otherwise would have used some other commodity.

Then the department loaned money to other potato growers—at the guaranteed figure—and asked them to store the crop just in case the price went back up.

It didn't. And it formed the loan-stored potatoes that heavy losses are anticipated.

Agriculture secretary Clinton P. Anderson said recently 20,000,000 bushels were sold to distillers of beverage spirits and 6,100,000 to industrial alcohol distillers for use in making synthetic rubber, anti-freeze and similar products.

About 525,000 bushels were sold for export to famine areas abroad. Efforts were made to send larger quantities to those areas, but their perishability and relatively high transportation costs discouraged this course.

CRUISING TAXIS RETURN

Toronto, Dec. 31 (CP)—Monday's beginning of a parking ban was somewhat softened by the return of cruising taxis after a period of 20 years. Taxis, however, were unable to take advantage of the new freedom because of icy streets, which made cruising impractical and almost impossible.

PERSONAL HEALTH TALKS

By WILLIAM BRADY, M.D.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN EXCERPTED

Some new readers may wonder what Cri means. It means common respiratory infection—which may prove anything from coryza to cerebro-spinal meningitis, measles, diphtheria, infantile paralysis, scarlet fever, tonsillitis, influenza, pneumonia, bronchitis or whatnot—you never know in the early stage and neither does the doctor if the doctor happens to see you in the stage of onset, just what the indisposition may be. In this stage of onset, before you feel ill enough to give up or take to bed the Cri is most communicable. That's why, if you're a decent citizen or a good sport, you will call it Cri (pronounced kree), indicating that it is probably one or another of the Common Respiratory Infections and you want to give everybody fair warning to avoid exposure. On the other hand if you're a blankety-blanked, loathsome reptile you'll try to get away with murder by calling it "cold" so ignorant people will not suspect you of spreading God knows what illness and maybe death.

If anybody can get a definition of "the common cold" in writing, signed or acknowledged by any medical or health authority, or find it defined in any standard medical textbook in words an intelligent person can understand, I'll acclaim the discovery here. But I have failed to come across any such definition in many years of study. So I say that whenever a doctor or a health adviser reiterates those almanac bits about avoiding wet feet, drafts and sudden changes and getting good nourishing food and keeping up your resistance the fellow is pulling your leg, as he knows it will never occur to you to interrupt to ask just what changes are sudden, what foods are nourishing and what keeps up "resistance" or resistance to what.

Reader J. F. C. observes that Benjamin Franklin could not have had the slightest knowledge of germs or of the modern concept of infection, although, with apologies to Peavey — well, as Franklin expressed his view in a letter to Dr. Benjamin Rush, dated July 14, 1773:

"I have long been satisfied from observation that besides the general colds termed influenzas (which may possibly spread by contagion as well as by a particular quality of the air) people often catch cold from one another when shut up together in close rooms, coaches, etc., and when sitting near and conversing so as to breathe in each other's transpiration; the disorder being a certain state.

"I think, too, that it is the frowzy, corrupt air from animal substances and the perspired matter from our bodies which, being long confined in beds not lately used and clothes not lately worn and books long shut up in close rooms, obtains that kind of putridity which occasions the colds observed upon sleeping in, wearing and turning over such bedclothes or books, and not in their coldness or dampness. . . ."

Franklin went on to tell how he had travelled much in the severe winters and suffered extremely from cold, short of freezing, but never caught cold therefrom.

George Washington's final illness, (Franklin died aged 84, Washington aged 67) was ascribed by his friends to exposure, when the General rode to his farms on Dec. 12, through rain, hail and snow and a cold wind. When he came in "his neck appeared to be wet, and the snow was hanging upon his hair. He came to dinner without changing his dress. The next day . . . he complained of a sore throat . . . died about 10 p.m. Dec. 14, 1799." Franklin had died nine years before that, after a fall on the stairs—but had been in a feeble state for a period of years, with gout, gallstones and senility. But I like to believe that Benjamin Franklin, thinker, would have laughed at the notion of Washington's friends and physicians that the General's final illness was a "cold."

Although Franklin's theories about "breathing each other's transpirations" and "corrupt air from animal substances and the perspired matter our bodies" were wrong he had a clearer conception of the question than do most laymen and physicians today when he observed that "people often catch cold from one another when shut up together in close rooms, coaches." Here is something to think about when you are playing the part of a sardine in bus, trolley, subway or coach where the old fogies yell murder if you try to let in any fresh air.

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

What is a gigolo?

"Gigolo" is a slang term of French origin and, as now generally used, means a young man who lives on the money of a woman older than himself, or a man whom a woman pays to escort her to places of amusement and to dance with her at public tearooms, cafes, cabarets, hotels restaurants and night clubs.

In other words, as now used in English a gigolo is a young male who makes a profession of dancing with, escorting and entertaining females past the prime of life.

In French "gigolo" is pronounced "ZHEE-go-lo." The common pronunciation in English is "JIG-o-lo."

This term acquired its present meaning in a roundabout manner. Originally "gigolette" was employed in France to designate a "flapper" or a young girl of marriageable age, but gradually it came to signify a concubine, a prostitute or a woman of bad repute.

Some scholars have attempted to identify the word with Old French "gigue" a fiddle-like instrument, or with "giguer," to play, frolick, romp, gabol, hop or dance. "Gigue" in this sense is the source of English "jig."

Whatever the ultimate source of "gigolette," its masculine counterpart "gigolo" was first applied to the companion of a gigolette, and by extension to a lover, paramour or a man who lives upon the earnings of a professional prostitute. French "gigue" was also applied to a long-legged, gangling girl, and in Middle English "gigge" or "gig" signified a wanton girl. In the Elizabethan period "giglet" and "giglot" were in common use in the sense of giddy, frolicsome or romping girl or a lewd person. "Gigglets" and giglot wench" occur in Shakespeare.

Some lexicographers believe these archaic forms were related to Italian "gigolo," meaning "lily."

EGGLETON—NOYES

A pretty wedding was solemnized at Holy Trinity Anglican Church, Shannonville, on the evening of December 24, at seven o'clock, by the Rev. C. P. Heaven, when Dorothy Floretta, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bray Noyes, Carrying Place, became the bride of Glenn Arlington, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Irvine Eggleton, Belleville.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride entered the church to the strains of the "Bridal Chorus" from Lohengrin and played by Mrs. Heaven. The bride looked lovely in a floor-length gown of white net with satin bodice, her fingertip veil being held in place with orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of red American Beauty roses.

Mrs. Jack Moore, Belleville, sister of the groom as matron-of-honor, wore a floor-length gown of cerise lace and net, with matching accessories.

Miss Thelma Doxtator, Belleville, cousin of the bride, as bridesmaid, wore a floor-length gown of heavenly blue crepe with matching accessories. Both attendants carried bouquets of white 'mums and pink carnations.

Mr. Jack Moore, of Belleville, acted as groomsman; Mr. Leslie Eggleton, Belleville, brother of the groom, and Mr. Harold Noyes, Carrying Place, brother of the bride, were the ushers.

During the signing of the register, Mrs. Heaven softly played, "Christmas Carols" and "I Love You Truly".

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, where the bride's mother received in a gown of black and gold crepe, with black accessories, and the groom's mother assisted in a gown of medium blue with black accessories.

Later Mr. and Mrs. Eggleton left by motor for Toronto, St. Catharines and Niagara Falls. For travelling the bride chose a turquoise blue suit with a muskrat coat and brown accessories. On their return Mr. and Mrs. Eggleton will take up residence in Belleville.

Guests were present from Niagara, Toronto, Stirling and Belleville.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

When Your Heart is Broken Keep Your Pride Intact

I don't believe any girl ever did herself or her romance any good by clutching desperately at the coattails of a departing sweetheart.

Trying to block him on his way out with tearful protestations that your life will be blighted forever if he leaves you may temporarily postpone the final goodbye, perhaps, but it won't change the outcome. And if you've tried to hang on to him, humbled yourself in front of him, not only will he go away thinking less of you, but your own remembrance of the episode will make you blush for years afterward.

No indeed, however much you think you love him, no matter how broken-hearted you may feel you'll get along far better in every respect if you keep your pride intact.

Some girls know this bit of psychology by instinct, and they're the ones who usually end up with adoring husbands who spend their lives trying to make them happy. And some never learn it, and make the same mistake over and over again. Even if they get a husband, they use the same misguided technique whenever anything goes wrong with their marriage, always putting themselves into a disadvantageous position for getting what they want out of life.

Here's an 18-year-old girl who will find herself in this latter class if she doesn't look out. "I have gone far beyond my age in thinking, and in my ways of living," she writes. But this maturity she claims certainly doesn't show in her philosophy. For when, after a quarrel in which he boy friend was clearly in the wrong, he wrote and asked her to return his signet ring because "he had to get it cleaned"—an excuse so feeble that even she couldn't credit it—instead of returning it posthaste, she wrote an apology for having been angry with him and took the ring and had it cleaned.

Here, obviously, is a case of a boy friend tired of a romance and wanting to put an end to it, and of the girl humbling herself and adopting a policy of "appeasement" toward him in the hope of getting him to reconsider. She's even holding on to the ring so that if he wants it he'll have to come around for it.

True to the pattern such matters usually take, the policy has got her exactly nowhere. For the boy friend has bothered neither to come for his ring nor to answer her letter of apology.

However, the girl hasn't had enough yet to make her willing to accept the inevitable, for she concludes her letter with this question: "Should I remain faithful to this boy I love, but who from the looks of things did not mean a word he said to me?"

I can't imagine why any girl would want to be faithful to a young man who doesn't seem to have the slightest interest in trying to find out whether she's faithful or not. She admits she knows he didn't mean it when he told her he loved her. So what in the world could she be waiting for.

If their quarrel had been an ordinary lovers' spat, it would be different. But what they quarreled over was her objection to being insulted when, intoxicated, he took her home from a dance one night. Then, when she might normally have expected an apology from him for his drunken behavior, what she got was a letter that as she puts it, was "like a slap across the face" in its sarcastic comments on her reactions to his conduct. This was the letter in which he asked for his ring. And this was the letter to which she wrote in answer, an apology for having been angry over what had occurred!

Why she should want to hang on to such a boor is beyond me. I think she should thank her lucky stars that she found out, before things went any farther, what crude creature she had been wasting her time on, and proceed to forget him entirely.

Bride's Sister Shouldn't Contribute to Shower Expense

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I think it is not good form for a sister to give, or even to help to give, a bridal shower for her sister. Now my sister's girl friend has asked me to help her with the expense of giving a shower for my sister, and although I don't want to hurt her feelings by saying "no" to her suggestion, I don't think it's right for me to accept her suggestion. What is your answer to this question?

M.

My point of view is just what yours is—that it is not good taste for you either to give a bridal shower for your sister or to help to give it. Some people, I realize, maintain that it's quite all right for the bride's family (or a member of it) to contribute toward the expenses of the shower which is to be given by some friend of the bride-elect, so long as it isn't known that they do contribute but I certainly don't approve of this undercover method of practically forcing relatives and friends to give shower gifts.

If this friend of your sister's can't afford to give a shower (the cost of giving a shower can be very slight), or if she can't persuade some other intimate friends of your sister's to join with her, she shouldn't attempt to give it. There's no real reason why she should.

This Bridegroom's Correct About His Wedding Attire.

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My fiance and I have been having a "discussion" concerning what he is to wear at our wedding, which is to take place at nine o'clock in the morning at a nuptial mass. I am going to wear a wedding gown without a train, and a fingertip veil. I will have a maid of honor, no bridesmaids. I contend that he may, correctly, wear a dark business suit. But he thinks that since I am to wear a long wedding dress and a veil, even though the dress has no train and the veil is a short one, he should wear formal attire (cutaway coat, striped trousers, and so forth.) Will you please tell me which of us is correct?

F. P.

You should accept, with pride, your fiance's perfect suggestion that he wear the type of attire that does honor to you, to the type of wedding costume you are planning to wear, and to the great occasion of your wedding! He has sartorial taste, your fiance, and a proper sense of what's what. You're very fortunate to have a correctly attired bridegroom, and you are being a very unwise girl to urge him to abandon his right taste when apparently there is no reason for doing so except your not-so-good-as-his-taste.

Even though your wedding is not to be a formal one (semi-formal rather, since your wedding gown is trainless, and your veil short), it is best taste for the bridegroom to wear formal day attire, rather than a business suit he would wear if you were wearing street-length dress and hat.

LET'S HOPE ALL THE PETE'S AND JOE'S WHO WILL ARRIVE THIS NEW YEAR'S WILL ALWAYS FIND A WORLD AT PEACE

It was New Year's Eve. The nursery was quiet. Downstairs in the living room the man and woman of the house prepared to join their friends in the final celebration of the year.

"Ready, John?" the woman asked. "Yes, dear, but let's have a last look at the kiddies before we go."

They went upstairs, quietly opened the nursery door and looked down on two husky boys sleeping in their crib.

"I hope you didn't mind the neighbor's baby staying with Peter tonight," the woman said softly. "The girl will be here and she will look after them."

"That's all right, dear" replied the man. Then he added "I wonder what small babies think about."

They stood for a moment gazing down at the sleeping boys, then tip-toed softly from the room.

The two small figures in the crib stirred.

"Psst, Pete, are you awake. They've gone," whispered the dark-haired lad.

The light-haired boy stifled a yawn.

"Yeah, I know, I heard 'em. I've been lying here for a half hour waiting for them to shove off."

"How long you been around these parts, Pete?"

"A little over a year. And you?"

"Oh, about ten months, I guess. Long enough to find out what queer ducks these grown-ups are."

"Whaddya mean?"

"Well, Joe, Mom's all right. But the old man he's out almost every night."

"Same here, Pete. But they're not too bad, after all."

There was silence for a moment. Then the children sighed and turned over in their cribs.

"Still awake, Joe?" gurgled Pete.

"Yep."

"Say, do these grown-ups wear diapers?"

Joe gurgled in his pillow. "You're four months my senior and you ask me a question like that. But I must say that my Pop with a back porch like he sports would have a heck of a time wrapping himself into one of these Gandhi girdles that I wear. But what makes you ask?"

It's New Year's Eve

"Oh, nothing much," replied Pete. "From what I heard, tonight is what the big folks call New Year's Eve and I heard Pop say that a lot of people would be tying one on. Funny they don't use pins like they do on us."

"I don't know anything about that," replied Joe, "but I heard my Mom say that these New Year's resolutions, that a lot of people make, are just like diapers. They keep 'em for a while and then when they find they are all wet they throw 'em aside and wait until next year before they dry a clean one."

"That's right," admitted Pete. "Well, to night's going to be a lonely one for a lot of us kids, but then we shouldn't kick. The folks did a pretty swell job by us on Christmas."

"I heard 'em talking about some new kid that's due to arrive in town some time tonight," mused Joe. "Know anything about him?"

"Not unless it's that guy they call 1947," rejoined Pete, "and brother, what a tough time he's going to have."

"How come?" asked Joe suddenly interested. "Who's his old man?"

"An old gink they called 1946 who is due to pass out of the picture at midnight, and who has had one of the toughest years since a bird named Hitler tried to murder all the babies in Europe and grab the world for his own, way back in 1939-40."

1946 Tough Old Year

"Yep," went on Pete, "that lil old man 1946 sure had a tough row to hoe. You see, Joe, the war was just over and the boys who went overseas and fought came home filled with promises of what they were going to get. Jobs, homes, 'n everything. But the old world suddenly went topsy turvy. It was in such a turmoil that all the big men in the world were caught with their diapers down. No amount of effort could straighten things out. The boys came home, a lot of them with babies just like you and me, and with their wives too. But there were no homes to be had. A lot of them spent their money and had nothing left. Materials were scarcer than guys like you and me at a New Year's binge, and things didn't get any better."

"What did they do, Pete?" asked Joe.

"There was nothing much they could do about it. Some of the boys went back to work but others couldn't find jobs. There was plenty of dissatisfaction and the 1946 baby was plenty disturbed. Then came along big strikes here and there crippling industry and business. Railways were tied up and there were fights 'n everything. Everything was unsettled and the old world was getting nowhere fast."

"Gosh, was it as bad as that, Pete?" asked Joe, guzzling a rosy thumb.

"Worse," retorted Pete. "In addition there was a group of big men representing the United Nations in different conferences trying to reach a spot where you and I won't be used as cannon fodder in twenty years time, like a lot of other guys who were born long before us. They are trying to do their best, but there was plenty of argument about what to give one another and even now there is fighting going on in several parts of the world. At the present time things look a little brighter but this new guy that arrives tonight will inherit plenty of headaches from old 1946."

"How do you think it will all turn out?" asked Joe.

More Tolerance

"It's hard to say. But there will have to be a lot of give and take on the part of everyone, individuals as well as nations. Intolerance and racial hatred should be eliminated. Man must develop a broader understanding of his fellow man, regardless of race or creed. Nations will have to learn to walk hand in hand, with love for each other and hatred of none. Petty jealousies must be superseded by a spirit of co-operation. And there is something else, Joe."

"Yeah, you've done pretty well for a guy of your age and experience, but what is it?"

"Just this, Joe," said Pete. "1946 years ago in the Holy Land a little baby, a tiny chap just like you and me was born in a manger filled with hay. His was a pretty tough lot, too, but from early childhood He learned to understand and love His fellow men. He grew up and spread love and wisdom throughout the world. But a lot of people just laughed at Him. They believed what He said all right, but they promptly forgot about it when avarice and greed, material gains and worldly wealth stared them in the face. Until the world understands more and practises more what He brought to it, there will always be trouble."

"Humm" mused Joe, "looks like a tough old world we're coming into."

"Sure does," agreed Pete. "But here I'm getting tired. Let's go bye-bye."

"O.K." replied Joe.

"Well, here's Pablum in your eye, pal."

"From Mead to you, chum," replied Joe.

"Happy New Year."

ARMY AND NOTRE DAME TO PART FOR SOME YEARS

Next Year's Game Will be Played at Notre Dame to Stop Ticket Scalping

By SID FEDER

New York, Dec. 31. (AP)—The menacing shadows of ticket "scalping" and gambling were generally regarded today as the factors behind the football split between Army and Notre Dame, and indications were the two schools will give the general gridiron situation a chance to cool off before they resume relations probably early in the 1950s.

The belief was that it will take about that long—a break-way, of three to five years starting in 1948—for the high-pressure football frolics to get back to the point where they will once more "serve the interests . . . of intercollegiate athletics."

That was the stipulation for resumption of the rivalry that both Maj.-Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor, the Military Academy superintendent, and Rev. John J. Cavanaugh, Notre Dame president, laid down yesterday when they announced the series would be suspended temporarily because it was getting out of hand.

The 1947 get-together will be taken out of Yankee Stadium in New York for the first time in 15 years and returned to a college campus in the move toward de-emphasis of football generally. It will be played next Nov. 8 in Notre Dame's Memorial Stadium in South Bend, Ind., where the school can be in direct control of ticket distribution.

Although there was no direct mention of either gambling or ticket speculation, it was significant that both of the college heads pointed out that conditions surrounding the annual classic are "not conducive to wholesome intercollegiate sports".

And it was learned from one source close to the picture that ticket speculation—topped off by a scalper's price of $200 a ticket for this year's game—and the growing gridiron betting—estimated up in the $100,000,000 stratosphere—were the chief reasons the two schools announced the temporary parting of the ways.

HOWIE MORENZ JR. FOLLOWING IN DAD'S FOOTSTEPS

Scores Four Goals for Team Which is Leading Quebec Junior Loop

(By The Canadian Press)

Following in the footsteps of his famous dad, Howie Morenz Jr., thrilled junior hockey fans in Montreal last Saturday as he scored four "Morenz-fashioned" goals in similar style to that of his father who a number of years ago dazzled National Hockey League followers with his terrific speed and goal-getting ability.

Morenz, an 18-year-old forward, has sparked his Canadiens team in the Montreal Junior Hockey League, to many wins this season and he places well up in the league's scoring column.

The junior league is enjoying one of its best years owing to the support given it by Frank Selke, general manager of the Montreal Forum.

Perched atop the ladder, Frank Curry's Canadiens lead the eight-team league by a wide margin of six points while Lachine follow in the runner-up position with 16 credits.

The Quebec Senior Hockey League saw the weatherman steal the spotlight over the weekend as two scheduled games were halted. The high-flying Ottawa Senators and Quebec Aces were forced to call off a home-and-home series when the Aces were snowbound 18 miles west of Montreal enroute to the capital.

Ottawa leads the league standings with 25 points, four ahead of Montreal Royals in second place. With a game in hand over Royals, Quebec is in the third spot with 20 points.

Montreal Royals often dubbed "the pride and joy" of the Quebec senior hockey league suffered a royal upset Sunday when the cellar - dwelling Valleyfield Braves romped over them to the tune of 5-2.

Sherbrooke Randies consolidated their grip on the provincial senior hockey league leadership when they scored a double victory over the weekend, collecting a total of 17 goals in the two games. They lead Victoriaville Tigers by a seven-point margin for a total of 30 points. Fred Gardner of the third place Cornwall Cougars leads the scoring parade with 46 points.

HAMILTON TIGERS WIN FOURTEENTH

(By The Canadian Press)

Hamilton's veteran Tigers proved conclusively last night that the 13 jinx is for the younger and more credulous. With 13 men in their lineup, they plunked home three last-period goals to defeat Toronto Staffords 4-2 and win their 14th straight O.H.A. game of the season without defeat.

Undaunted by a 3-2 defeat at the hands of Ottawa Senators of the Quebec Senior League in an exhibition game last Friday, the veteran eastern Canada champions held the second-place Staffords on even terms for 2 1-2 periods before Dillon Brady and Johnny Conick finished them off. They made it more authentic by scoring the final goal while the Toronto club held a one-man advantage.

Bert Peer carried the mail for the Tabbies in the early going, scoring their first two goals. Gord Ball and Frank Imonti were the Stafford goal-getters.

Meanwhile in Hamilton Galt Red Wings moved into a third-place tie with Toronto Marlboros in the Junior A division by trouncing Hamilton Szabos 9-2. The Wings pulled away by four goals in the opening period and had no trouble coasting home the rest of the way.

Just about everyone but the coach shared in Galt's scoring harvest. Trent Anderson and Fred Glover scored two while Mineault, Pavelich, Wiseman, Bert and Bruce Giesebrecht got singles. Cadieux and Bain counted for the Szabos.

What's Doing in Sport

(By The Canadian Press)

At Omaha, Abel Cestac, Jack Dempsey's heavyweight importation from the Argentine, last night scored a technical knockout over Clarence Brown of Detroit before 3,000 fans. Cestac weighed 220½ and Brown 205½.

It was announced yesterday by coach Honey Russell of the Boston Celtics of the Basketball Association of America that Mike (Red) Wallace had been traded to Toronto Huskies for Charlie Hoeffer.

Belleville O.H.A. Hockey Squads Will Play in Four-Team Leagues: District Divided into Three Groups

Meeting Held in Kingston Last Night Marked by Co-operation; Juniors Open Season Here Jan. 6th.

(By G. H. C.)

It might have been the fact that it was the season of peace on earth good will toward men. An air of general camaraderie pervaded the meeting and it smacked more of a service club's pre-Christmas party than of serious-minded hockey representatives in an effort to get things under way for the coming Ontario Hockey Association series.

There was an atmosphere of brotherly love surrounding representatives of district Intermediate and Junior hockey teams who met in the Chamber of Commerce building in Kingston last night. In fact, it was so congenial that if a Santa Claus had stepped out of the Police Department and distributed gifts no one would have been surprised.

As it was, the meeting called by Convener Lorne Cook was an unargumentative success and everyone came away satisfied. In fact in all the proposals suggested during the somewhat lengthy session, there was only one dissenting voice, that of Maxie Jackson, Kingston, to the proposal to divide the Junior "B" and Junior "C" squads into two separate groups. But the spirit of the thing finally got Maxie and after a mild dissertation to the effect that the seven-team loop would bring in more much-needed dinero to everyone's coffers, he graciously conceded the point, and once more fell into the spirit of the thing.

Four Team Loops

The outcome of the meeting, in a nutshell, is that the Intermediate "A" Group will consist of four teams, Kingston Lions, Queen's University seconds; Belleville and Trenton. The Junior "B" loop will comprise Kingston Saints, Kingston Victorias, Belleville and Trenton.

The newly formed Junior "C" loop will see Gananoque, Napanee and Portsmouth vie for playdown honors.

The dean of Ontario hockey, Jim Sutherland was in the chair with Convener Lorne Cook as his second in command. There was some preliminary discussion regarding a seven-team junior loop when entries from Belleville, Trenton, two Kingston teams, all "B" and Gananoque, Portsmouth and Napanee, all "C" squads, were submitted.

It was pointed out that the 7-team loop would involve a lot of unnecessary travel while another delegate inserted the suggestion that the play-off situation if four "B" and three "C" teams engaged in the loop, would be somewhat complicated. It was decided however to operate two junior loops as has been mentioned before.

Schedules Arranged

Drawing of schedules took up the most of the time with all teams' demands being equally met. The Kingston delegations in addition to Convener Cook paid particular attention to the requests of the Belleville and Trenton teams with regard to definite playing nights and the result was a schedule that is, it is hoped, satisfactory to all. The same applied to the junior schedules.

The Belleville team's home games will be played on Mondays and Fridays with the juniors operating on Monday nights. The schedule is a single one due to the fact that loop winners must be declared by March 1st.

The Belleville Intermediates meet the Queen's University seconds in the opening game of the league here on January 17 which will give the local puckists plenty of time to get into shape. The juniors, however, will pry the lid off the local hockey pot here on January 6 when they meet Trenton in the curtain-raiser.

Schedules of both loops are published elsewhere on this page.

"Toots" Holway and "Speedy" St. Louis were named as referees from the Belleville Hockey Association.

Montreal, Dec 31—(CP)—Montreal Canadiens may be having trouble catching Toronto Maple Leafs in the National Hockey League, but their namesakes in the city's junior circuit are staging a runaway race in their bid for a second consecutive provincial championship.

The young Habitants have lost only one of 12 games played this season and have piled up the imposing scoring record of 84 goals against 28 scored by the opposition. That's an average of seven goals a game, and is any league that's high scoring.

It's not surprising that Canadiens, six points ahead of second place Lachine, dominate the scoring race. Gilles Dube, flashy centre from Drummondville, Que., Howie Morenz and Jacques Laplante share the first three positions in that order.

Fred Denny and Bobby Fryday, the latter a sensational young Toronto winger playing his first season here, also are high in the scoring race which has five Canadians among the top six marksmen.

Morenz, who looks more like his famous father every season, is the league's leading goal-getter with 19 and he has assisted on another dozen goals. With 31 scoring points he trails Dube by one.

Young Howie scored four goals Saturday and assisted on another when the Habitants trounced Verdun Cyclones 10-1. Three of Morenz' goals came in succession in the third period.

Big Bill Durnan will enter the new year with a wide lead over the other National Hockey League goal-tenders in the Vezina Trophy race. With the season almost at the half-way mark, Durnan has been beaten 58 times, seven fewer than Turk Broda of Toronto who has played one game more.

If Durnan wins the trophy, for the netman with the least number of goals scored against him, it will be the fourth year in succession for the Canadiens' smoothie — a record unequalled in N.H.L. history.

Bill probably would like to set that mark, not only for the record books but also for the $1,000 the league has promised will go this season to its trophy winners.

New York, Dec. 31. (CP)—The old-fashioned punch bowl still leads the popularity parade but come tomorrow, 18 assorted "Bowls" throughout United States territory will draw more than their quota of samplers.

Bowl football games, started as Chamber of Commerce promotion stunts, have become both Big Business and post-season classics . . . Still at the head of the list is the granddaddy of them all, the Rose Bowl game in Pasadena, Calif., where 90,000 will shoe-horn in to see Illinois take on U.C.L.A. . . . U.C.L.A. is a slight favorite. . . Next in line is the Sugar Bowl in New Orleans, featured this year by a Georgia-North Carolina tilt. . . Two Charlies—Trippi and Justice—will be the individual stars. . . Trippi is the brilliant All-American from Georgia while Justice is the big gun of the Carolinians.

Sampling The Punch

Here is a run-down of the other 16 big Bowl games: Orange at Miami, Fla.; Cotton at Dallas, Tex.; Oil at Houston, Tex.; Sun at El Paso, Tex.; Cigar at Tampa, Fla.; Alamo at San Antonio, Tex.; 'Gater at Jacksonville, Fla.; Raisin at Fresno, Calif.; Gangerine at Orlando, Fla.; Will Rogers at Oklahoma City; Harbor at San Diego, Calif.; Vulcan at Birmingham, Ala.; Flower at Jacksonville, Fla.; Cattle at Houston, Tex.; Pineapple at Honolulu; Cotton-Tobacco at Greensboro, N.C. . . Florida and Texas have the most Bowl games—five each—with California next with three . . . Jacksonville, Fla., has two Bowl games, the 'Gater and Flower. . . The Rose Bowl is much the biggest and will draw about $450,000 . . . The Sugar Bowl will see 73,000 in the stands for a gate of $250,000 . . . Four more Bowl games will draw $100,000 or more. . . The smallest attendance is expected to be 4,000 at the Cattle Bowl paying in only $7,500. . .

East is East

One of the biggest New Year's Day contests is not listed as a Bowl Game. . . It's the $170,000 annual shrine game in San Francisco between All-Star East and West College teams. . . 62,000 persons are expected to attend to see Western Aces from U.S.C., Washington, Tulsa and Nevada and Eastern Stars from Pennsylvania, Penn State and Indiana.

Ice Cubes With Mine

Professional Hockey also takes advantage of the New Year's holiday spirit. . . In the National League, Detroit Red Wings play New York Rangers at Madison Square Garden tonight. . . Three games are scheduled for tomorrow night —Montreal at Chicago, Detroit at Toronto and New York at Boston. . . The American League Hashwo New Year's Eve games—Buffalo at Indianapolis and Hershey at Pittsburgh and four contests the following night. . . The U.S.H.L. doesn't feature any games tonight, but has a pair in Dallas, Tex., and Kansas City, Jan. 1. . . .

Forum Withdraws Injunction Against Buffalo Hockey C.

Ottawa, Dec. 31(CP)—Tommy Gorman, manager of the Ottawa Forum Company announced through his counsel Monday that he will withdraw an injunction against the Buffalo Bisons Hockey Club of the American Hockey League, the Houston Texas Clippers, and Hockey Scout Happy Emms.

The injunction against the two clubs and Emms was filed here almost immediately after Les Hickey and Jimmy McFadden, both members of the Ottawa Senators, operated by the Forum Company, left for Buffalo. The two players have been detained by United States Immigration authorities at Fort Erie, Ont., since their arrival here.

The company charged Emms with raiding and enticing the two Ottawa players to break their contracts. The players left without notice to the company and were believed slated for berths either with the Bisons in the American League or with the Clippers, the Bisons' farm team in Texas.

In announcing the withdrawal of the injunction, Mr. Gorman, through his counsel, Redmond Quain, said:

"An arrangement has been made whereby, as a result of satisfactory assurances given the Ottawa forum as well as the Senator Hockey Club, the Forum will withdraw its action and injunction proceedings against the Buffalo and Houston Clubs, and against Howard (Hap) Emms.

"New arrangements are being made which will affect the matters which were under dispute. These arrangements are considered to be of great advantage to all amateur clubs."

Mr. Gorman did not disclose what the new arrangements were, but the injunction case was known to have been under discussion at a closed meeting in Toronto yesterday between the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association, the National Hockey League and the International Ice Hockey Association.

Provisions of the agreement permitted the N.H.L. Clubs to sign amateur players until Jan. 15. Representatives of amateur clubs have charged that these provisions have permitted professional teams to raid amateur clubs.

Suggestions were advanced at the C.A.H.A. meeting that the deadline for signing amateur players be advanced to at least December 1.

CAR RIPS OFF TROUSERS

Niagara Falls, Dec. 30 (CP) — A. H. Parker of Toronto lost only his dignity when he was struck by a car on the Queen Elizabeth Highway yesterday while bending over his own auto. Police said a car driven by Robert Simgeour, also of Toronto, brushed past Mr. Parker—ripping his trousers of his legs.

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

As soon as she learns to shuffle the cards, she starts teaching bridge to all of her pards. And all through the game, our talkative Tess can say more and more about less and less.

You hear all kinds of conflicting rumors about the meanings of bids. Many of them are opinions of experts who soon change their minds. As a result, their followers are likely to tell you anything.

There are only two kinds of opening one bids; one in a suit and one no-trump. The one no-trump denies a biddable suit. So, if you have a biddable suit, your opening should be in suit and not no-trump.

Responder either takes out to his own suit, or assists partner's suit, or bids no-trump. Only one of these three. And he either jumps or he does not jump. Only one of these two. Simple as that.

So, look at this pair of partnership hands:

SOUTH	NORTH
♠Q 9 8	♠A K J 2
♥K 4 3	♥A 2
♦A K Q 3	♦10 7
♣K J 2	♣A Q 10 9 3

South opens with one diamond. He has the stuff for it. He has six tricks and needs only five. He has six high cards and needs no more than four. He has the two sure tricks he needs.

What should north respond? With two biddable suits, he should takeout to one of them. With unequal length suits, he should first mention the longer. His first reply is in clubs.

With six tricks including two sure, responder should one-jump at once. The first north response is thus three clubs. He has made his choice from the two requirements. What could be sweeter?

Such a one-jump response is a game-going signal. It admits help enough to make a game. It stands to reason, therefore, that this is a demand for the bidding to continue to a game.

The logic of this must be apparent. Opener shows five tricks. The jump response shows six. With 11 tricks, a pair should try for a game. Do not be talked out of it.

The Movie Column

By IRIS WILSON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Southern California Productions, an independent company, has started filming "Women in the Night," on location in Ensenda, Mexico. The picture, described as a composite story of all the women who suffered indignities at the hand of the Japanese and Germans during the war, stars Tala Birell, Bill Henry, and Virginia Christine.

Also to be made in Mexico, in technicolor, is the R.K.O. picture, "Tycoon," directed by Richard Wallace with a cast headed by John Wayne, Sir Cedric Hardwick and Anthony Quinn.

Growing Up:

After playing Bette Davis' little girl in "The Three Foxes," Greer Garson's daughter-in-law in "Mrs. Miniver" and currently the daughter of Frederic March and Myrna Loy in "The Best Years of Our Lives," Teresa Wright has decided it's about time she grew up on the screen.

Consequently, she will play a mother role in her next picture, "The Bishop's Wife," Samuel Goldwyn's forthcoming production.

Filmfare:

Canadian-born Alexis Smith, who recently suffered an ankle injury, will return to the cast of her current film, "The Women in White," after a 10-day absence . . .

Britain's Phyllis Calvert is co-starring with Bob Hutton in a film version of Rachel Fields' "Time Out of Mind." Director Robert Siodmak predicts a great future for Miss Calvert—"She's a British Ingrid Bergman," says he . . .

"Corkscrew Alley," a screen melodrama by Harold B. Armstrong and Audrey Ashley, has been purchased by Eagle-Lion, J. Arthur Rank's American affiliate, and will star Richard Basegart. Humphrey Bogart was planning to produce the star in it himself but because of legal technicalities was unable to do so.

The picture is a suspense drama about the efforts of a chain gang convict to escape his pursuers. Basegart now is playing in "Repeat Performance" and is scheduled to star in Eagle-Lion's "Kenny," from the Louis Bromfield novel. Appearing with him also are Louis Hayward as well as Toronto and Montreal-educated Joan Leslie.

Japs Unearthed Radio-Active Deposit Before War's End

Tokyo, Dec. 31 (AP)—Japanese before the end of the war unearthed in Manchuria a deposit of radioactive minerals—possibly uranium, possibly not — Allied headquarters sources said today.

Headquarters officers said they were investigating the method by which the Japanese discovered the minerals and the extent to which they developed the ores.

Interest In Living Theatre On Upgrade

Halifax, Dec. 31 (CP)—With accolades for Shakespeare and expressing confidence in his forthcoming Canadian tour, Donald Wilfit, famed British Shakespearian actor, sat beside his leading lady, Rosalind Iden, in his cabin aboard the Aquitania last night and spoke of the stage and its people.

"I'm quite confident about our tour," he said "I have roots in Canada you know My mother was born in Windsor, Ont., and my grandfather was one-time editor of the Calgary Herald, which once referred to be as a hope-chest of treasures. I've always cherished that."

"Public taste in the theatre is on the upgrade and interest in the living theatre is 100 per cent more than it ever was before.

"I think that was evident by the way in which our Shakespearian plays were accepted by the troops. I remember one instance particularly well when we played to 1,400 men on a troopship in the Mediterranean on the way to Cairo. Some of the men were even bidding for the last few remaining seats."

Mr. Wolfit and his company of 30, the same company which recently completed its annual tour of the British provincial cities, are scheduled to open their Canadian tour at Ottawa next Monday with "Hamlet" The Governor General will see them perform "The Merchant of Venice" the following evening.

Mr. Wolfit who is 44 and has been to this continent only once before—when he played in "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" in New York in 1931—said Shakespeare was the best entertainment in the theatre—"he wrote for speed."

From Ottawa the company will go to Monrteal for a 10-day stand where they will present "King Lear," "As You Like It," "The Merchant of Venice," "Hamlet" and Ben Johnson's "Volpone." Mr. Wolfit has played "Volpone" oftener than any other English actor—more than 100 times.

The Shakespearian company will play two weeks in Toronto after the Montreal engagement, at London, Hamilton and Brantford, Ont., and return for another week in Toronto.

Chicago, Dec. 31 — (AP)—The United States traffic death toll in 1946, the National Safety Council estimated today, will be approximately 34,000 as compared to the 28,600 killed in motor accidents in 1945 when wartime restrictions limited travel.

CHAPTER 34

"Aunt Natalie? Darling, Mother and I have been trying for hours to get you,—oh, it is, it's terrible. There's no service at all these days. I was so sorry not to come to you last night, but at the last minute Mother and Dad got homesick and wanted me to stay here. She left you all sorts of messages . No, she's gone; about five minutes ago. She said that if she didn't get you I was to give you her love and she'd write from Washington."

When she hung up the receiver it was to find Jennifer regarding her in surprise.

"Isn't that the aunt you stayed with last night?" she asked innocently.

"No, that's the aunt they thought I stayed with last night," Gloria answered nonchalantly. "Now listen, Jennifer," she added, "you are my companion, not my chaperon!"

Jennifer laughed good-humoredly.

"I know it. But where did you stay?"

"I stayed with a friend of mine who has a studio on Union," Gloria admitted; "she had some people in for dinner—three Navy men and a couple of others. I fixed Mother and Dad by telephoning them at eight to report and give them messages from Aunt Nat. I said, 'Do you want to speak to Aunt Nat?' and Mother said no, that she was dummy and they were just finishing the hand, just to say love and good-by."

"Suppose," Jennifer asked, fascinated, "she had said yes, she would like to speak to your aunt?"

"I'd have said, 'One minute, Mother, someone just came in to see her, but she said she'd be back in five minutes,' and Mother would have said, 'Let it go, dear, it's not important.'"

"But suppose," Jennifer persisted, "your aunt had happened to telephone your mother last evening?"

Gloria was stretched at length on the ruffled taffeta of the chaise lounge, her arms locked behind her head, her eyes closed.

"Oh, I took care of that," she said serenely. "I telephoned Aunt Nat that I couldn't come last night because Mother and Dad were taking me to dinner somewhere."

"You will get caught with the goods someday," Jennifer said warningly.

"I know it. In fact I do sometimes," Gloria agreed. "Meanwhile I take chances."

"And what did you do last night?"

"We had a horrible dull time if you want to know! Adele is an awful cook and everything went wrong. Everybody drank too much."

"You don't know how to cook, I suppose?"

A scornful glance from the brown eyes. It pleased Gloria at the moment to assume a contempt for the art.

"Naturally not," she said emphatically. Jennifer, comfortable in a deep chair, picked up a near-by magazine.

Presently Gloria burst forth with a wealth of personalities, about herself chiefly but also concerning those closest to her: her father, mother, relatives, friends. Her brother appeared to be her especial idol, although she admitted that they quarreled incessantly; that he was an "absolute Foster" and that her mother had been a member of this apparently distinguished family she stressed throughout.

Thus began a strange dreamlike life for Jennifer; the days began to go by in a daze of physical comfort and mental apathy. She had asked Gloria's father on the night of her arrival to send Mary Flood a telegram, not revealing her whereabouts but saying that she was safe. She made it important that the telegram should go from San Francisco and bear no identifying hint. After that she had tried to close her thoughts to the past and be grateful only that she had been able to escape it.

With Gloria she went to movies and beauty parlors, played endless games of gin rummy, talked by the hour. Gloria went to the school gym after hours three times a week for extra work; Jennifer accompanied her. Except for the fact that Gloria made no physical effort, demanding Turvey and the big car for distances, Jennifer would gladly have walked. There were splendid hills back of the handsome residences that surrounded the Crittendon house, but Gloria never suggested climbing them. Very few things interested or amused her, and she did those few things over and over: movies, beauty treatments, lunch at the club, gin rummy.

One day after dropping Gloria in town for a smart bridge luncheon Jennifer went on with Turvey and the car to the little house in San Jose Avenue. She dreaded the first encounter with Mary or Mary's mother or indeed with any of the old friends, but this experience was strangely soothing and she could return to Davenbury with a light heart.

Old Mrs. Flood was at home alone, was rejoiced almost to tears to see Jennifer, and took her to her flat, withered old bosom with a real motherly embrace. Wherever had she been and whatever had she been doing and whatever had "possest" her to give them all such a turn?

Jennifer explained exactly how safe and how comfortable she was, asked what had happened on the fateful Sunday that was to have been her wedding day.

"The minute Mary got your notice on the kitchen table," the old woman said, "she phoned Mollie an' they got in touch wit' Jim. I don't know what Mollie told him, but he come over here very quiet about noon; he said he'd been walking out on the beach an' he had a talk with Mary. Then your telegram came and we knew we'd not see you and Jim went away. We saw him once or twice before he sailed. He looked bad."

He had been walking alone on the beach hour after hour. He had "looked bad." Her heart contracted on a spasm of pain. Jim alone and hurt. Jim who was all ready to drive away into the quiet, overcast spring day with his wife beside him....

Now on his way to the Southern Seas, still hurt, still alone. Well, but it was better so—it was the only way it could be! Jennifer tried to harden her spirit to bear it; it must be borne. She left with Mary's mother a penitent and apologetic message. Mary must forgive her; Mollie and all the Evans group must forgive her.

"Oh well, you're not the only ger"rl that got scared at the last minute," the old woman said consolingly. "Mary'd never look at any man!"

Jennifer, packing her clothes, stopped in another sharp stab of pain.

"He's in the service— they'll keep him busy.." she said somewhat thickly.

"He'll come home and you'll jump into his ar'rms," predicted old Mrs. Flood. Jennifer laughed, but with tears in her eyes; she kissed her old hostess when she went away. "You're very grand wit' your car and driver,'" said Mrs. Flood.

"Oh, I'm very grand!" Jennifer agreed ruefully. "And you'll tell Mary?" she asked. "As soon as Miss Waskell comes back for her job I'll be home again and be looking for my own job. And the harder it is," she ended grimly, "the tougher and greasier and more monotonous it is, the better I'll like it! Perhaps Mollie and the others won't be speaking to me...."

"They'll speak to you," the old woman assured her briefly. "They think the wor"rld and all of you, don't worry your head about that."

Jennifer went away somewhat comforted. The worst was over. Now it was only for her to await Emily French's return, and then settle down to hard war work somewhere and to the steady ache that was missing Jim.

The day before the ten days' stay with Gloria expired Jennifer escaped from too constant companionship of her charge, leaving Gloria playing a furious game of bridge with three other girls in the drawing room at two cents a point, smoking steadily and sipping a drink of which her mother would strenuously have denied she knew even the taste. It was not for Jennifer to try to prevent the heiress of the Crittendons from assuaging her thirst with highballs; Miss Summers had flutteringly assured Jennifer that Gloria was one of the sweetest children she had ever known, just a baby at heart, and Gloria's mother before departing had said casually, "About her gambling—well, we don't mind quarter-of-a-cent stakes. We don't mind two cigarettes a day; she promises not to smoke more. As for drink, the other girls may but she never touches it."

If both these older guardians felt so sure of Gloria, Jennifer was not the one to disillusion them. She left Gloria to go her own way and slipped quietly from the house, going out through the rear premises of garage and cutting garden, and taking an old dirt road that led from the lane behind the house up toward the hills.

It was a delicious day, already spring. Jennifer, as she climbed the hill under the eucalyptus trees saw the first white bursts of fruit blossoms scattered here and there on the slopes below her; the earth was still soaked and dark, but puddles in the wheel tracks reflected the clear blue of the sky and the air was rich with scents —rich smells of grass and damp, packed leaves. There were wild flag lilies in the woods, pale blue and cream, and the faint smoke blue of the lilac was blown across the hills like incense.

At the top of the rise she paused, panting, her temples wet, her cheeks glowing. The ground here was carpeted with eucalyptus sickles; their aromatic breath was almost stupefying, and the new tasseled blossoms were beginning to show their creamy hearts. For sheer delight in the beauty of the day Jennifer hung on an old spur of three-barred fence for long moments looking down at the scene below, on the other side of the hill, giving vent to an occasional "Oh—oh—oh!"

The ground here dipped between the hills into a little valley filled with beautiful homes and spacious gardens. Great oaks shadowed the smooth stretches of green lawn and the well-tended flower beds. Spanish houses with red-tiled roofs and patios were the most popular, but there were one or two older houses built in prim colonial style with green blinds and trim dormers, and a few of most recent date—the new California farm house type—sprawling, informal, deep-porched, and with great chimneys of cream brick.

"Lots of people," Jennifer said aloud, "live in nice places."

An old man walking slowly with the aid of a stick appeared at the turn of the road a few yards away, and Jennifer accosted him in her usual friendly manner.

"Is this part of Davenbury?"

"No, madam," he answered courteously. "Davenbury is over the hill, about a mile away. This...." He indicated with a wave of his free hand the homes whose luxury she had been studying. "This is Giddings Manor," he said.

"Oh?..Oh, how strange!" Jennifer exclaimed. "Old Mrs. Giddings is a friend of mine; at least I know her," she exclaimed. "Does she live in one of these houses?"

"Oh no. She lives in the old Giddings place itself. I am her brother-in-law and live with her," the old man said with some little dignity. "We live up toward the left here; the gates are a hundred yards—roughly, I should say, about that—up that road; then it's another hundred yards—about that far, I should say —again to the house."

"And you're.." She had heard the finer saleswomen at Vogelsang's establish identity with these two winning words.

"Colonel Archibald March," he said.

"Colonel March. Do you know if Mrs. Giddings is at home?"

"She is at home now; I have just been talking with her."

"Oh, then I'll—then I think I'll just...." Jennifer was talking to herself, for the old man, with a sort of farewell gesture, had walked on. Jennifer took the left-hand road, saying aloud to herself, "She told me to do it and I'm going to do it!" and so walked into her strangest hour of adventure.

The indicated direction went upward and grew less and less a highway and more and more a country road, unpaved and rutted, with vegetation crowding it on both sides. It ended at two great gates with a footpath on one side and a narrower small gate matching them. The gates were wide open and the new grass that had sprung up in the driveway was crushed flat as if wheels had more than once run over it, but the whole place had a look of magnificent decay.

"Hello, blions," Jennifer greeted the two great stone lions at the gate. "It seems to me I used to call lions like that 'blions,'" she said aloud. "It seems to me—it seems to me this is like Alice—'curiouser and curiouser.'"

She walked up the drive under splendid great oaks with long-forgotten garden plants and flowers on each side. Pampas jungles, bamboo thickets, rose vines that had mounted high into the pepper and poplar trees, shrubs as high as her head, all fought for space. Here were bare lilac whips with tiny nubs of blossoms furled at their tips; here were lemon verbena, mock orange, snowballs, bridal-wreath all ready to burst into bloom. This would be a riot of color and sweetness in a very few weeks.

MEXICAN BUDGET

Mexico City, Dec. 31 — (AP)— The House of Deputies has approved a national budget for 1947 totalling $320,000,000, or $53,000,000 more than the budget for 1946. It is the highest in the history of the country.

Toronto Stock Brokers Inclined To View the Future Optimistically

By ALEX PRINGLE
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Toronto, Dec. 31 (CP)— Stock brokers did a better than average business in 1946 and there appears to be a disposition among them to see the immediate future through rose-colored glasses. They contributed heavier than at any time in the last 10 years to the Christmas stockings of employees.

The country has been slowly settling down to a normal industrial tempo and, in some cases, the stimulants of a war economy and the appraisal of equity values from the peacetime view-point has pushed some groups of stocks ahead while others continue marking time.

Price advances for newsprint put the paper stocks in a leading role and the liquor stocks, due chiefly to the dominant position which the big Canadian firms are building for themselves in the United States under subsidiary organizations, had a year of wide gains. The textiles and foods also made substantial progress. The shock of a more than usual run of labor strikes held the steel and allied stocks in check for a while.

Mining companies have had more than their share of worries in the last year and the stocks of that category had but an indifferent following for the last 10 months. On top of the scarcity of suitable labor at the mines came rising costs of operations and in early July, when the Canadian dollar returned to parity with the U.S. dollar, $3.50 an ounce was clipped off the revenue for gold bullion sales. This monetary adjustment has put a number of mines, already struggling in low-grade ore, on a shaky footing and undoubtedly there will be some elimination from the list of producers. The ore reserves of many others have been much reduced by the same reason.

A few of the gold and base metal prospects of more than usual promise however came to the front in the fall and early winter months.

Base Metals Strong

Base metal stocks provided one of the year's highlights, led by the new properties that are coming to the front in the Quebec townships. The announcement that one of the big United States concerns, Anaconda Copper Mining Company, was taking a financial and management interest in East Sullivan brightened the picture notably and the steady progress of Quemont toward something big in the metal field sparked the market at times into smart trading action.

The base metal stocks reached their top price level of the year Feb. 5 with an index standing of 108.20 which compared with a low of 76.18, set in September. The February top was a record high since the base metal stocks were given a separate index computation in 1938.

The gold group registered a high for the year on Feb. 6 with an index high of 147.31 and low on Sept. 19 at 91.36. In the final three months of the year the price the index standing climbed back to around 105.00 as the year end approached.

High for the year in the industrial share price level came in June at 207.83 which compared with a low of 167.06 recorded on Nov. 22. There was recovery to around 180.00 in December.

The Toronto Stock Exchange handled a turnover of 370,000,000 shares, (December estimated) in 1946 compared with 441,764,394 in 1945 and 172,234,102 in 1944. The value of the stocks traded set an all-time peak in 1946 at $751,700,000 (December estimated) compared with value of $617,817,836 in 1945. The quoted market value of all stocks listed set a record in May last at more than eight billion dollars.

Seats on the Toronto Exchange are holding around top for the last 10 years, the consideration in the most recent transaction having been $65,000. This compares with a low of about $12,000 in the depression period.

1946 Saw End of Long Boom Market

By R. J. ANDERSON
Canadian Press Staff Writer

New York, Dec. 31 (CP) — Prices slumped on the New York Stock Exchange in the latter half of 1946. The bull market was over.

The end after 4 1-2 years of rising values did not come suddenly. Rather, it was a creaking slow-down, punctuated by spectacular day-to-day setbacks that served as warnings that the American economy, which had survived widespread strikes and post-war reconversion troubles, was showing signs of strain. In the final analysis, it spelled 'sell' to many holders of stocks.

The turn came in mid-year after six months of booming markets that set a string of 15-year highs, when the Associated Press composite average of 60 leading stocks touched $182.40 in May, the highest market since March 26, 1931. By Dec. 9, the average was $66.20—and on that day the average had advanced 1.9 points, the widest climb since Oct. 31.

Many professional market operators, as well as the general public, dumped accounts, brokers said. One reason advanced was a growing resistance on the part of consumers to mounting prices of automobiles, refrigerators, food—almost everything required for day-today living. Aiding the slump, too, was the cumulative effect of industrial strikes earlier in the year. Whatever the cause, the market by Oct. 9 showed a loss of $23,000,000,000 since the wartime peak in the quoted values of its stocks.

Traders' Difficulties

Two oddities developed in Wall Street in response to domestic developments—brokers said international news generally had little effect on the market during the year—that emphasized the difficulties besetting market operators in post-war 1946. These were:

1. Despite the Republican victory in the congressional elections news that Wall Street normally would have viewed as bullish, the market continued its slump after Nov. 5. An answer was: Wall Street had anticipated the G. O. P. sweep in advance.

2. Prices went up during the 17 days of the November-December coal strike when for a time it appeared as though the American economy would receive a blow from which it would never recover. Large investors were not frightened into disposing of or lightening their holdings.

Underlying this apparent optimism in the face of the crippling strike, according to one interpretation, was a belief that labor developments, plus a favorably-inclined majority in Congress, would result in legislation that would trim labor's powers. The ultimate result of such a change, it was indicated, would be a curb on rising wage demands and the possibility that forecasts of "profitless prosperity"—profitless in part because of increasing wages—would not materialize.

Western Wheat Growers Guaranted Four-Year Program of Stability

By ENID NEMY
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Winnipeg, Dec. 31 (CP)— Although world wheat prices soared to the highest levels in years Canadian grain growers this year traded in their chance at sudden financial prosperity for a four-year program of stability and aid to their mother country.

Announcement of the United Kingdom-Canadian wheat agreement was made by Trade Minister MacKinnon in July. The agreement provided for sale of 600,000,000 bushels of wheat to the United Kingdom at well below world prices, but in return gave Canadian farmers a guaranteed market and assurance of at least stated minimum prices.

During the current crop year, the United Kingdom will take a minimum of 160,000,000 bushels of wheat at $1.55 a bushel No. 1 northern, Fort William, Port Arthur, Vancouver or Churchill. For the crop year 1947-48 another 160,000,000 bushels minimum will be taken at the same price. Provision has been made for 140,000,000 bushels to be shipped annually the succeeding two years at $1.25 and $1.00 a bushel respectively. Prices for the last three years of the agreement are subject to upward revision. At least 1,500,000 bushels of the 600,000,000 will be flour.

The highest quotation since Dec. 6, 1920—$2.05—for No. 1 Northern Manitoba wheat to domestic millers for sale to countries other than the United Kingdom, was announced by the Canadian Wheat Board.

Welcomed by West

Removal of the pegged price of $1.55 a bushel for Canada's export wheat sales, except to Britain, to bring prices to those "roughly corresponding" with those in the United States was welcome news in the west. The United States price for export wheat sales now is over the $2 mark.

An increase of 10 cents to $1.35 a bushel in the initial price to producers of Canadian wheat, retroactive to Aug. 1, 1945, and to continue in effect until July 31, 1950, was also announced, bringinng approximately $24,000,000 to western farmers.

The wheat crop itself came through with flying colors. An estimated 420,000,000 bushels was harvested compared with 306,000,000 last year and a 10-year average of 370,000,000. Value of the crop was approximately $477,000,000 or $125,000,000 above 1945. Prairie farmers received $452,800,000 for their wheat as compared with $326,700,000 the previous year.

Approximately 340,000,000 bushels of wheat were exported for the crop year ended July 31, 1946 and since the beginning of the current crop year on Aug. 1 more than 55,000,000 bushels of wheat and 27,000,000 bushels of wheat in the form of flour have been exported. This compared with 160,000,000 bushels of wheat and flour in the same period last year. Carry over from last year's wheat crop was 70,000,000 bushels.

Acreage Increased

Western wheat acreage of 25,200,000 this year increased 6.3 per cent over 1945, practically all from summer fallow. Oats acreage was slightly smaller while acreage to barley, flax and rye recorded increases. The Dominion-provincial conference on agriculture held in Ottawa recently recommended that total wheat acreage next year be cut to 24,000,000.

Visible stocks of Canadian wheat in store in December totalled 158,400,000 bushels compared with 197,400,000 bushels at the same time last year. Coarse grain stocks were: oats 35,800,000 bushels; barley 22,300,000 bushels; rye 3,100,000 bushels and flax 3,900,000 bushels.

Total deliveries for the current crop season amounted to 227,000,000 compared with approximately 160,000,000 bushels for the same period a year ago. Seaboard and lakehead wheat stocks were low with 8,400,000 bushels at the Pacific coast; 2,700,000 bushels at the Atlantic coast and 7,200,000 bushels at the lakehead.

Trading in wheat futures on the Winnipeg grain exchange remained suspended and it appeared a certainty it would remain suspended for at least the length of the Anglo-Canadian agreement.

Oats and barley sold at ceiling prices of 51 1-2 and 64 3-4 cents respectively with additional advance equalization payments of 10 cents on oats and 15 cents on Barley. Rye put on a record-breaking display in the open market. The July future soared over the $3 mark on June 17.

Better prices were posted in industrials for the liquor, food and steel stocks and other groups were steady. The Canadian Industrial Alcohol issues ruled higher, the B issue adding a point and Distillers-Seagram firmed ½. Point gains appeared for Canadian Celanese, Western Grocers Pfd., Western Steel and English Electric A. Boxing in Prov. of Ontario

Officials Claim Boxers Will Not be Able to Compete in Olympic Games and Go on Allen's Shows

By WILF GRUSON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Dec. 31 — (CP) — The Central Ontario branch of the Amateur Athletic Union of Canada, guided by a youthful executive intent on seeing the body play a prominent part in amateur sport in the province once again, today is in the midst of a campaign to put amateur boxing in Ontario back on a strictly simon-pure basis.

Dormant during the war like its parent body, the branch has re-organized with an entirely new executive under Fred Rowell as president and Bob Somers as secretary and intends "to clean up" amateur boxing in Ontario and especially in Toronto while exploring the possibility of amalgamation with two of the three other Ontario A.A.U. of C. branches.

At a meeting last night arranged to discuss the future of amateur boxing and wrestling in the province and to give Toronto sportsmen an opportunity to meet Lt.-Col. George C. Machum, newly-elected Dominion president of the A. A. U. of C., it was stressed that amalgamation was necessary to give Ontario a powerful voice in the organization.

At present the province is divided into four branches — central, southwestern and eastern Ontario and Thunder Bay. Col. Machum urged that the central, southwestern and eastern Ontario branches join together while the Thunder Bay body, because of its distance from the remainder of the province, continue to act independently.

Don't Need Four Branches

"The division presents a weak link in your efforts," Col. Machum told his listeners. "The province is not that big that it needs four branches to conduct amateur sport in the proper manner."

The Ontario Athletic Commission and promoter Jack (Deacon) Allen of Toronto were criticized for the manner in which amateur boxing had been conducted here and throughout Ontario during the war and now.

Somers said the Commission, under secretary Fred Steel, has been issuing permits to Allen to promote amateur shows that really were semi-professional cards. Because of this Ontario amateur boxers are barred from competing in simon-pure cards in other provinces and in the United States.

"Allen has been suspended by the A. A. U. of C.," said Somers. "The fighters may be unaware of it but they lose their chance of making a place on the Canadian Olympic boxing team by appearing on any card promoted by him."

Somers added that early in the New Year he intends to see On-which has not been sanctioned by the A. A. U. of C.

Experts Agree That Attacking Game in Tennis Has Come Into Its Own

Sydney, Australia, Dec. 31. (AP)—Australian experts agreed today that this Dominion's Tennis players must change their tactics if they hope to win back the historic Davis Cup which a slugging American team wrested from them in Melbourne yesterday by a 5-0 score.

"Judged by the results of this year's contests, the attacking game has come into its own," declared Gerald Patterson, non-playing captain of the Australian Cup team. "Australia must change her Davis Cup tactics."

Patterson added that "the dash and fleetness of foot shown by the Americans were something our coming players could well emulate."

His sentiments were echoed by John Bromwich, ambidextrous court veteran whose failure to win a match in defence of the trophy came as a shock to Australian experts and fans alike.

Bromwich, writing in the Sydney Morning Herald, asserted that his defeat at the hands of Jack Kramer and Ted Schroeder had "demonstrated very clearly to me that Australian tennis players must learn the art of attack as well as defence."

The Melbourne Sun's tennis commentator wrote in the same vein, declaring:

"Australia's crushing defeat should convince those in control of Australian tennis that we must look for new Davis Cup talent or get our present players to adopt a more aggressive attitude. We were completely outplayed by a better team."

The veteran Bromwich, battered in the three matches in which he played while the Australians were being routed by the United States' clean sweep of the challenge round, paid tribute to his conqueror, Jack Kramer, by saying he considered Kramer the greatest amateur tennis player in the world.

Sixpenny Handley, Dorset, Dec. 30 —(CP Cable)— Shot as he exchanged goodnight kisses with a village beauty, Uriah Jones, 29, died in the arms of 23-year-old Beatrice Sheen.

The girl's parents were in the same room as the young couple when someone fired through a window in the Sheen home last night. Jones, recently demobilized from the Royal Air Force, fell dead. Beatrice collapsed beside him with slight facial wounds.

Police said a man had been detained for questioning.

Ted Kennedy of Leafs and Taylor of Detroit Tied for Second With 28

Montreal, Dec. 31 (CP) — National Hockey League goal snipers are finding it hard to keep pace with Maurice "The Rocket" Richard, who holds a seven point lead over the league's top point-makers.

League statistics released today show shifty Richard of the championship Montreal Canadiens also heads the goal-getters with 20 goals in 27 games for a total of 35 points. Ted Kennedy of Toronto with 16 tallies and 12 assists shares the runner-up position with Detroit's Billy Taylor who has nine goals and 19 assists for 28 points.

Milt Schmidt of Boston Bruins is third with 27 points made up of 12 goals and 15 assists. Fourth position is shared three ways with Chicago's Max Bentley and Detroit's Roy Conacher and Sid Abel with 24 points each. Conacher was tied last week with Milt Schmidt for second place.

Although they each dropped a game during the past week, Toronto Maple Leafs and Montreal Canadiens continue to set the pace in the battle for top honors. The Leafs possess a three-point advantage over the Habs with a total of 40 points. Toronto has won 18 games, tied four and lost six while Montreal, who have played one game less than Leafs, have won 17, tied three and lost seven. Boston holds the third spot with 26 points, three more than New York Rangers in fourth position. Detroit follow with 20 points and Chicago fills the cellar spot.

Lanky Bill Durnan, Montreal's goal custodian continues to lead in the neck and neck race for the Vezina trophy which is awarded to the league's less scored on goalie.

Durnan has allowed 58 goals in 27 games while contending rival Turk Broda of Leafs has been beaten 65 times in 28 contests. "Frigid" Frankie Brimsek of the Bruins moved out of the running for the present as 78 shots passed him in 27 games. Broda leads the shutout artists with three while Brimsek has turned in two goose eggs.

Windsor, Dec. 31 (CP)— Heart seizure Sunday was fatal to James Page, 78, who collapsed on the icy steps of a neighbor's house where he apparently he had gone for help.

His son-in-law, Cameron Hillman, said Mr. Page had been taken to a funeral home without first being officially pronounced dead by a coroner or a doctor authorized to act for the coroner.

Walter Ballantyne of the Windsor ambulance service said regulations prohibited him from removing the body to hospital without receiving orders from the coroner's office.

"The man had no pulse when I first examined him and I thought he was dead," said Ballantyne. "I telephoned police and when they arrived they had orders from the coroner that the man be taken to Anderson's Funeral Home.

"On accidental death or on all coroner cases, I have instructions to await the arrival of the coroner before moving the body. There are examinations that he must carry out first."

Dr. James Young, coroner, said "I could see no need to go to the scene just to corroborate the police report. If the police say a man is dead, it's absurd to go out just to verify their report."

Hillman said it was "strange he (Mr. Page) wasn't rushed to the hospital."

"I'm sure there was no negligence in this case but I've never heard tell of the police or anybody else ever moving a body without the coroner first examining it."

Mr. Page, a native of Brantford, came to Windsor 27 years ago. His survivors include a son James of Simcoe and a brother in Brantford.

Statement Issued.

Later yesterday Ed. W. Morris, an undertaker, said in a press statement that certain officials were showing favoritism in directing bodies to "certain funeral homes without consulting the relatives of the deceased."

"And it looks as though someone is not doing this for nothing," he said. Mr. Morris did not name the "officials." The "directing" applied only in deaths which came to a coroner's attention, he tunity to say who they wished to make burial arrangements.

"If there were a city morgue, this body snatching would end because all coroner cases would have to go to the morgue and bodies would be kept there until properly identified."

Never Heard of Order.

Dr. Young, coroner, said he had not heard of a rumored order from Attorney General Blackwell that bodies of persons killed acci-

"But there is no chief coroner now. There are four or five others here and I get called by my friends, as they do, and my responsibility ends there. Before I was appointed chief coroner there were others who went out looking for business, but I considered that below the dignity of my profession. I can say there isn't a coroner of that type today—they're all playing the game 100 percent."
